VOLUME XVII, PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

No action was taken upon the claim by the Quartermaster-General for the reason that it originated in Virginia, a State declared to be in insurrection during the rebellion.

Your letter and the memorial have been referred, as desired, to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, for information from his Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

The Quartermaster-General takes no action upon this claim upon no other than the cold, technical ground that the claimant was a resident of a State declared to be in rebellion.

The proof is clear and conclusive that Quartermaster Ludlow contracted for this hay, equally clear as to the contract price, amounting to $1,800, equally clear as to the loyalty to the United States of William Ward, who furnished the hay, and who was the husband and is the testator of the petitioner, and equally clear that the hay has never been paid for.

It does not clearly appear when William Ward died. It is certain that it was subsequent to 1867 and before 1878, when this petition was presented by P. L. Ward, widow and executrix. She states that neither her late husband nor herself were ever informed nor did they know of the establishment of what is called the Southern Claims Commission, nor the necessity of presenting this claim to that tribunal, until after the expiration of the time within which it could have been presented; nor did petitioner know of the status of the claim until a few months before the presentation of this petition.

The committee are satisfied that the vegetables and beef, amounting to $275.13, were delivered under contract to the United States Navy; and that 60 tons of hay were sold and delivered to Quartermaster Ludlow, at $30, amounting to $1,800, making an aggregate of $2,075.13; that the same were never paid for, and that the claimant was loyal to the United States, and that this sum is justly due to the claimant and should be paid; and therefore the committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNEST H. WARDWELL.

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ernest H. Wardwell, late a captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, the pay and allowances of a captain and assistant quartermaster from the 11th of March to the 18th of May, 1865; and also the three months' additional pay proper as first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Second Regiment North Carolina Union Volunteers (white), the same as allowed to all volunteer officers under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1865.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON from the Committee on Military Affairs March 10, 1886.

Mr. LOGAN. The report need not be read any further. I shall object to the bill for the reason that the Senator who made the report is not present. If he were present, I should give my reasons why the bill should not pass. He not being present, however, I will let the bill pass over until he returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. RANSOM. It goes over without prejudice?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, without prejudice.

JAMES B. EADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next business on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "Order of Business 332. Resolution that the letter of James B. Eads be referred to the Committee on Commerce."

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

Mr. LOGAN. A motion is pending to refer the resolution to the Committee on Commerce. I do not see why it should go over. Let the resolution be referred.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

RICHARD C. RIDGWAY AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that bill. It is a bill which ought to be considered, but not under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will not withdraw his objection. The Senator who reported the bill, Mr. Jackson, is not now a member of the Senate. The parties interested have been a long time endeavoring to get this relief. The report is very full, and I think the bill is one the Senator will not object to when it is fully understood. The matter has been investigated at the Treasury Department. The report is in conformity with the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I do not think there is any one who will object to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not dispose of it under the five-minute rule. It does not lose its place, the Senator will understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

REPEAL OF THE CIVIL-SERVICE LAW.

The bill (S. 839) to repeal chapter 27 of the acts of 1883, relating to civil service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is an adverse report from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment upon a bill to repeal the act relating to the civil service. When the adverse report was made the bill was put on the Calendar, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] desired to address the Senate on the subject. He has done so, and if there be no objection I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks for the yeas and nays on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the attention of the Senate will be directed to the fact that this is a bill to repeal the civil-service act.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to the present consideration of the bill. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

FRANCIS DENMEAD.

The bill (S. 766) for the relief of Francis Denmead was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. HARRIS. I have here a House report which states the facts in the case. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. INGALLS], who reported the bill, submitted no written report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives will be read, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. "House report No. 2646"——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a report of this Congress?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to reading the House proceedings of this Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me see; I am not sure that it is of this Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to try that question and have the sense of the Senate, if the Senator from Vermont is willing. Let the Chair rule upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that a House report of the present session can not be read, in accordance with parliamentary law.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Chair to submit to the Senate the question of parliamentary law whether in a case of a private claim reported to the Senate by a committee of the Senate it be out of order to read a report made to the other House by the corresponding committee. I think it would be very convenient to the Senate to allow that to be done; it would save a great deal of work; and we could not possibly be guilty of any disrespect to the other House by simply hearing read a report of the facts made to it. I respectfully ask the Chair to submit the question to the Senate as a question of parliamentary law.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I think there is no rule on the subject either of the House or the Senate, but under the Manual of Jefferson any report that is made in writing to either House is open to the inspection or the reading of any member of either House; but nothing that has not been reported in writing would be in order to refer to. Therefore of course it would follow that whatever is reported in writing may be referred to in order.

Mr. CHACE. It is impossible to hear what is said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order. Will the Senator from Vermont show the Chair the authority to which he refers?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. We have been listening intently for some time in this part of the Chamber, and we can not hear a word back here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order. Senators will please resume their seats.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To save time about this business, I object to the consideration of this bill for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill passes over.

DISTRICT ACCOUNTS.

The bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds was announced as next in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who reported the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas who is not present [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps some other member of the committee can explain it. It is a very important bill evidently; but I can not understand it as it is being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, as a Senator from Ohio, will object to the bill until it is further examined.

LAW CLERKS FOR JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT.

The bill (S. 969) authorizing the employment of law clerks or stenographers for the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were, in section 1, line 4, after "United States," to strike out "the marshal of;" in line 5, after "law clerk," to strike out "or stenographer;" and in line 7, after the word "salary," to insert "to be fixed by the court;" so as to make the section read:

That for the purpose of facilitating the dispatch of business in the Supreme Court of the United States, said court be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a law clerk for the Chief-Justice and one for each of the associate justices thereof, with an annual salary, to be fixed by the court, not to exceed the sum of $2,000, to be paid monthly out of any moneys appropriated for the expenses of that court: Provided, That each person so employed shall be subject to removal at the pleasure of the court or at the pleasure of the member of the court to whom he is assigned for duty.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the employment of law clerks for the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States."

LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

The bill (S. 1072) to prevent the publication of lottery advertisements, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

DRAWBACK ON IMPORTED TOBACCO, ETC.

The bill (S. 477) to allow drawback on imported materials used in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars exported from the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. That is reported adversely. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being adversely reported, if there be no objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MAHONE. No; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under the rules.

INSPECTORS OF TOBACCOS AND CIGARS.

The bill (S. 476) to repeal section 3451 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning inspectors of tobacco and cigars, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make the same request, this bill being adversely reported?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT OF DESERTION.

The bill (S. 1490) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 7, after the word "desertion," to insert "in time of peace and not in the face of an enemy;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words:

"No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion in time of peace, and not in the face of an enemy, committed more than two years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation: Provided, That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person enlisted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN THE HANDS OF RECEIVERS.

The bill (S. 870) to provide that where any railroad property is taken into the possession of any United States court, and such railroad shall not have been completed, the net earnings of said railroad shall be applied to the completion of the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. That is an adverse report.

Mr. TELLER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

LESLIE BASSETT.

The bill (S. 996) for the relief of Leslie Bassett, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Leslie Bassett, late postmaster at Richland, Iowa, of $58.69, in full compensation for amount forwarded by him to designated depository in payment of balance due the United States for the third quarter of the year 1883, and which amount, being inclosed in a registered letter, was stolen from the mail while in course of transmittal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS WITH COLORADO.

The bill (S. 885) to relieve the State of Colorado from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to the State and Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 7, after the words "Territory of Colorado," to strike out "and State of Colorado" and insert "amounting to $33,891;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chief of the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the State of Colorado to be credited on its ordnance account with the amounts now charged against it for arms and ordnance stores issued to the Territory of Colorado, amounting to $33,891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOT IN SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The bill (S. 872) authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase a lot in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., for military purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 4, after the words "city of," to strike out "Jacksonville" and insert "Saint Augustine;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to purchase the lot in the city of Saint Augustine, Fla., known as the "Hunt lot," which extends from the parade to the sea-wall, a distance of 40 feet, for military purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase a lot in the city of Saint Augustine, Fla., for military purposes."

ARTHUR L. FISH.

The bill (S. 953) for the relief of Arthur L. Fish was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, after the words "sum of," at the end of line 4, to strike out "$16,266" and insert "$8,305.38;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Arthur L. Fish the sum of $8,305.38, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on account of said Arthur L. Fish, he being a surety on the bond of A. Boschke guaranteeing faithful performance and execution of certain specified work for the United States Government in dredging and improving the estuary at Wilmington Harbor, California. Owing to the failure of said A. Boschke to perform said contract, it being the moral as well as legal obligation of said surety, Arthur L. Fish, to satisfy the Government, he completed the work, and performed other work necessary not specified in the contract, at a loss in amount as above stated, through no fault or neglect of his.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. GROFF.

The bill (S. 1041) for the relief of William B. Gropp, of Newport, R. I., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William B. Gropp, of Newport, R. I., of $25 for damages sustained by his sail-boat Doctor through collision with the United States tug Cohasset, in Newport Harbor, July 4, 1884.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, in line 4, to strike out the name of "Gropp" and insert "Groff."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William B. Groff, of Newport, R. I."

HEIRS OF JOHN W. JUDSON.

Mr. DOLPH. The next business on the Calendar is the joint resolution (S. R. 3) for the relief of the widow and children of John W. Judson, late agent of the United States at Oswego, N. Y., for public works on Lake Ontario, which was reported favorably by me from the Committee on Claims with amendments. The last time I saw the claimant he was not satisfied with the report and said he did not want the joint resolution passed. I ask that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar, until the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who introduced it, is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over if there be objection.

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

The next business in order was the resolution reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. DOLPH to refer the claim of C. B. Bryan & Co. to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the claim of Messrs. C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, for the value of a boat and its lading of coal, destroyed by collision with the United States snag-boat De Russy, in the Mississippi River, November 17, 1879 (said boat and cargo being valued by said claimants at $3,643.60), be referred to the Court of Claims, in conformity to the provisions of section 1059 Revised Statutes.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the resolution—though I defer to the opinion of the Senator from Oregon—had better be changed to a bill.

Mr. DOLPH. As it is the Senator's bill, if he will just make the change I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Let that be done by unanimous consent. Let the change of form be made without prejudicing the merits of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be changed to a bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 2632) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co. was read three times, and passed, in the following words:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of C. B. Bryan & Co., for the value of a barge and lading of coal, alleged to have been destroyed by collision with the United States snag-boat R. E. De Russy, in the year 1879, be referred to the Court of Claims for hearing and determination, in conformity to the rules and practice of said court.

AUGUSTUS J. CASSARD.

The joint resolution (S. R. 56) authorizing Augustus J. Cassard to accept a gold medal conferred upon him by the Government of France, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MAXEY. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion long enough to let the brief report be read. This does not come within the class of cases discussed yesterday.

Mr. MAXEY. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects, and the joint resolution goes over.

LIZZIE MAYNADIER PHELPS.

The bill (S. 1899) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie Maynadier Phelps, widow of Capt. Seth Ledyard Phelps, late minister of the United States to Peru, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the appropriation to Mrs. Lizzie Maynadier Phelps, widow of Capt. Seth Ledyard Phelps, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru, of one year's salary as minister, from June 25, 1885.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SHERMAN March 17, 1886:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred S. Res. 16, having considered the same, beg leave to report in lieu thereof a bill for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie Maynadier Phelps, widow of Capt. Seth Ledyard Phelps, late minister of the United States to Peru, which they have the honor to recommend may be passed by the Senate.

The letter of the Secretary of State, dated January 11, 1886, and addressed to the acting chairman of the committee, with reference to the subject-matter of the bill, is herewith presented, with request that it be printed with this report.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 11, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, accompanied by a copy of Senate resolution No. 16, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie Maynadier Phelps, widow of Seth Ledyard Phelps, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru.

Captain Phelps died at Lima June 24, 1885. He was commissioned June 18, 1883, as such minister. His salary had been adjusted up to the date of his death.

While upon the subject of the Senate's resolution, I beg to submit for the consideration of your committee a few observations in connection therewith, without, however, being understood as intending in any manner to influence the committee's report or the Senate's later action.

I find, upon an inspection of the Department's records covering the period of Captain Phelps's official services, that they have been discharged with a due regard to the honor, dignity, and interests of the Government, and with commendable fidelity and ability. Besides his duties at his post, which, during the late revolutionary operations of the contending factions in Peru, were exceedingly onerous and difficult, it appears that my immediate predecessor, relying upon the tact and judgment of Captain Phelps, ordered him from Lima on a temporary and confidential mission to Central America. His delicate and important duties there were likewise discharged in such a manner as to secure the entire approval of Mr. Frelinghuysen. Upon the completion of this service Captain Phelps returned to Lima, entered actively upon the performance of his official duties there, and died, as previously stated, while in the Government service.

A few precedents may be here cited to show the action of Congress in similar instances where diplomatic officers have died abroad in the service.

The appropriation act approved March 3, 1879, gave to Mrs. Taylor, widow of Bayard Taylor, who died while minister to Germany, the sum of $7,000 to compensate his estate for the extraordinary expenses and losses incurred by it in consequence of his death so soon after reaching his post.

The joint resolution approved July 28, 1882, gave to Mrs. Hurlbut, widow of General Hurlbut (Captain Phelps's immediate predecessor), General Hurlbut, having died while minister to Peru, one year's salary and legal allowances, after necessary deductions of salary paid.

The joint resolution also approved July 28, 1882, gave to Mrs. Kilpatrick, widow of General Kilpatrick, who died while minister to Chili, one year's salary and legal allowances, after making proper salary deductions.

The joint resolution approved August 1, 1882, gave to Mrs. Garnet, widow of Rev. Henry Highland Garnet, who died while minister to Liberia, one year's salary and legal allowances, after deducting the amount received up to his death. Mr. Garnet had only been in Liberia a few weeks.

The deficiency bill approved March 3, 1883, gave to Mrs. Marsh, widow of George P. Marsh, esq., who died while minister to Italy, the balance of one year's salary reckoned from June 23, 1882.

The act approved December 23, 1881, gave to Mrs. Jane Venable, widow of William E. Venable, esq., who died as minister to Guatemala, the sum of $5,636.87, being the balance of one year's salary. In this case, Mr. Venable was commissioned March 14, 1857, and died at Guatemala, August 22 of that year, before presenting his credentials. Consequently the action of Congress dates twenty-seven years after the minister's death.

The deficiency bill approved March 3, 1885, gave to Mrs. Wing, widow of E. Rumsey Wing, esq., who died while minister to Ecuador, and to Mrs. Hunt, widow of William H. Hunt, esq., who died while minister to Russia, a sum equal to six months' salary in each case. Mr. Wing was commissioned minister-resident November 16, 1869. Shortly afterward, however, Congress discontinued the mission to Ecuador.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, I am inclined to the opinion, which, of course, is offered with a due regard to the rights of the committee, that the proposed action of Congress is one both just and worthy of bestowal.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Acting Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations U. S. Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for information if the rule has been to give a full year's salary, or only six months, one-half year's salary. The references in the report would indicate that where ministers had been on duty any length of time there was only six months' salary given, and that it was only in very extraordinary cases, where the minister had just entered upon his duties, that a year's allowance has been made. It seems this officer was over two years at his post. Therefore it is not like the case of Minister Hunt and others who died very soon after they reached their posts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only answer by repeating what is stated in the report. There were several precedents in this case, and the Committee on Foreign Relations on considering the whole case thought it was a very meritorious one; and there are several instances where a full year's salary has been allowed, especially to the predecessor of this gentleman, who died in the service at Peru.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say that I think the principle is wrong. I am not in favor of the allowance, but I shall not object to this bill, as the committee has reported it unanimously. I think it wrong, however.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

HEIRS OF CHARLES B. SMITH.

The bill (S. 148) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that it is alleged by the accounting officers of the Treasury that the act for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a first lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, approved June 8, 1880, is insufficient to enable them to close his accounts. The bill therefore directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to close the subsistence and quartermaster's accounts upon the books of the Treasury of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a first lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry.

Mr. LOGAN. This is a bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and I see from the bill on his desk an amendment prepared to the bill—I presume there will be no objection to it—so as to make it read:

To pay Julia A. Smith, widow of said Charles B. Smith, the pay and allowances due him at the date of his death, notwithstanding the fact that said pay and allowances have heretofore been applied in the adjustment of his subsistence and quartermaster's accounts; and such amount as may be needed to carry out the purpose of this act is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

If the accounts are settled she will be entitled to the amount that was taken from his pay. I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to readjust and close the subsistence and quartermaster's accounts upon the books of the Treasury of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a first lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, and pay to Julia A. Smith, widow of the said Charles B. Smith, the pay and allowances due him at the date of his death, notwithstanding the fact that said pay and allowances have heretofore been applied in the adjustment of his subsistence and quartermaster's accounts, and such amount as may be needed to carry out the purpose of this act is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to inquire if this man was a defaulter to the Government in his accounts.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; there was no default to the Government.

Mr. McPHERSON. He seems to have been short in his accounts, and his pay heretofore, according to the wording of the amendment, has been applied to the settlement of his accounts.

Mr. LOGAN. That occurs frequently in closing up accounts; an amount retained out of the officer's pay. In this case the accounts were closed, and the pay then kept from him is now to be paid to the widow. That is the pay which was included in the amount which he was entitled to at the close of the war.

Mr. McPHERSON. Was he indebted to the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. That depends on the accounts. The accounting officers determine that fact.

Mr. McPHERSON. It is not known to the Senate whether he is indebted to the Government to the extent of $1 or $100,000. Therefore it is a very important matter.

Mr. ALLISON. The report shows that the vouchers and papers of this officer were lost.

Mr. MAXEY. When I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs the chairman knows I investigated this case very thoroughly and very carefully and I went to the very bottom of it, and the opinion which I entertained, as reported to the committee, was that the bill is a good bill. The claim is right, and I think the present committeemen who made this report adopted the report I made.

Mr. LOGAN. We adopted that report. It is a bill that was referred to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and being reached in his absence I do not desire it to be delayed, though I have not investigated the case thoroughly and only know generally what the facts are. The Senator from Texas remembers the facts.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, and a very full report.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let the report be read.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a long report.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not insist on the reading of the report if the committee and the Senator from Illinois are perfectly satisfied in their own minds that this is a proper case for relief; but I do not like to act in the absence of information as to the amount of this default to the Government. It is evident from the bill itself that he was in default, because his pay was withheld.

Mr. LOGAN. That does not prove that there was a default. I will give the Senator an illustration. I knew a quartermaster whose pay, covering a period of nine months, was withheld from him for nine years on the ground that he had failed to account for two sets of tent-poles and three balls of twine. I had to get the action of Congress to get his account settled before he could get his pay. That was the fact in that case. I do not say that this is a precisely similar case, but the committee examined it and was thoroughly satisfied the widow ought to have this money.

Mr. McPHERSON. Cases of that kind are technical. We have in the Naval Committee very often applications from paymasters in the Navy to have their accounts adjusted, and it is found that they are very much in arrears to the Government. It is not an uncommon thing to find amounts of five or ten thousand dollars difference for which they ask relief, and in many cases the pay of the officer has been applied toward a reduction of the amount. I do not know whether this bill is of that character or whether the amount involved is a large one. If so it ought to require some investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William P. Chambliss, late major of the Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, at the rate of $75 per month, from and after the passage of this act, subject to all other limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the same to be in lieu of all other pensions paid him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

V. F. GORRISEN.

The bill (H. R. 2428) for the relief of V. F. Gorrisen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to V. F. Gorrisen, of Young County, Texas, of $245.33, being the amount of money collected from him by the Post-Office Department for and on account of postal funds stolen from the mails after having been registered and mailed by him as postmaster at Graham, Tex., in 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

The bill (S. 654) declaratory of the meaning of section 3 of the act of June 16, 1882, for the relief of Howard University, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "university," to insert the words "then owned by it;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That it is the meaning and intention of the third section of the act of June 16, 1882, for the relief of Howard University, to exempt all the property of said university then owned by it from future taxation as fully and to the same extent as the second section of said act remitted the taxes due on the property of said university on the day of its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the action of the Senate the other day on similar bills, I think the amendment had better not be agreed to. We should place Howard University upon the same footing with other public institutions in this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MATHILDA VICTOR.

The bill (S. 975) for the relief of Mathilda Victor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOLPH. In that case, during the Forty-eighth Congress, there was a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims against the bill, and I understand there is not a unanimous report now in its favor from the Committee on Military Affairs. I should not like to be cut off from having the report of the Committee on Claims read. If the Senator from Illinois thinks the bill can be considered under this rule, very well.

Mr. LOGAN. It can be if the report is read.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the President if under this rule the adverse report made by the Committee on Claims at the last Congress may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be, unless it occupies more than five minutes. Its reading would be in the nature of debate.

Mr. DOLPH. It probably would not occupy more than five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not like to do that, but I will ask unanimous consent to have the adverse report made by the Committee on Claims at the last Congress read.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that, but I want the report of the Committee on Military Affairs read.

The bill was read. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "thirty" and insert "ten;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mathilda Victor the sum of $10,000, for services rendered to the United States in the years 1862, 1863, and 1864 of the war for the Union, by the surrender of her home and property, an institution devoted exclusively to educational and charitable purposes, in Baton Rouge, La., for the use and occupation of United States soldiers as a hospital, as a depot for quartermaster and commissary stores, as quarters for cavalry troops and horses, and for other purposes; and the amount hereby allowed is in full of all demands of said Mathilda Victor against the United States on account of said services rendered, and is appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLUMB. That bill, as I understand, has been adversely reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator to allow the report to be read, and then he can object if he wishes.

Mr. PLUMB. I have read the report and am entirely satisfied with it myself, but the fact that it required an adverse report of the Committee on Claims will require that it should have more consideration than it can have under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LOGAN. It can be objected to after the report is read.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall object to it anyhow. I do not think it worth while to take up the time of the Senate by reading a report the reading of which will be again called for when the bill is considered.

I am not satisfied with the bill, and as it has been reported adversely by the Committee on Claims, it does not seem fair on the face of it to have a bill reported adversely by one committee and then get it to another committee and get a favorable report without some adequate explanation being made.

Mr. LOGAN. It was sent to the Military Committee for the reason that it refers to quartermasters' supplies, and that is understood to be the proper committee for such cases to go to.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not question that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is not under consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the objection that the Senator from Illinois may be heard.

Mr. LOGAN. I made the report in this case, and I must say that I have been very much surprised at reports being made from the Committee on Claims favorably and then again adversely. This was a case where the lady who is the claimant owned certain property, made a contract with the Government, and the Government paid for the rent of the property and had possession of it. After paying two years' rent for the property it was destroyed while we were holding it in our possession under the contract for rent, and the Secretary of War appointed a commission to ascertain the amount of damage. That commission reported $15,000. Two commissions, in fact, have reported on it; and an allowance was recommended by the Secretary of War. With all these facts, besides her being a loyal woman, I was utterly dumbfounded to find a report from the Committee on Claims against the claim, though they have reported in favor of just such claims as are being considered here every day. I made the favorable report in this case from the Committee on Military Affairs on the report of the Secretary of War and the commission that investigated the property held under the contract with the Government of the United States.

If this lady is not entitled to pay on the contract existing for the use of her property, we having destroyed it, then there is not a claim that ever passed through Congress which is entitled to pay, in my judgment, where property was destroyed in the Confederate States.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like permission to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to be heard on this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand the facts to be as stated by the Senator from Illinois. I do not understand that there was any contract for the occupation of this property. I did not propose to discuss the bill until it comes up for consideration; but the facts, as I understand them, are contained in the report made by the Committee on Claims at the last Congress by myself. I simply desire to state that much, and when the bill does come up for consideration I will endeavor to maintain the report made by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator did not the Quartermaster's Department pay this lady for two years' rent of her seminary property?

Mr. DOLPH. I understand the Quartermaster's Department paid her in full for rent, and her claim is now for depredations of the soldiers.

Mr. LOGAN. For the destruction of the property?

Mr. DOLPH. For use and occupation, but not for rent under contract.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator say as a lawyer when we had possession of the property and the Quartermaster paid the rent, that was not a contract between the Government and the party? Will he say that?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes; I say that.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. We took possession of it.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS TO MINOR CHILDREN.

The bill (S. 1948) increasing the rate of pension to minor children, and extending the pensionable period therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that had better go over.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. I did not make a report from the Committee on Pensions in this case in view of the fact that the subject was then before the Senate by an amendment to a previous bill which the Senator had voted in favor of. I now ask for the information of the Senate, though, to have read a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions stating what the probable cost of this will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator withdraws his objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the letter be read and printed as a document and the bill passed over, and then I will examine the letter. The bill will not lose its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document will be printed and the bill go over under objection.

Several SENATORS. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; let it be printed as a document, so that we we can look at it in that shape.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as a document.

PORTRAIT OF GENERAL GEORGE H. THOMAS.

The bill (S. 1949) providing for the purchase of the portrait of George H. Thomas, painted by General S. W. Price, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,000 for the purchase of the portrait, two-thirds length, of General George H. Thomas, painted by General S. W. Price, and now in the temporary possession of the Committee on the Library.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN M. SIMPSON.

The bill (H. R. 61) for the relief of Benjamin M. Simpson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, after the word "of," in line 3, to insert the words "ownership and;" and after the word "scrip," in line 4, to insert the words:

And the execution of a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in double the market value of the scrip so to be issued, conditioned to indemnify the United States against the presentation by an innocent holder of the alleged lost scrip.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior, on satisfactory proof of ownership and the loss of said scrip, and the execution of a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in double the market value of the scrip so to be issued, conditioned to indemnify the United States against the presentation by an innocent holder of the alleged lost scrip, be hereby authorized and directed to reissue and deliver to Benjamin M. Simpson a Revolutionary bounty-land scrip for 80 acres of land.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ADMIRALS ROWAN AND WORDEN.

The bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be explained.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

Mr. HALE. It only applies to the cases of Vice-Admiral Rowan and Rear-Admiral Worden and allows them to retire about two years before they would retire by process of law. These are two of the most distinguished of the veterans of the Navy, and their condition and circumstances are such as appeal to Congress. I hope that the objection will not be insisted upon after this explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "may," to insert "after forty years' service;" so as to read:

Be it enacted, &c., That any officer of the Navy of the United State who, upon recommendation of the President by name, has received the thanks of Congress for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, and who has been advanced one grade in consequence thereof, may, after forty years' service, be retired from active service by the President, upon his own application, with the highest pay of the grade to which he belongs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to the bill, but I want to suggest whether that description "who has been advanced one grade" might not embarrass these gentlemen? Have they not been advanced more than that?

Mr. HALE. It is put in so as not to apply to anybody else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It applies precisely to these two officers?

Mr. HALE. It does. It was carefully so drawn.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Maine what he understands by the "highest grade of pay?" Full pay?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir, full pay.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the occasion, if these officers be retired now, that they should be retired on full pay. I think that is a very strong discrimination against the other officers of the Navy, that they shall be retired with full pay and all the other officers go out with 75 per cent. of their pay.

Mr. HALE. It is a pure case of the favor of Congress as a recognition of the very remarkable services of these two officers. Admiral Worden, as every one knows, stands as the representative of very great achievements, as also does Admiral Rowan. They are old men, have given their lives to the service, and their conditions and circumstances are such as to appeal to the generosity of Congress, I think. I know that any Senator can send the bill over by a single objection, but I hope no Senator here will make the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the present salary?

Mr. HAWLEY. No matter.

Mr. HALE. It is less than $6,000.

Mr. LOGAN. What are they now?

Mr. HALE. Worden is a rear-admiral.

Mr. LOGAN. Do rear-admirals get less than $6,000?

Mr. McPHERSON. I hope no Senator will object to so meritorious a bill as this under the circumstances of the case. Perhaps it would be improper to discuss the circumstances; but the services of these officers were very distinguished. I think it is only an act of justice to them. They have been named by the President, and a vote of thanks has been given them by Congress for conspicuous services rendered, and I sincerely hope that no Senator will object to so meritorious a measure as this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over until we can get some information about the salaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Lay it aside informally.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well; lay it aside informally. I wish to know more of the facts before I agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside informally.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The bill (S. 184) for the encouragement of the American merchant marine, and to promote postal and commercial relations with foreign countries, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move an amendment to that bill. It has come up unexpectedly. The amendment is not here, but I have sent for it. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally for a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside informally.

WYOMING LAND DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 1566) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIELD OFFICERS OF FOURTH SOUTH CAROLINA BRIGADE.

The bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State Troops was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire to have Calendar number 404 further delayed. I now have the amendment I wish to propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read, subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill (S. 184) for the encouragement of the American merchant marine and to promote postal and commercial relations with foreign countries.

Mr. FRYE. That bill may as well go over now. The substance of it has been incorporated in an amendment to an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is desirable to enlarge the bill. A bill received from the other branch the other day it seems to me should become a law and this might be added to it. Perhaps the Senator did not notice the bill. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will first be read.

The Secretary read Senate bill No. 184.

Mr. HARRIS. We can not consider that bill under the five-minute rule. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

HEIRS OF JAMES STEWART.

The bill (H. R. 275) for the relief of William D. Stewart and others, heirs at law of James Stewart, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refund to William D. Stewart, Thomas H. Stewart, William D. Stewart (guardian of the minor children of James Stewart, jr., deceased), M. F. Turner, R. M. McMillan, M. J. Powdon, and E. A. Dodd, heirs at law of James Stewart, deceased, of the county of Sumter, Georgia, $60 each, being the amount paid by each to the United States as excise tax on succession to property as heirs at law of James Stewart, deceased, when in fact they were not liable for any sum whatever.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF MICHAEL O'BRIEN.

The bill (S. 1249) for the relief of the heirs of Michael O'Brien was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM H. RANDLE.

The bill (S. 1333) for the relief of William H. Randle, of Nashville, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William H. Randle $400, on account of the loss of a registered letter containing $400, by reason of a defective postal car, which sum was paid by Randle immediately after the loss of the letter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report. I do not understand how we guarantee registered letters.

Mr. MAXEY. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY March 31, 1886:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 1333) for the relief of William H. Randle, respectfully submits the following report:

This claim is based upon the following facts:

William H. Randle was appointed route agent on the Memphis branch of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in April, 1877. About three weeks after his appointment he made his first trip on mail-car No. 18. On this trip it appears that the petitioner had charge of a large number of valuable registered packages, all of which were placed in a drawer of said car, designated for the safe-keeping of valuable packages.

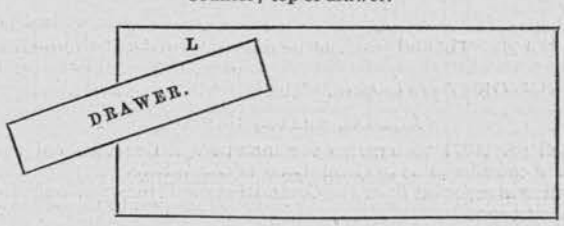
Upon arriving at Memphis, the terminal point of this route, he opened the drawer above referred to and took out all the packages it contained. Upon reaching the post-office in Memphis these registered packages were checked off, when it was discovered that one was missing and unaccounted for, containing the sum of $400. When this loss was discovered, it appears that the petitioner, from his sworn statement, hurried back to the depot and made a thorough and careful examination of the drawer of mail-car No. 18 for the missing package, but his efforts were fruitless.

The petitioner states positively that he placed the registered package, lost and unaccounted for, with the other similar packages in the drawer for registered matter; that he was not absent from his post of duty a single instant between Humboldt and Memphis; also that no person excepting himself was in this car during the entire trip.

The petitioner, in his sworn statement, also says that upon being informed of the contents of the lost package he at once proceeded to make good this loss, and did make it good, in full, by paying in three separate installments the full amount; vouchers of said payments, duly certified to by the proper authorities of the Post-Office Department, being now in the possession of your committee.

In his sworn statement the petitioner avers, in conclusion, that this loss could only have occurred in one way, namely, the dilapidated condition of this mail-car, No. 18, and the defective construction of the drawer from which the package was lost, which facts were made known to the petitioner afterward, by train hands and parties previously employed in this identical car in a like capacity, and not through any dereliction on his part in the discharge of his duties, as the following additional facts in the premises will show:

First. F. M. Reeves, formerly route agent on the aforesaid route, certifies to the defective construction of the register drawer of this car, and states that on more than one occasion registered matter was caught in opening this drawer and lodged in a hidden shelf above the drawer; and further says that had it not been for previous information the packages would have been lost and no possible clew could have led to their discovery.



Secondly. Mr. John Temple, formerly a route agent in the railway mail service on this route, now holding a responsible position in the Southern Express Company, also certifies to the defective construction of the register drawer in mail-car No. 18, as the following extract from his letter on the subject will show:

"I frequently used postal car No. 18, which was an old, well-worn, and rather dilapidated affair, with no security whatever for registered matter, being unprovided with locks upon any of the drawers; and that the drawer used for registered matter was so defective in construction that it was an easy matter for registers to make their disappearance by slipping behind the drawer, being jostled or shuffled away from their proper place by the motion of the car while running. During my term as route agent I lost, or thought I lost, seven registered packages which had hung in this drawer in such a manner as not to be all discernible. The disappearance of the packages cost me my position as route agent, as I knew not at the time what had become of them, and was completely mystified by their loss.

"Seventeen days after, when this car No. 18 was run into the shops to be overhauled and repaired, the seven missing packages were found in the top part of the drawer used for registers.

"To better illustrate the meaning of 'hanging in the top of the drawer,' I submit a diagram of same:

Counter; top of drawer.

The drawer is partly drawn out. L is a little shelf in top, where the registers would naturally catch in opening and closing the drawer; that is, if drawer was well filled with packages. No one knew of this little apartment until discovered by the car repairers.

Respectfully,

JNO. TEMPLE.

We attach hereto, as exhibits, letters from the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service; from the postmaster at Nashville, Tenn.; from Sam. D. Brown, late money-order inspector; from W. C. Baird, post-office inspector, and S. L. Terry, superintendent of mails in the Nashville post-office, all of whom, from their official positions, were brought in close business contact with the petitioner, Mr. William H. Randle, and commend in the strongest terms the merits of his claim, as well as his character for integrity, sobriety, and his perfect fitness for the position he then held, and holds now, in the railway mail service.

After due consideration of the facts in the premises, and especially the fact of his continued retention in the service, it is conclusive to the minds of your committee that he was not responsible for the loss that occurred, and that he is, in justice and equity, entitled to the relief he seeks.

The committee incorporates the following communications:

NASHVILLE, TENN., January 29, 1884.

To whom it may concern:

I have known Mr. W. H. Randle as postal clerk for about five years, and as the years have gone by no one has shown himself to be more diligent, industrious, honest, and competent than he. He is thoroughly sober, and singularly attentive to and careful of his own business, and utterly disinclined to intermeddle with the business of other people.

No postal clerk coming to this office is more observant of the amenities and proprieties of the gentleman, or has commanded more of my admiration.

W. P. JONES, P. M.

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 16, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I learn that you will ask Congress to reimburse you for the $400 lost in a mail-car, while in your charge, by a defective drawer in the case at which you worked and provided for you by the Department.

It is just and right that your request be granted. You made good the loss like a man, although it was doubtful to you whether or not you ought to do so. I knew you well while I was an inspector of the Post-Office Department. You were always, so far as I could know or learn, at your post, and a faithful and conscientious officer.

Respectfully,

SAM'L D. BROWN,
Late Money-Order Inspector.

W. H. RANDLE, Esq., Nashville, Tenn.

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 29, 1884.

Mr. W. H. Randle, postal clerk on the Nashville and Hickman line, was under my supervision as chief clerk of the railway mail service for a period of about five years, during which time I had ample time and opportunities to observe him both as a gentleman in his private relations and as an employé of the Post-Office Department, and it gives me pleasure to bear witness to his integrity, sobriety, and all other qualifications that go so far to make the perfect gentleman that he is. Any statement made by him is worthy the most implicit confidence.

Very respectfully,

W. C. BAIRD, P. O. Inspector.

NASHVILLE, TENN., January 28, 1884.

This is to certify that I have known W. H. Randle as R. and O. clerk for several years. I have always considered him a very careful and prudent man in the discharge of his duties as an employé of the Railway Mail Service, and very particular as to his registered matter.

Very respectfully,

S. L. TERRY,
Superintendent Mails.

Precisely a like bill (S. 1482) was before the Senate, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, and after careful examination by this committee was reported back with recommendation that it pass, and the same passed the Senate April 25, 1884.

A re-examination of the case satisfies the committee of the correctness of its former report. Wherefore, the committee reports back said S. 1333, and recommends its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall vote against the bill, but I do not wish to object to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The bill (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear an explanation then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who reported the bill is not present.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator who made the report is not present, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 709) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. DOLPH. This bill can not be discussed under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL TRADES UNIONS.

The bill (S. 1657) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That any national union or subunion under the jurisdiction of a national union as described in section 1, is hereby legalized in carrying out its lawful objects as aforesaid; and any person who shall prevent, or endeavor to prevent, any such organization from carrying out its lawful objects as aforesaid shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable in any court of competent jurisdiction by a fine not exceeding ——, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ——, or both, at the pleasure of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after the word "that," in line 1, to strike out the word "a;" in the same line, after the word "trade," to strike out "union" and insert "unions;" after the word "upon," at the end of line 1, to strike out "application to any United States court, be provided with a charter as a national trade union, bearing also," and insert "filing their articles of incorporation in the office of the recorder of the District of Columbia, become a corporation under;" in line 6, after the word "union," to strike out "is known or;" in line 7, after the word "trade," to strike out "such charter of incorporation" and insert the word "and;" in line 8, after the word "shall," to strike out "entitle said national union, and each or all of its branches" and insert "have the right;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That a national trade unions shall, upon filing their articles of incorporation in the office of the recorder of the District of Columbia, become a corporation under the technical name by which said national trade union desires to be known to the trade, and shall have the right to sue and be sued, to implead and be impleaded, to grant and receive, in its corporate or technical name, property, real, personal, and mixed, and to use said property, and the proceeds and income thereof, for the objects of said corporation as in its charter defined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 4, after the word "to," at the beginning of the line, to strike out "grant charters to" and insert "establish branches and;" in line 5, before the word "Territory," to strike out the words "State or;" after "United States," in the same line, to strike out the following words:

Or in any other country; and all subunions organized under its jurisdiction shall have power to purchase, hold, or dispose of such real or personal property as may be needed to carry on their business as provided in this act; and such incorporated national trade union and all subunions shall have power to require all officers holding places of trust to execute bonds, with approved sureties, for the safe-keeping and paying over to their respective unions, whenever directed by them, of all moneys belonging to their respective unions in their keeping and under their control.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That an incorporated national trade union shall have power to define the duties and powers of all its officers, and prescribe their mode of election and term of office, to establish branches and subunions in any Territory of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 2, after the word "located," to strike out "in such city;" in the same line, after the words "in the," to strike out "United States as shall from time to time be determined by such national trade union" and insert District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the headquarters of an incorporated national trade union shall be located in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The next amendment was to strike out section 8, in the following words:

SEC. 8. That this act shall be in full force and effect from and after the date of its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will be in strict accordance with the proper doctrines of those who object to great accumulations of land that this corporation should be governed as all others ought to be. I move to insert at the end of section 3:

Provided, That each incorporated union may hold only so much real estate as may be necessary for the purposes of the corporation.

Otherwise, as it stands now, it has a right to become a gigantic speculative concern, which is exactly what they are opposed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. KINKEAD AND OTHERS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yesterday when Order of Business 321 was reached an objection was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I now ask the Senator to withdraw that objection, and that unanimous consent may be given to the consideration of the bill. I will offer an amendment which I think will obviate the objection made by the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to taking up any case, but I want to go on regularly, for no case has lost its place by being passed over on this call.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. This is a very meritorious case. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky. There is no objection to it as the bill is proposed to be amended. It will only take a moment.

Mr. BECK. I want to go back to two or three cases myself. I will not object to this now, but I will hereafter.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I thank the Senator. I ask that Order of Business 321, being Senate bill 1353, be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I offer the following amendment as a substitute, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred on the Court of Claims to hear the claims of John H. Kinkead and Samuel Sussman and Charles O. Wood, for the rent and value of certain buildings in the town of Sitka, in the Territory of Alaska, alleged by them to have been acquired by virtue of purchase from the Russian-American Company upon the evidence already filed in said court and such additional legal evidence as may be hereafter presented on either side; and if said court shall find that said parties acquired a valid title to said buildings respectively alleged to have been purchased by them, said court shall award to said parties a fair and reasonable rent for the use of the said buildings for the time (if any) the same have been occupied by the United States, and also a suitable indemnity for said buildings themselves; and the receipt of such rent and indemnity shall thereafter bar any further claim by said parties for the use of said buildings or for the value thereof; and before receiving the same all of said parties shall execute a release to the United States for all right, title, and interest whatsoever in and to the said property; and any defense, set-off, or counterclaim may be pleaded by the United States as defendants, as in cases within the general jurisdiction of the court, and either party shall have the same right of appeal as in such cases.

Mr. HOAR. I see that this bill, as it is now drawn, proposes to allow these parties for the rent of certain buildings. It also provides that the United States shall acquire title on certain proceedings being had. Does the phrase "buildings" cover all the United States is to acquire? Is there no land going with the buildings, no curtilage? Would it not be more comprehensive to say "buildings and real estate?"

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The provisions of the treaty speak of this property simply as "buildings?"

Mr. HOAR. What becomes of the land on which they stand and the land about the buildings?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The title is in the United States, I suppose, as the title of all other lands in Alaska.

Mr. HOAR. But did these men acquire the title to these buildings from this company, the United States owning the land on which they stood?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The land I presume was owned by the Russian Government, and the buildings put up by the company from which they purchased.

Mr. HOAR. This bill would evidently give the United States a building, without the land on which it stands, as personal property.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Government has the land now. There is no question about that. These buildings were owned by the company known as the Russian-American Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

LETTER-BOOKS OF WILLIAM VANS MURRAY.

The bill (S. 1084) to authorize the purchase of five manuscript volumes (being letter-books) of William Vans Murray, formerly minister at The Hague and at Paris, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $2,500 for the purchase of five manuscript volumes, being the letter-books of William Vans Murray, formerly minister of the United States at The Hague and at Paris.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report or explanation of that? If not, it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will probably explain this in the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. HOAR. These are some very valuable and interesting manuscript volumes, containing the letters of Mr. Murray, minister to The Hague and to Paris, and one of the commissioners that the French Government had the difficulty with in John Adams's administration—a very eminent public man. These manuscripts are of great historical value. They were carefully examined by Mr. Spofford, and I think by the librarian of the State Department. That is the whole story as far as I know.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not this a very large price for them? How was the price arrived at?

Mr. HOAR. The price was arrived at on consultation with Mr. Spofford. It was a very considerable cutting down of what the parties demanded. I have no doubt there are many historical societies in the country who would be eager to acquire them. They seem to be a part of the archives of one of our foreign embassies.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were these letters written to our own Government?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; some of them are private letters written to the Secretary of State, as is the custom very often.

Mr. COCKRELL. And never published?

Mr. HOAR. Never published at all; and others were written to various friends and acquaintances.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEOPHILUS FISK MILLS.

The bill (S. 2023) providing for the payment of $2,500 to Theophilus Fisk Mills for executing a model and design for an equestrian statue of the late General John A. Rawlins was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOAR. That bill I am in favor of, but I think it would be on the whole more desirable that it should be explained by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who knows all about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

IMMORAL PUBLICATIONS.

The bill (S. 1961) to amend section 3893 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to make section 3893 read:

SEC. 3893. Every obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or disgusting book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other written or printed matter of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed or intended, or purporting to be, for the prevention of conception or procuring abortion, and every article or thing intended, or adapted, or purporting to be for any indecent or immoral use, and every article or thing so advertised or offered for sale as to suggest or lead to the use of the same for the purpose of preventing conception, or the procuring of abortion, or for indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, or how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, and every envelope, wrapper, or postal card upon which indecent, lewd, obscene, filthy, disgusting, or lascivious delineations, epithets, terms, or language may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails, for the purpose of circulating or disposing of or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each and every offense, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both at the discretion of the court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

The next business on the Calendar was a "resolution that the commissioners of the District of Columbia inform the Senate whether they are stockholders in certain corporations," &c.

Mr. ALLISON. The resolution ought to be referred.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The resolution ought to be disposed of, but probably it had better go over, reserving its place on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. Ought it not to be referred?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think not. Senators have advised me that they wish to say something on the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

NORTHWEST TRADING COMPANY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1941) to enable the Northwest Trading Company, a private corporation organized under the general laws of Oregon, to purchase certain lands in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. DOLPH. Let that go over. There is an adverse report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

B. B. CONNOR.

The bill (S. 1337) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. There is at least a minority report in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I object to that bill. There seems to have been a difference in the committee, and it will bring up discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

WEST POINT GRADUATES.

The bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that no graduate of the United States Military Academy shall be required to refund to the United States any pay or allowances received by him as an officer in the United States Army from the date of the rank given him by his first commission until taking the oath of office as such, or in consequence of having been granted a leave of absence on full pay upon graduation, in accordance with the uniform practice since the establishment of the Military Academy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANNA EGAN.

The bill (S. 2037) for the relief of Mary Anna Egan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remit, upon payment of the principal of the amount of special-improvement taxes levied or assessed in the year 1875, and now outstanding upon the books of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on account of or against parts of lots numbered 10 and 11, in square 557, fronting on New Jersey avenue, in the city of Washington, and charged either to Mary Anna Egan or James Egan, her late husband, all interest accumulated thereon and penalties of every kind and nature whatsoever for the non-payment thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT OMAHA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1861) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better pass that by until the return of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not object to the bill unless there are serious reasons against its passage. I have received a note from the Senator from Nebraska, who is absent from the Senate, and will be for some time, on duty at West Point. Owing to the lateness of the session, he very much fears the passage of the bill will be endangered if when reached upon the Calendar it is thrown over to another day. There seems to be every reason for the passage of the bill, I judge from the report. This military reservation is now almost in the heart of a great city.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is just the point that I wanted to see the Senator from Nebraska about, as to whether the reservation is there. That was the representation made; but I have heard since that it is far from being in the heart of the city, and that there is a large space of ground practically unoccupied between the reservation and the city. That is the reason why I wanted to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska in regard to it. I think we had better see about that. When the report was made I understood that that was the condition of it, and that it was a matter of necessity, that in process of time, or very soon, it would have to be abandoned. It has been charged publicly in the newspapers that that is not true. I have seen articles in the papers to that effect, and I wanted to see the Senator so that we could confer about the matter and get the facts in the case.

If the facts stated in the report are accurate, as reported by the officers of the Army, the bill ought to pass, and if they are not it ought not to to pass.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that the report was made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I presume he has stated as accurately in the report the facts as he could state them in conversation. It is stated in the report that the grounds are inadequate; that the buildings are not what they should be for the occupation of troops ordinarily at that post; that their proximity to a crowded city constantly growing interferes with ordinary target practice; that a short distance from the city property entirely available can be purchased; and that the proceeds of the sale of this property would purchase a new reservation and leave a surplus which would almost complete the buildings.

I find in the report a letter from General Sheridan recommending a sale of this reservation, which is indorsed by the Secretary of War, so that the bill is not simply the report of the Military Committee, although that ought to be sufficient, but it is also supported by the recommendation of the commanding general of the Army and the Secretary of War.

Of course if the Senator from Missouri desires that it shall go over he has the right by an objection to put it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not want it to lose its place. As soon as the Senator from Nebraska comes back and we can confer about it I will agree to its being taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

LOUISA JACKMAN AND MARTHA VAUGHN.

The bill (S. 2057) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Jackman and the legal representatives of Mrs. Martha Vaughn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mrs. Louisa Jackman $2,500, and to the legal representatives of Mrs. Martha Vaughn $2,500, for patriotic services, hazards, and losses incurred by Louisa Jackman and Martha Vaughn in conveying information of great value to the Union officers in Kentucky in March, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABOR ARBITRATION.

The bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and the Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The question involved in the bill is very much too large and too important to be considered under the five-minute rule; and in many of its phases, if not all of them, it is now pending before another committee of this body, and I hope will be reported at a very early day. I desire to see early action upon the question, but I do not think we can afford to consider it now under the rule under which we are proceeding.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee before what other committee of the body a similar bill is pending?

Mr. HARRIS. I say in many phases of the question it is the same.

Mr. BLAIR. To what committee does the Senator refer?

Mr. HARRIS. I refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAIR. I was not aware of that fact; but in regard to this bill I suppose there are Senators who desire to speak upon it, and it should be passed over informally.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the rule it does not lose its place on the Calendar upon objection. We can not consider it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection to passing it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION AT WASHINGTON.

The concurrent resolution for the appointment of a joint select committee to consider the subject of a celebration in 1889 at Washington, D. C., was announced as the next business on the Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the resolution be postponed indefinitely, as action has been taken otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland to indefinitely postpone the concurrent resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF ISAAC P. TICE.

The bill (S. 1311) for the relief of the estate of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 14, after the word "accounts," to strike out the words "with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date the several sums should have been paid to said Tice;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to retry and determine, according to law and in equity, the case of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, against the United States, decided by the United States Supreme Court at the October term, 1878, and also to try and determine, according to law and in equity, the claims of said Tice for money collected but not paid over to him under regulations of the Treasury, based upon his contract with the United States, and to render a judgment in favor of the administrators of said Tice for such sums as may be found to be due and unpaid to said Tice on any of said accounts; and the amount of money necessary to pay any judgment that may be rendered is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the interest?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out the interest.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX ON ROPE AND BAGGING.

The bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to re-examine and settle a number of specified claims for tax on rope and bagging alleged to have been illegally assessed and collected, upon the separate application of the parties named.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER LILLY.

The bill (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $5,000 to be applied by the United States Light-House Board to reimburse the officers and crew of the United States light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth light-house district for losses of necessary personal apparel, and of other articles necessary and proper for their use on board that vessel, sustained by them by the burning of the vessel September 20, 1884, at Cincinnati, Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2079) to provide for the control of the reservation of public lands and the distribution of hot water, Hot Springs, Ark., was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to say that while I am very anxious to have a settlement of the Hot Springs question, it seems to me that there are some questions involved in the bill that can scarcely be settled under the five-minute rule. While I do not want to object to the Senate taking the matter up for consideration at this time, I think it is due to the Senate that I should make this statement: So far as I am concerned there are some objections to the bill which I should like to have more than five minutes to state to the Senate.

My colleague [Mr. BERRY] is favorable to the bill and thinks it should be passed, while I think there are some very material objections to the bill as it is presented by the Committee on Public Lands. Still the Senate might correct the evils which are in the bill by a discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Arkansas thinks that it will take more than five minutes for him to explain his view of it, as the bill does not lose its place on the Calendar, I shall object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to withhold his objection until I can make a remark.

Mr. HARRIS. I will do so.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to say that some legislation in regard to the Hot Springs at an early day is absolutely necessary. I hope, as the bill is objected to now, that the Senate will give an opportunity at an early day when it can be heard, because I think it is in the interest of the Government, in the interest of the people, in the interest of all concerned, and absolutely necessary to the public interest that some legislation should be had during this session in regard to the Hot Springs.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. To that I agree.

Mr. BERRY. And in that view my colleague joins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PORTLAND, OREG.

The bill (S. 84) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

TRANSMISSION OF WEATHER REPORTS.

The bill (S. 2004) authorizing the transmission of weather reports, storm and flood warnings, and the announcement of the approach of cold waves through the mails free of postage was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

WHARTON'S DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL DECISIONS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 58) for the purchase and distribution of 4,000 copies of a Digest of International Decisions of the United States, edited by Francis Wharton, was the next business on the Calendar.

Mr. EVARTS. I propose that we take up Order of Business 1456, being the Senate joint resolution 62, in place of this, which is on the same subject-matter, and which, I suppose, in the shape it is now presented by the Printing Committee, will not find any objection.

Mr. GORMAN. By direction of the Committee on Printing I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 62, referred to by the Senator from New York, which relates to the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution indicated will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton.

Resolved, &c., That there be printed the usual number of copies of A Digest of the International Law of the United States, taken from the Opinions of Presidents and Secretaries of State, and of Attorneys-General, and from the Decisions of Federal Courts, and of Joint International Commissions in which the United States was a Party; and that there be printed in addition to said usual number 1,000 copies for the use of the State Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Francis Wharton, and the editing to be paid for at a price to be fixed by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, acting with the Joint Committee on Printing, not exceeding the sum of $1 per volume of the work.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, in line 17, after the word "not," to strike out the words "exceeding the sum of one dollar per volume of the work," and insert the words "to exceed $10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. This work I believe is being prepared in the State Department by the officers there, and it is to be published chiefly for the use of the Department and Congress. It seems to me that the work ought to be printed at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. EVARTS. It is to be.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it to be printed at the Public Printing Office?

Mr. EVARTS. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Then it is not necessary that there should be any specific arrangement respecting it except to make an appropriation for the cost of the printing.

Mr. HOAR. But an appropriation must be made to pay for the editing.

Mr. EVARTS. Yes; for the editing.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that it is being edited at the State Department. I should be glad to have the matter explained.

Mr. EVARTS. A joint resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that committee unanimously reported the joint resolution which now, as No. 565 in the Order of Business, has been reached on the Calendar. That measure provided for the purchase of the work from the editor. It was found that a provision in the statutes made it impossible to provide in that manner without preventing really the distribution which was desired. We then offered another joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing; and Order of Business 1466, which has now been taken up, is the report of that committee. The objections which were then made by several Senators and the objection of the clause in the Revised Statutes are all avoided by the joint resolution which has been moved by the Senator from Maryland.

As to the preparation of the work, it is one of great merit and requiring great ability and great labor in its preparation. The Secretary of State recommended the publication, and Mr. Wharton, the accomplished law adviser now there, well known as an editor and publisher of law books, is remarkably qualified for the service. It is a labor of great magnitude; and no portion of this labor is performed by him during his office hours, nor is it a service that at all pertains to his office of law-adviser.

The book is expected to occupy two volumes of some 800 pages each. Originally the proposition was that he should receive not exceeding a dollar a volume for each copy. That is reduced now so as to provide that it shall not in any event, even if it should run to three volumes, exceed $10,000. Mr. Wharton can not be charged with any disposition to exact unduly a compensation, for it is left entirely to two committees, the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Printing Committee, to determine what he shall be paid, with an outer limit. I am able to state—and I hope the Senate will give me credit in what I say—that Mr. Wharton in the whole of this business is actuated by a desire merely to be fairly compensated for the mere labor and expense that he is put at.

My desire that the matter shall be accelerated is because considerable expense and labor will need to be directed by Mr. Wharton toward the examination of papers in Europe which are not accessible here. Strange as it may appear, there are some papers to be found in foreign archives in Europe in regard to our diplomatic correspondence and our disposition of the questions of conventions which are not to be found in our archives, not because of their subtraction but because they never have been there.

The recommendation of this work has come from very high authority, besides the State Department. As for its being used mainly by Congress, it will be very useful to Congress, and no member of Congress would desire to be without it; but it ought also to be in the hands of our foreign ministers and consuls, and it ought to be in the possession of all the libraries and of many of the public men.

The work itself can never be of any value to Mr. Wharton, outside of this acquisition. It is not a work that would be supported by the public by reason of its expense and the limited number of persons who would patronize it. We are either to obtain the work from an accomplished editor under the conditions of faculty and experience in editing, or we are to go without it. I am quite sure that Mr. Wharton has no expectation of receiving more than shall be given in the judgment of this body by its accredited managers of this question, if the joint resolution shall pass. The Department is very desirous that the work should be put forth. I am certainly very desirous that it should be, and I believe all the gentlemen with whom I conferred on the subject in the Senate and in the other House have had this feeling.

I am quite sure that the question of expenditure is now in its proper shape; that is, that it is confined entirely to the proper compensation for the editing of the work, and at a price that is to be measured entirely on the part of the officials of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the execution of the work; but here is a proposition to give Mr. Wharton, who is now the law adviser of the State Department, and an assistant there, the preparation of this work. The work, from the necessity of the case, must be prepared from the archives of the State Department; and if Mr. Wharton was not a law officer of the Government in that Department I submit that he would not be charged, perhaps, with the execution of this duty. He is receiving an annual compensation. It is proposed to pay him $10,000 for this editing.

Mr. EVARTS. No, that is the outer limit.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, subject to the revision of the two or three committees named. The first proposition was to allow him a dollar per volume. That seems to have been struck out, and now it is proposed that he be paid a gross sum not exceeding $10,000.

If the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Printing concur, as they seem to have acted together in this matter, that this is a proper and just thing to do, under the circumstances, I shall not object, although I do think that it is a compensation beyond what we should allow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There were some suggestions made in regard to this proposition a few weeks ago, and certain information was to be obtained. I can not just call it to mind at this moment, but some Senator who is not here now desired information, I think, as to the probable cost of the work. That was one point. I understood that it was not to be printed as a document by the Public Printer.

Mr. EVARTS. That was not proposed at that time, but the pending joint resolution provides that it shall be printed at the Printing Office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment which has been adopted limits the cost to $10,000.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is the number of 4,000 copies still retained?

Mr. GORMAN. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the original joint resolution to which he refers was committed to the Committee on Printing, and the Committee on Printing reported the joint resolution which is now before the Senate providing for 4,000 copies to be printed at the Government Printing Office, the editor to be paid not to exceed $10,000 for the work.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When are these copies to be printed?

Mr. GORMAN. Immediately.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Immediately?

Mr. GORMAN. As soon as the joint resolution is passed and the work can be done.

Mr. VAN WYCK. How long is Francis Wharton to be employed as editor if the work is to be printed immediately?

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will state from information which I have from Mr. Wharton and from the State Department that the greater part of the work, certainly the first volume, is ready to go to press; and if Congress shall pass the joint resolution promptly the work will be certainly in readiness for use by the next session of Congress.

The provision of the Printing Committee covers the ordinary rule of 1,900 copies, and the distribution is provided by regulation of law. Then an addition is provided for; and this aggregation at a dollar a volume for the two volumes would make something like or very nearly $12,000. The exterior limit has therefore been reduced lower than a dollar a copy. I have not thought the Senate would regard it very important whether the exterior limit was $10,000 or $8,000, as the editor exacts no provision except what shall be satisfactory to the discretion and responsiblity of the representatives of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from New York, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska, one question in regard to this work, if it does not in point of fact embrace very many subjects not otherwise obtainable except in a fragmentary way?

Mr. EVARTS. It embraces many subjects not accessible at all. It has been spoken of as a mere compilation. It is an arranged and accommodated expression and presentation of the whole area, not only in diplomatic matters but in the conventions that from time to time have occupied the interests of this country since the Revolution. It is a book which every Senator and every Congressman would wish to have, and it is only by favorable circumstances that we are able to get out such a work at all.

It is impossible to introduce into the councils of the State Department a stranger, however qualified, as an editor, because he has to examine not only what he puts in and is fit for publication but to see what is to be excluded by reason of private obligations. You can not find in the routine of employés, however respectable, in the Department of State a man qualified for this service except by peculiar circumstances. It is not only that he must have the intelligence, but he must also have the experience and the love of work, for it is a very great and laborious work, and a work done as conscientiously and thoroughly by Mr. Wharton, outside the constant occupation of his time in that Department, as any person entitled to the confidence of the community or of Congress could do it.

Mr. BUTLER. The work I understand requires great discrimination on the part of the editor.

Mr. EVARTS. It does. When an exterior limit is named and there is a complete mastery of a proper compensation reserved to the two Houses, why should it be very important to say whether it is $10,000, or $9,000, or $8,000? The work can not be published except by authority of the Government. It can not be prepared except by its authority. It is in great part prepared and ready to be published, and the State Department is especially desirous that it should be accelerated.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him a question for information? Has it been the practice of the Government to furnish our ministers and consuls abroad with some recognized authority on international law for their guidance, and if not, in what manner have they decided questions that might possibly arise of which they would be obliged to make a settlement?

Mr. EVARTS. It is only I think to a limited extent that the Department has done so; and it must have been for the most part under the appropriations for contingent expenses of foreign relations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There has been some recognized authority before?

Mr. EVARTS. No doubt. I suppose Wheaton or Lawrence has been in the hands of our ministers, and should be; but we have no such book as this, because no such book is in existence. This is not a book of international law, but it is a history of the international action of our Government in its dealing with foreign nations both in the direct form of diplomatic affairs and in our conventions for the settlement of disputes from time to time.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, if the Senator from New York will pardon me, that the book when printed will be the property of the Government.

Mr. EVARTS. Entirely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Neither volume is printed yet, I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is the first volume prepared?

Mr. EVARTS. One volume, as I imagine, is ready to go into the press.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When was that prepared? Was it prepared before Mr. Wharton came into the State Department?

Mr. EVARTS. I do not know how much he has done since.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then for the second volume of course he will be continued as editor while he is Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. EVARTS. As I have stated, if the Senator from Nebraska will do me the honor to attend to what I say, the work can not be done by any one, as I consider, who has not proper access to the archives of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. If it is done at all, it must be done in this way.

Mr. EVARTS. If it is done at all, it is to be done in this way, and it can not be done unless a qualified officer in the employment of the Government can do it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand, if I am correct, that the idea of the publication of this digest did not spring from any branch of the Government in the first place.

Mr. EVARTS. It sprang from the State Department entirely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When this was first mentioned, if I recollect aright, it was that this was an enterprise on the part of Mr. Wharton, the same as any other enterprising lawyer would make a digest of certain branches of the law; that it was a project on the part of Mr. Wharton to prepare this digest for publication, and in order to increase the revenue, or the certainty of its becoming a success, it was thought best that the Government should subscribe for so many volumes. That is what I understood in the first place.

Mr. EVARTS. The original form was of acquiring the book by the Government at a fixed purchase. An objection was raised. The Senator will remember perhaps that the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Illinois and those more familiar with the rules and regulations and the government of printing had some objections. All those objections have been met. This is now a printing by the Government of a work under the inspiration of the State Department and its recommendation, and Mr. Wharton's only relation to the subject is that he shall receive from the Government so much for the work as these committees of the two Houses shall determine.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was only asking in that view of the question to show the necessity for the work as a public service. I suppose the idea, as I explained before, originated with Mr. Wharton; that Mr. Wharton, being a distinguished and celebrated lawyer, felt a pride to form a digest, and that primarily it started there; and in order to strengthen the publication and make it a success it was proposed that the Government should do this work after it had been started. That is what I understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the rule under which the Senate is proceeding, that debate is limited to five minutes and only one speech by each Senator.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That means, I suppose, that other Senators have not occupied any time. I think other Senators have used up the time. I was only desiring to ascertain what the facts of the case were.

Mr. EVARTS. Let us have it disposed of.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate joint resolution No. 58 will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MATTER.

The bill (S. 1079) to regulate the rate of postage on fourth-class matter was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

ESTATE OF RUDOLPH LESCHOT.

The bill (S. 2101) for the relief of Edward G. Thompson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Rudolph Leschot, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The bill (S. 1884) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics, arising under the eight-hour law, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. MAHONE. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not consider it under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule the bill will go over, objection being made.

Mr. BLAIR. It is understood that it loses nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It goes over without prejudice.

JOHN FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John Fletcher, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, $3,450, for loss of cattle, while in the employment of the Government of the United States, in the year 1870, by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, April 13, 1886.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is a long report; perhaps the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] who made the report can explain the bill more briefly than by reading the entire report.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know that I can. It is a case where in the delivery of beef by a contractor for the Government the cattle were seized by these Indians. At that time there was a law in force, as I understand, which gave indemnity out of their appropriations in the case of such seizure.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the bill provide for indemnity?

Mr. HARRISON. It says it shall be paid out of any appropriation made for these Indians.

Mr. LOGAN. It is all right then.

Mr. DOLPH. When did the depredation occur?

Mr. HARRISON. It was in November, 1870.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the provision of the bill read which provides that it shall be taken out of any money appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay to John Fletcher, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, $3,450, for loss of cattle, while in the employment of the Government of the United States, in the year 1870, by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an appropriation out of the Treasury merely.

Mr. DAWES. That is all proper enough. It will only add to the Indian appropriation bill so much money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DAWES. They have no funds.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. No; the appropriation might be just as well expressed in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained a little more.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is right that the bill should pass and that the money should be paid; but I simply say that it is idle to charge it over to Indians who have got nothing to charge it against.

Mr. HARRISON. This is to be paid out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know, but it is merely appropriated from the Treasury. There is no Indian money.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be that there is an appropriation.

Mr. DAWES. I remember the case very well. The money is properly due, but there are no treaty funds that are liable to pay it, and it must come out of the general appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this money is any more due to this claimant than the money that has been recommended for payment to the forty-five hundred other claimants for Indian depredations? I am not objecting to the bill; I think it is right and that the money ought to be paid, but I should like to know why this is to be made an exception and the other bills to pay such claims are not reported which have gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I did not report the bill. So far as I have by very diligent inquiry in committee examined the claims which have been referred to it, this claim is not any more meritorious than some but a good deal more meritorious than others. Just which ones of the list that is now before the committee it is more meritorious than, or which ones it is less meritorious than, I do not know; but that it is a meritorious claim I am quite satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF LUCIEN GOYAUX.

The bill (S. 567) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, submitted by Mr. SPOONER April 13, 1886, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 567) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

This committee reported favorably a bill, of which bill S. 567 is a copy, at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and also at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, at which last-named session the bill passed the Senate.

The committee adopt the report submitted through Senator CAMERON at the Forty-eighth session, which was as follows:

"In August, 1862, Lucien Goyaux resided at Baton Rouge, La., and was engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling saddles, harness, and other goods usually kept in establishments of that kind. Col. Halbert E. Paine, colonel of the Fourth Wisconsin Infantry, was at that time in command at Baton Rouge. Soon after the battle of August 5, 1862, at Baton Rouge, Col. Halbert E. Paine, by Special Order No. 5, 1862, directed Maj. Frederick Frye, of the Ninth Connecticut Infantry, to collect horses and equipments to mount patrols detailed from the different regiments, and to take possession of such property as was necessary for that purpose and for the supplying of ambulances and transportation teams.

Under and in pursuance of said order, Major Frye, on the 12th of August, 1862, took possession of Mr. Goyaux's store and his stock of saddles, harness, &c., contained therein.

On the 6th of October, 1862, a board of survey, constituted under Special Order No. 45, of the Department of the Government of the Gulf, consisting of Col. H. E. Paine, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers; Lieut. Col. O. W. Lull, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Capt. William Roy, Twenty-first Indiana Volunteers, was appointed by order of General W. T. Sherman, and directed to assemble at Camp Parapet on Thursday, October 6, 1862, at 10 o'clock a. m., to take proof, appraise, and report upon the stock of harness, &c., belonging to L. Goyaux, alleged to have been taken for the use of the forces of the United States by order of the commanding officer. This board assembled pursuant to the order, and on the 4th of January, 1863, reported to the commanding general that they had attended to the duty assigned them, and had taken all the testimony offered by the claimant, Goyaux, as well as the testimony produced upon the part of the United States, and that it appeared from such testimony that Goyaux was the owner of the stock of goods, and that he was loyal to the United States, and they recommend the payment of $1,845, the value of the goods taken and used by the Army. This allowance was approved by Brig. Gen. W. T. Sherman, commanding.

Subsequently, on the 6th of March, 1863, the matter was again investigated by a court of inquiry under Special Order No. 6. This court recommended that the claimant should be paid the sum of $1,545.

The following are the items allowed the claimant by the two boards:

11 sets of harness	$330 00
30 saddles	400 00
72 bridles, girths, and surcingles	150 00
150 whips	100 00
Saddlery hardware	250 00
13 saddlebags	50 00
51 collars	75 00
1 wagon	60 00
1 dray	60 00
3 bales of moss, taken and used for hospital purposes	50 00
Total	1,545 00

In 1863 Goyaux presented his claim to the War Department for payment. It was investigated, and on the 23d of September, 1863, Chauncey Smith, the Solicitor of the War Department, made a decision thereon. He states as follows:

"Upon the claim of Lucien Goyaux I have the honor to report that in my opinion the loyalty of the claimant is fully established, and that he is justly entitled to a part, if not the whole, of the claim, but there is no appropriation out of which he can be paid by the Department."

Goyaux died November 20, 1871. He was a native of France, and it appears that his widow and children did not know that he had ever become a citizen of the United States. The widow and children of Goyaux caused the claim to be presented to the French and American Claims Commission, but upon investigation it was discovered that Goyaux had become a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1857, and, consequently, he being an American citizen, the French and American Claims Commission could not adjudicate the claim. The claim was cognizable before the Southern Claims Commission, but Goyaux died a few months after this commission was established, and it is satisfactorily shown that his legal representatives had no knowledge whatever that the claim could be considered by the Southern Claims Commission until long after that commission expired by limitation of law.

The original claimant, Goyaux, was diligent in asserting his claim.

We are satisfied that the property hereinbefore described was taken pursuant to the order of Colonel Paine, the commanding officer; that it was adapted to the use of the Army, and that it was actually used by the Army. We are also satisfied that it was of the value of $1,545.

We therefore report back said bill, and recommend that it do pass.

There is no sufficient evidence upon which the committee is warranted in assuming that the persons named in the bill sustain the relation to the deceased claimant therein indicated, and the committee think therefore that the appropriation should be made to the legal representatives of Lucien Goyaux, deceased, rather than to specific persons. The committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "Julia Enclin, as the widow, and with François Enclin and Leon Helvin, as the tutrix of Emma Goyaux, minor child," where they occur in the fourth, fifth, and sixth lines of the printed bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the legal representative," and by inserting after the word "Goyaux," where the same occurs in the sixth line of said bill, the word "deceased," and that when so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I wish to say is that we had a Southern claims commission, which confessedly had jurisdiction of this species of claim, and which existed for many years, and the time for the presentation of claims there, I think, was also extended, though I do not remember about the particulars.

The objection I have to this bill is not on the merit of what the committee find, for if they are correct in their facts the case would have been a meritorious one; but the difference between this claimant and the people who did go before that commission is that the claimant is heard here on ex parte testimony without the capacity to cross-examine witnesses or go into any judicial investigation. That is escaped by the circumstance stated that these people did not go before the commission, and they did not go because they did not know about it. They were bound in point of law, as this claimant was a citizen of the United States, to know that Congress by public law had provided a public tribunal where the rightfulness of such a claim could be established in a judicial way and the interests of the Treasury protected by the cross-examination of witnesses upon all material points.

I think it is extremely dangerous to do this sort of thing, I am bound to confess to my friend from Wisconsin who reported this particular bill, and we have been led into doing this same sort of thing before this time. But I only wished to put in my own, as I know, perfectly ineffectual protest against opening up cases which that commission could have tried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Vermont to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I merely state my objection to the bill; I do not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the second word, "to," the committee report to strike out all down to and including the word "child," in line 6, as follows:

Julia Enclin, as the widow, and, with François Enclin and Leon Helvin, as the tutrix of Emma Goyaux, minor child.

And to insert the words "the legal representative;" and after the word "Goyaux," in line 6, to insert the word "deceased;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the legal representative of Lucien Goyaux, deceased, the sum of $1,545, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the same being for hospital stores, vehicles, harness, and saddlery taken from said Lucien Goyaux, deceased, at Baton Rouge, La., for the use of the United States Army, during the war of 1861.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. GAMBLE.

The bill (S. 505) for the relief of William J. Gamble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William J. Gamble, late of Company K, Second Arkansas Cavalry, $125, in payment for running-gear of a six-horse wagon furnished by him and used by the United States Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, April 13, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 505) for the relief of William J. Gamble, having had the same under consideration, beg respectfully to submit the following report:

This claim is based on the following certificate, which is on file in the Third Auditor's Office, to wit:

LA GRANGE, TENN., August 11, 1863.

This is to certify that the running-gear of a six-horse wagon belonging to W. J. Gamble, private of Second Arkansas Cavalry, was taken to replace the running-gear of one Government wagon broken down, unable to travel. Said Government wagon was in the possession of Capt. R. B. Owen, assistant quartermaster, Springfield, Mo., on the march from Northeast Arkansas to Springfield, Mo., under the command of Col. J. E. Phelps, Second Arkansas Cavalry.

GEORGE MORLEY,
Lieutenant, Assistant Quartermaster Second Arkansas Cavalry.

Witness to the above:

JOHN E. PHELPS,
Second Arkansas Cavalry.

The above certificate is the whole case.

The proofs show in addition that said wagon was taken from claimant as above, for the use of the United States Army and used by the United States Army, about the 25th of May, 1864, in Carroll County, in the State of Arkansas. It was a new six-horse wagon, in good running order, and was well worth $125, and claimant had given that price for it a short time before it was taken.

The only question that can possibly arise in the case is, Why did he not present his claim to the Southern Claims Commission, or some other tribunal having jurisdiction of the case? The answer is, that he and his attorneys, relying upon the long-established practice of the Third Auditor's Office of paying all vouchers regular in form on presentation at the Treasury Department, did not present the claim to the Southern Claims Commission, as might perhaps have been done.

On October 8, 1874, the voucher was presented to the Treasury Department for payment. The Second Comptroller says, in disallowing the claim, October 6, 1875, "It should have been presented under the act of July 4, 1864." Acting on this suggestion the claimant then presented his claim under that act, but the Third Auditor, in a letter of December 29, 1879, refused to allow the claim to be considered under that act, saying, "The claim does not come within the act of July 4, 1864."

By these decisions, contradictory of each other, and agreeing only in rejecting the claim on technical grounds, the claimant is left wholly remediless, unless Congress will grant relief.

The case presents a strong instance of an appropriation of private property for public use. It was taken to replace the running-gear of a Government wagon broken down, unable to travel. The facts are certified by Lieutenant Morley, quartermaster of the regiment, and Colonel Phelps commanding officer of the regiment. The claimant's loyalty can not be doubted. The papers are on file in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, his claim being No. 35250. Therefore, your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the same sort of thing like the last case, where the evil of not having a judicial investigation as to the loyalty of the claimant, &c., is manifest enough; but I suppose it is perfectly useless to try to stop the passage of such a bill. I only want to put in my protest against it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONTANA TERRITORIAL COURTS.

The bill (S. 503) relating to the supreme court of Montana Territory, and providing for the establishment of judicial districts in said Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 3, after the word "that," to insert "hereafter;" in line 5, after the word "justices," to strike out the word "and;" and in the same line, after the word "quorum," to strike out the word "and;" so as to read:

That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of Montana shall consist of a chief-justice and three associate justices, three of whom shall constitute a quorum; they shall hold their offices for four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified; they shall hold a term annually at the seat of government of said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendmendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "law," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And each judge, after assignment, shall reside in the district to which he is assigned.

So as to make the section read:

That said Territory shall be divided into four judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each district of the Territory by one of the justices of the supreme court, at such time and place as may be prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLISION SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (S. 4) to permit the owners of certain vessels and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon to sue the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the owner or owners of any American ship or vessel engaged in or belonging to the United States merchant-marine service, and the owners or underwriters of the cargoes laden thereon, and the owners or underwriters of any property on board thereof, may, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to, sue the United States in any United States district court in which the parties so suing, or any of them, may reside, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such courts, for any damage, loss, or injury to such ship or vessel, or her owner or owners, or to the owners or underwriters of any cargo laden thereon, or of any property on board thereof, arising from or attributable to the mismanagement of any vessel owned by the United States, or to the negligence or want of skill of those in charge thereof, by collision; and the said district court is hereby authorized to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such injury, loss, or damage, if any shall be found due, against the United States, in favor of such owners or underwriters, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in the admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal that now exist by law in civil cases in which the United States are a party: Provided, however, That this act shall not extend to cases occurring prior to the passage hereof, nor in any case shall any such suit be brought more than six years after the collision shall have occurred.

SEC. 2. That the process or procedure by which such suits may or can be brought, and service on or notice to the United States or its officers shall be made or given, may be regulated by courts of admiralty by rules or orders made therein; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to cause the United States attorney in each district to appear for and defend the United States in any such suit brought in his district.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know why these parties shall have the right to sue the United States and nobody else shall have it? Why shall these particular persons have the right of bringing suits against the United States when other citizens, engaged in other occupations, enjoy no such right or privilege?

Mr. EVARTS. The reason, in the judgment of the Judiciary Committee, after a very careful examination of it, was this: The ordinary rules of admiralty law and the processes for investigating the facts concerning collisions at sea are of a special character; and an ascertainment of the liability of the offending vessel and the measure of that liability can not be properly gauged except through the investigations of an admiralty court.

Claims are made not with very great frequency, because the occurrence of injury by collision with our vessels is not frequent; but when such cases do occur under circumstances that the injured vessel-owners and owners of cargoes feel that by the rules of admiralty they are entitled to indemnity they apply to Congress for examination, as in other claims. The investigation by Congress in any of its Committees of Claims is not easily manageable to get at the truth.

The English Government, pursuing the general principles we have, that that government is not suable at law, has opened its admiralty courts to this mode of investigation for ascertaining and settling the liability of offending vessels of the Government for injuries by collision.

This, as Senators will perceive, has no relation to any other subject than that, that for collisions and indemnity in consequence thereof the investigation by the admiralty courts shall be opened in the ordinary judicial course of proceeding, with proper defense by the United States and with appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States. The committee has had, I think, no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that this was the proper mode of determining whether the Government should or should not be liable, and that the Claims Committees were more than in almost any other class of cases unable properly to deal with such questions. It is not a subject that can properly be determined by the Court of Claims. It was thought that the regular admiralty courts of the country should simply follow the existing law by saying the investigation shall be made in these maritime cases of injury at sea through the ordinary courts having cognizance and having the means of ascertaining the truth.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if this bill does not create a new liability on the part of the Government of the United States? Does it not create a liability on the part of the Government for the negligence of its officers, and is this principle not a new one to be incorporated in the law of the United States?

Mr. EVARTS. It is not a change of the principle, but only a change of the tribunal for determining. Of course if the question whether the Government should be responsible for an injury by collision is held in the two Houses of Congress and their committees, they are masters of that question, submitting themselves to no general rule of liability. Unquestionably this is a provision for a particular condition and to meet a particular mischief. It is a condition of limited extent and an exposure of infrequent occurrence. But I think none will doubt that where the Government vessels have run down at sea and sacrificed property of private owners, of our citizens, where the delinquency has been such as should make private owners of the offending vessel liable, the Government ought to be liable and it must take its recourse of punishment or of restriction in regard to the officers who have led it into this liability. Nor has this Government in the Houses of Congress refused to examine and look into and provide indemnity for cases that are thus held by the Claims Committees.

In a few words, this subject can not be as properly investigated by the Court of Claims, or near as well, as by the admiralty courts. They are always difficult subjects between private parties, and between the Government and the private sufferers, our citizens, it is a difficult inquiry. Under this bill the Attorney-General will direct the United States attorney to defend the Government; the judge is an experienced admiralty judge; there is no prejudice of feeling on the part of jurors, as sometimes arises, by which a suit against the Government may be less carefully regarded than if it were between private parties. If it is an admitted principle that we ought to listen to injuries of this kind, and if they are rightfully administerable by redress, then this is the mode by which the Government can best protect itself against being held on improper principles and without adequate investigation.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, under existing law I do not understand that any liability exists on the part of the Government of the United States for the negligence or wrongdoing of any officer of this Government, and I do not believe that any principle should be incorporated into the law bringing about such a result as that. That would be a wrong for which the officer himself would be liable; but the Government of the United States ought not to be required to select officers who would in no case be guilty of negligence; and if they are guilty of negligence the Government should not be responsible for them in civil damages. She can dismiss from her service and by penalties prescribed punish officers who are guilty of negligence in her service; but to make the Treasury of the United States responsible in damages for the negligence of the multitudes of persons who are called into the service of the United States is introducing a principle which will lead, it seems to me, to very dangerous results.

There never has been, so far as I am advised, more than one case in which Congress has recognized the liability of the Government for the negligence of any officer by which a collision may have occurred, and in that case I was not in favor of it and I never shall vote for a measure of the kind.

The Treasury of the United States has responsibilities enough. The Government is required to exercise care and supervision in the selection of her officers, and when she does that, she does all that the Government should be required to do, and the people of this country should not be burdened with the taxation which follows from making these private claims all chargeable to the General Government.

I do not feel disposed to object to the consideration of this bill at present. Let the Senate act upon it as it sees proper, but, for one, I shall be recorded against such a principle as is incorporated in this bill. So far as the mere selection of the tribunal for the determination of claims is concerned, I have no objection to that; but to the principle of the bill I object, and certainly shall oppose it.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think this bill can pass under the five-minute rule. I therefore ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

NATHANIEL AND DONALD M'KAY.

The bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the claims of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay for further compensation for the construction of the iron-clad monitors Squando and Nauset and the side-wheel steamer Ashuelot may be submitted by the claimants, within six months, to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of the court; and the court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the basis laid down in detail in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

The next business in order on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, April 12, 1886, in relation to the consideration of business in open session.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

THOMAS H. NORTON AND JAMES M'LEAN.

The bill (S. 1256) for the relief of Thomas H. Norton and James McLean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $3,200 to pay Thomas H. Norton and James McLean the excess paid by them on coal entry numbered 1 at Del Norte land office, Colorado, July 10, 1882.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIROMIS H. BELL AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1876) for the relief of Piromis H. Bell, administrator of Marcus A. Bell, deceased, and others, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, to strike out line 17, as follows:

To Mrs. M. E. Hagan, $105.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the following-named persons, or to their legal representatives, the following amounts due on their contracts with the United States, as appears by certified accounts on file in the Treasury Department:

To Piromis H. Bell, administrator of the estate of Marcus A. Bell, $120.
To H. C. Shaphard, $844.80.
To James H. Burgess, $300.
To the estate of James M. Gee, $114.
To Mrs. Penelope Rawlings, $45.

And the said sums shall be in full of all claims or demands arising under the said contracts against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. WYMORE.

The bill (S. 586) for the relief of William H. Wymore was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed by. It is reported adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MRS. HENRIETTA H. COLE.

The bill (S. 380) for the relief of Mrs. Henrietta H. Cole was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 851) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the amendments to that bill be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "single," to strike out "or double;" in line 13, after the word "railway," to insert "by a single or double track;" and after the word "avenue," in line 17, to insert "instead of along Ninth street east; and so much of all acts authorizing the use of said Ninth street for street-railroad purposes is hereby repealed."

So as to make the first section read:

That the act to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, approved July 1, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the said company to lay a single-track railroad, and run its cars thereon, from its present line at the intersection of Four-and-a-half and O streets south along said O street to Water street, and thence northerly along Water street to M street, thence eastward along M street until it shall intercept the present railway of the said company on Four-and-a-half street; and the said company shall also have the privilege of extending its railway, by a single or double track, and running cars thereon, along East Capitol street from Ninth street east, its present terminus, to Eleventh street (Lincoln Square), and thence southward along said Eleventh street until it shall intercept Virginia avenue, instead of along Ninth street east; and so much of all acts authorizing the use of said Ninth street for street-railroad purposes is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 1, to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That said company shall so far comply with the requirements of section 9 of an act to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia, approved July 13, 1868, as to run at least every fourth car northwestwardly bound through to Boundary street via Connecticut avenue, and as much oftener as in the judgment of the commissioners of the District of Columbia the public convenience shall hereafter require: And provided further, That all of the cars which do not run through to Boundary street shall run through Georgetown to the end of the company's line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That should any part of the track extension herein authorized coincide with portions of any other duly incorporated street-railway, the relative condition of the chartered rights of each may be adjusted upon terms to be mutually agreed upon between the companies, or, in case of disagreement, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on petition filed therein by either party, and on such notice to the other party as the court may order.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That whenever the track extension herein authorized coincides with the route of any other duly incorporated street-railroad company, except on Water street and M street southwest, but one set of tracks shall be used by the companies in interest, which are hereby authorized and empowered to use such tracks in common upon such fair and equitable terms as may be agreed upon by said companies; and in the event the said companies fail to agree upon satisfactory terms, either of said companies may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which shall provide for proper notice to and hearing of all parties interested, and shall have power to determine the terms upon which the company herein specified shall be entitled so to use and enjoy the track of such other street-railroad company, and the amount and manner of compensation to be paid therefor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to hear that part of the bill which authorizes new streets to be occupied by this company again read.

Mr. HARRIS. Unless we have the map of the District, or certainly of this city, which has all the street-railroads laid down upon it, it will be difficult to understand this; but I will state in general terms that no additional line has been authorized except where the public necessity demands it, according to the views of the residents in the particular localities and where existing lines of railroad are remote. None of the existing lines verge near the new lines authorized to be run; but here and there a connecting link may be authorized. The bill describes the present streets that are to be occupied by the line, if the Senator chooses to have it reread.

Mr. McPHERSON. I only wanted to have that portion read which prescribes the new streets to be occupied, and that I understand to be included in the amendment offered by the committee. I do not ask for the entire rereading of the whole bill.

Mr. DAWES. Is not this a good bill to go over?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think so. The chairman of the committee and myself and all the committee are very well satisfied with it.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will only tell us where the new road will go, it will be a great relief.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill itself names the streets, and in the committee-room we have a map by which the Senator may see the precise locality of every new line of road.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Tennessee sees that it would not be safe for me to go out into the committee-room. The bill would be passed in the mean while.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course.

Mr. DAWES. I think the only safe way for me is to object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

OBSTRUCTIVE DEPOSITS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

The bill (S. 2157) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York city by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, and making other provisions in connection therewith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. It will require more time than the five-minute rule gives to debate that bill, and I think it had better go over. There are some matters pending in the Committee on Commerce which will, perhaps, require that the bill should have further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

W. H. WARD.

The bill (S. 2158) for the relief of W. H. Ward was announced as next in order.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INQUESTS UNDER NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

The bill (S. 2171) to provide for inquests under national authority was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

W. H. WARD.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw the objection to the consideration of the bill (S. 2158) for the relief of W. H. Ward. I did not understand it.

Mr. CHACE. It is not to extend a patent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection being withdrawn, the bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2158) for the relief of W. H. Ward, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that the Senate Committee on Patents of the Forty-eighth Congress, by virtue of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, referred to the Court of Claims the petition and claims of William Henry Ward (formerly of Auburn, N. Y., but now of Monongahela City, Pa.) against the United States for a shell-molding machine, and also for the infringement and use of his bullet-machine patents; and that two of the claims are debarred judicial consideration by the court in consequence of existing statutes, to wit, section 1069 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, limiting the time within which claims are to be prosecuted before the Court of Claims, and section 3477, relating to the assignment of claims against the United States.

The bill empowers the Court of Claims to examine all the claims of Ward set forth in his petition, nothwithstanding the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to in the preamble, and when the facts have been found by the court to report the same to the Senate Committee on Patents, as provided by the act of March 3, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 666) to create two additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota, and to define the boundaries of the Deadwood land district, in said Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 19, after the word "land-district," to strike out the words "and the land office thereof is hereby located at Chamberlain, Brulé County, Dakota," and to insert the words "the land office for which shall be located at such place as the President may direct;" so as to make the section read:

That all that part of the Territory of Dakota bounded as follows, to wit: Commencing at the most westerly point where the Missouri River crosses the second standard parallel; thence west on said parallel to the twenty-fifth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence south on said twenty-fifth degree of longitude west from Washington to the south boundary of the Territory of Dakota; thence east along said south boundary of said Territory to the Missouri River; thence northwesterly along said river to the intersection of said river with the east boundary line of range 67 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence north along said east line of range 67 to the point of intersection of said east line of range 67 with the second standard parallel; thence west along said second standard parallel to the east bank of the Missouri River; thence up and along said river to the place of beginning, be, and is hereby, constituted a new land district; the land office for which shall be located at such place as the President may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 19, after the word "land-district," to strike out the words "and the land office thereof shall be located at Pierre, Hughes County, Dakota," and to insert the words "the land office for which shall be located at such place as the President may direct;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That all that part of the Territory of Dakota bounded as follows, to wit: Commencing at the most northerly point where the Missouri River intersects the east boundary line of range 74 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence northerly along said east boundary line of said range 74 to the fourth standard parallel; thence east along the line of said fourth standard parallel to the east boundary line of range 73 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence north along said east boundary line of range 73 to the fifth standard parallel; thence west along said fifth standard parallel, and said fifth standard parallel produced, to the twenty-fifth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence south along said twenty-fifth degree of longitude west from Washington to a point where the second standard parallel produced would intersect said twenty-fifth degree of longitude; thence east along said second parallel produced to the Missouri River; thence down and along the Missouri River to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district; the land office for which shall be located at such place as the President may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORMAN THACHER.

The bill (S. 934) making an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle the accounts of Norman Thacher, late a receiver of public moneys at Menasha, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, which were, in line 3, after the word "of," to strike out the words "six hundred and forty-nine dollars and sixty-five" and to insert the words "five hundred and eighty-six dollars and forty-five;" in line 9, after the word "Wisconsin," to insert the words "and as disbursing agent;" in the same line, after the word "sum," to strike out the words "four hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty-five" and to insert the words "three hundred and ninety-nine dollars and thirty-five;" and in line 15, after the word "Thacher," to insert the words "as disbursing agent;" so as to make the bill read:

That the sum of $586.45 be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle the accounts of Norman Thacher, late a receiver of public moneys at the land office at Menasha, Wis., and as disbursing agent; of which sum $399.35 is hereby made applicable to the settlement of his indebtedness to the United States as receiver of public moneys, and the remaining $187.10, balance due to said Norman Thacher as disbursing agent, be paid to him in final settlement of his accounts with the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (S. 1717) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery, a captain in the Fifth Cavalry, United States Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over until the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

WILLIAM H. AKINS AND JACOB D. FELTHOUSER.

The bill (S. 1803) for the relief of William H. Akins and Jacob D. Felthouser was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has not been reported favorably. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The bill will be passed over.

REPRESENTATIVES OF PETER LYLE, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 701) for the relief of the legal representatives of Peter Lyle, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us have the report in that case.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a very long report, and introduces a new principle, to which I shall object. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

ROBLEY D. EVANS AND RICHARD M. GREEN.

The bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Robley D. Evans and Richard M. Green was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, before the word "thousand," in line 7, to strike out "forty" and insert "four," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Robley D. Evans and Richard Mr. Green, out of any money in the United States Trersury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000 in payment in full of all demands for the past and future use by the Government of the United States of their patented invention for bending metal links in the manufacture of cable and other chain, and for which letters patent were issued to them on the 4th day of April, 1882, and numbered 256104, the Secretary of the Treasury receiving from the said Robley D. Evans and Richard M. Green a full acquittance or release to the United States for all claim or demand on account of the past or future use of said patented invention.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to inquire of some one whether these parties are connected with the Government at all.

Mr. CHACE. One of them is a naval officer, and the other is not.

Mr. LOGAN. If he is a naval officer, what right has he to pay for this?

Mr. CHACE. The other party has an equitable claim. Really, under a fair agreement, I suppose they have a claim for $40,000, but the committee reduced it to $4,000. The committee felt that as the Government had used this patent and had benefited very largely by its use——

Mr. LOGAN. What is the name of the naval officer?

Mr. CHACE. Robley D. Evans.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out the name of Robley D. Evans. I have no objection to paying a person outside, but the principle was established years ago——

Mr. COCKRELL. Richard M. Green was foreman of the machine-shop.

Mr. LOGAN. Then neither one is entitled.

Mr. CHACE. He was simply an employé

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I do, if it is a fact that they are both employés of the Government. We discussed that for days years ago, and it was decided by the Senate by a very large vote that persons in the employment of the Government in the Army and Navy were not entitled to compensation for their inventions.

Mr. DAWES. The Supreme Court decided just the other way.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that; and if they want to go to the Supreme Court let them do it. I am talking about the decision of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY S. FRENCH.

The bill (S. 609) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the legal representatives of Henry S. French, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn., to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the net proceeds of 230 bales of cotton taken at Jonesborough, Ga., in September, 1864, by General William G. Le Duc, by order of General Sherman, and turned over to the Treasury agent, and by him sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know who introduced this bill. I should like to have some explanation about it. I happened unfortunately to be at Jonesborough, and I know some little about the condition of things there, and I should like to know something about this case.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There is a short report, the reading of which will occupy only a few moments.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, April 21, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 609) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

From a report made in the House in the Forty-fifth Congress we quote as follows:

"That Henry S. French, of Nashville, Tenn., has for years resided in the city of Nashville; was a loyal citizen during the late rebellion; that in the fall or winter of 1861–'62 he employed one James E. Butler, of Atlanta, Ga., to purchase for him (French) a lot of cotton; that said Butler did purchase 336 bales, and stored the same in a stone warehouse in Jonesborough, in Georgia, about 20 miles distant from Atlanta, and it remained there until after the battle at and capture of Atlanta by the Union forces, about the latter part of September, 1864. The proof shows that a number of bales of this cotton was used by the Federal forces after the battle at Atlanta for hospital purposes; from 5 to 10 bales were scattered and lost, some 9 bales rotted by exposure, and 230 bales taken possession of by one Colonel Le Duc, chief quartermaster of the Twelfth Army Corps of the Army of the Cumberland, and by him shipped to Nashville, Tenn., where he (Le Duc) proves he afterward traced it.

"The claimant states that for several years he was impressed with the belief that this cotton was destroyed, and remained under that impression until after the time prescribed by law for filing his claim before the court organized for the trial of this class of cases.

"Your committee find that a claim for the cotton used for hospital stores was presented to the Southern Claims Commission, and believe that, on the facts shown, claimant should be allowed to prosecute his claim for the proceeds of the cotton alleged to have been sold for the benefit of the United States before the Court of Claims."

Under these circumstances your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. LOGAN. This cotton, if purchased as stated, was purchased in violation of law, and the man who purchased it inside the confederate lines for the purpose of sending it North for sale could have been arrested and put in prison for it; and now to come up here and ask pay for that I think is pretty cheeky. In the first place, although I am not saying that the committee is in fault for that, I do not believe the statement that the cotton was used for the purpose alleged, and I will state the reason why.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. You do not believe the cotton was used for what purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. Hospital purposes. I do not believe it was so used.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This claim is not for that; this claim is for cotton shipped to the North and sold. The bill only provides that pay shall be given for cotton sold and the proceeds of which went into the Treasury of the United States. There is no claim here for cotton used for hospital purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I misunderstood the report. If this gentleman purchased cotton in violation of law, it is a pretty thing to come here and ask the Government to pay for it. According to his own statement, if he purchased it at all he violated the law. No man could go through the lines and purchase cotton without playing between the lines. He must have been a rebel when he was down there and a Union man when he was above.

I have heard enough of this sort of thing in the Senate until to me it is perfectly disgusting for men to come in here and claim for cotton and other things that they purchased and that were taken by the United States Army, alleging that they were perfectly loyal and so on. There is no use in telling a man who was in the army on either side any such stuff as that. A man had to be loyal to our side when he was here, and loyal to the other side when he got there. He was not permitted to go over and buy and sell, as we all know.

These things are frauds on the Government, and I shall object not only to this bill but to everything like it that comes up in the Senate when I am here, for I know it is not correct, and every man on the other side who served in the confederate army knows what I say is true, that a person could not play between the lines unless he was a humbug and a hypocrite.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator, if I appreciate what he has said, misunderstands another fact in the case. This citizen of Nashville employed a man who lived in Georgia to buy the cotton.

Mr. LOGAN. That shows that the citizen in Nashville was playing exactly the game that I spoke of, employing men down there to violate the law to send cotton to him out of which he could make money against the regulations of the Government of the United States. It reminds me of a story which I will tell the Senator, if he will allow me. Our orders were to arrest everybody that did this; and I arrested a man once, when I was at Jackson, Tenn., in command of the western district of Tennessee, for buying cotton in violation of the law. He came to my headquarters and he said he wanted to see me privately. I said to him, "I will talk to you privately." Said he, "Well, I tole you I did buy dat cotton; dat is true; but you know them secesh are all very bad scoundrels." "Well," said I, "I do not discuss that." Said he, "Dat money vot I paid for dat cotton was all counterfeit." [Laughter.] He thought it was perfectly right to cheat those folks, to deceive them by passing counterfeit money on them, and therefore he ought to be excused for violating the law because he had defrauded the other side!

I only tell that story to show a sample of the character of the men who played this game on both sides. The man who would go down to Georgia and buy cotton for a man who was above the lines had to play that he was a confederate, and the man above the line that the cotton was bought for played that he was a Union man. I do not believe in sustaining frauds, and I denounce to-day the majority of the men who are coming here and making these claims as frauds; and you know they are, too. Every Senator on that side knows that they played a fraudulent game.

I am only saying these things to emphasize my views on this subject.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one other misapprehension of his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is out of order. Does he ask unanimous consent to make a statement?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope consent will be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. At the time this citizen of Nashville authorized his agent in Georgia to purchase this cotton he was himself a resident of the Confederate States. Nashville was at that time within the confederate lines. He was, I presume, a loyal man. I believe with the Senator from Illinois that there were not a great many of those down there; and I have no more patience with this class of claims than he has. I have no desire to pay any man who was not loyal during the war, and I have never reported such cases favorably; and the truth is that class of claims has very great difficulty in passing through my hands as a member of the Committee on Claims. But I do believe from the evidence in this case that this claimant was a loyal man; that he lived in Nashville at the time he made this purchase; that he had a right to do it, as the other man was himself a citizen of Georgia, and both were residents of the Confederate States at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. LOGAN. One word, if I may be allowed by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe if it was not for this side of the Chamber—I am sorry to have to say it but I will say it—fewer claims of men who were not entitled to them would go through the Senate than do. I am glad to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I find fewer men on the other side who agree with certain gentlemen here who do not understand matters as they stood during the war, who are pressing claims every day that you and I know are not just and ought not to be allowed. I say to you, and I am free to say, that I do not find as many men on your side of the Chamber who are so sympathetic as to give out of the Treasury of the United States every day money to persons who are not entitled to it as I find on my own side of the Chamber. I am sorry to say it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be stated.

PAY OF GRADUATES OF NAVAL ACADEMY.

The bill (S. 882) to equalize the pay of graduates of the Naval Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over on objection.

EDWIN A. MERRITT.

The bill (S. 1278) to provide for the adjustment of certain accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general at London, for storage and care of the archives at that consulate-general, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who reported that bill, is not present. Let it be passed over. It is a long bill.

SAMUEL KRAMER.

The joint resolution (S. R. 14) authorizing the appointment and retirement of Samuel Kramer as a chaplain in the Navy of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I move that that joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs by the committee's direction.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

The bill (S. 1262) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

EXEMPLIFICATIONS OF LAND PATENTS.

The bill (S. 1962) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment in line 10, before the word "copies," to insert "photolithographed;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 461 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 461. All exemplifications of patents or papers on file or of record in the General Land Office which may be required by parties interested shall be furnished by the Commissioner upon the payment by such parties at the rate of 15 cents per hundred words, and 30 cents each for photolithographed copies of township plats or diagrams, unverified, not to exceed ten copies to any one person, and 25 cents each for all copies in excess of ten, with an additional sum of $1 for the Commissioner's certificate of verification, with the General Land Office seal; and one of the employés of the office shall be designated by the Commissioner as the receiving clerk, and the amount so received shall, under the direction of the Commissioner, be paid into the Treasury; but fees shall not be demanded for such authenticated copies as may be required by the officers of any branch of the Government, nor for such unverified copies as the Commissioner, in his discretion, may deem proper to furnish."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained how it changes the existing law.

Mr. HALE. The Senator who reported the bill [Mr. PLUMB] is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the explanation desired?

Mr. EDMUNDS. How it changes the existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It simply changes the amount required. There is an amount required for these plats that is out of all proportion to the cost. This simply reduces the charges for these copies to nearly what they cost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much per hundred words is it in the bill?

The Secretary read as follows:

At the rate of 15 cents per hundred words, and 30 cents each for copies of township plats or diagrams unverified, not to exceed ten copies to any one person, and 25 cents each for all copies in excess of ten, with an additional sum of $1 for the Commissioner's certificate of verification with the General Land Office seal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough, I should think.

Mr. COCKRELL. Fifteen cents will pay a great deal more than the expense.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. There ought to be some amendment to the title of the bill so as to indicate what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Add: "Regulating fees for exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment to the title will be made if there be no objection.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 780) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FORT BLISS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss military reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "reservation," in line 6, to strike out "in New Mexico" and insert "Texas;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That there is hereby granted to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company right of way 100 feet wide, on such route as the Secretary of War may designate, through the Fort Bliss military reservation, Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding these words:

If said railway shall not be built across said reservation within three years next after the passage of this act this grant shall absolutely cease and determine.

That is to provide that it shall not be a perpetual grant that they can pull up on at any time as a vested right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETH COLVIN.

The bill (S. 677) for the relief of Seth Colvin was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is reported adversely. If there is no objection, let it be indefinitely postponed without reading.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

CHARLES W. BEEMAN.

The bill (S. 826) for the relief of Charles W. Beeman was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an adverse report also. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

OMAHA INDIANS IN NEBRASKA.

The bill (S. 1862) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have that lie over. I want to look at the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator that if that passes at all it ought to go to the House before they take up Indian matters.

Mr. TELLER. From a very hasty examination of the bill I do not think it ought to pass at all in the shape in which it is presented. Neither of the Senators from Nebraska is here, and I think the bill ought to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAWES. Both the Senators from Nebraska are quite anxious to have it passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ABEL J. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 6381) granting a pension to Abel J. Lewis was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] asked that this lie over when it was reached before.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ACCOUNTS OF EDWIN A. MERRITT.

Mr. MILLER. I was called out of the Senate for a few moments, and Order of Business 851 was passed over. There is a report in that case from the Finance Committee. I think there can be no possible objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was objected to, and went over under the rule.

Mr. MILLER. I understand it was objected to because I was temporarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be again reported, but some Senator on the left of the Chair objected to it.

Mr. MILLER. There is a written report in the case, which I think will explain it satisfactorily to everybody.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to withdraw my objection to the bill (S. 1862) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska. It is not the bill that I supposed it was. It is a bill for a different purpose, concerning the same Indians, but not the bill to which I am opposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first entertain the proposition of the Senator from New York, who asks to have Senate bill No. 1278 laid before the Senate again. If there be no objection that will be done.

The bill (S. 1278) to provide for the adjustment of certain accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general at London, for storage and care of the archives at that consulate-general, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the adjustment of the accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general at London, $1,723, disbursed by him, with the approval of the Department of State, for the storage and care of the archives of the consulate-general at London, from June 24, 1883, to and including May 17, 1885.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MILLER April 21, 1886:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1278) entitled "A bill to provide for the adjustment of certain accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general at London, for storage and care of the archives at that consulate-general," have considered the same, and respectfully submit the following report:

That in 1883 Mr. Merritt informed the State Department that the building then occupied in London was to be torn down, and he would be obliged to move his office elsewhere, and asked authority to engage quarters at a cost not exceeding $2,400, an increase of $700. He was instructed that the appropriation was too small to admit of this increase, but prior to the receipt of this reply of the Department he was obliged to make up his mind, and he accepted the terms of certain parties at $2,400 per year; that prior to this correspondence he had asked authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to destroy the great mass of accumulated papers, and was informed that such an action would constitute a penal offense.

That the State Department, on learning the circumstances of the transaction, informed Mr. Merritt that, although the amount agreed upon was in excess of the 20 per cent. on his salary allowed by statute for rent of office, yet they would make allowance for storage rooms (separate from the consular offices) and care, made necessary by reason of accumulated archives. This amounted during the period from July 1, 1883, to May 17, 1885, to $1,723, which was allowed Mr. Merritt by the State Department in the settlement of his accounts, but was disallowed by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Your committee, in view of the circumstances attending this case, make a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The letter from the Secretary of State is appended:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 17, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 1278, to provide for the adjustment of certain accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general at London, for storage and care of the archives of that consulate-general, and requesting a statement of the facts in the case.

In compliance with your request, I have the honor to state that the records of this department show the following facts:

In his dispatch No. 169, of March 24, 1883, Mr. Merritt called attention to the necessity of moving his office, as the building then occupied was to be torn down, and, in view of the increased rents, he requested authority to engage quarters at a cost not exceeding $2,400, or an increase of $700 per annum, to be charged to the storage account. He was told in reply that the appropriation was too small to admit of such an increase.

In his dispatch No. 184, of May 29, 1883, Mr. Merritt states that previous to the receipt of this instruction he was obliged to make up his mind as to the location of new offices, and had deemed it advisable to accept the terms offered by the London and Provincial Fire Insurance Company of $2,400 per annum.

To this the Department replied, under date the 28th of June, 1883, as follows:

"The amount agreed on is in excess of the 20 per cent. on your salary allowed by statute for rent of your office; but as you have verbally explained that owing to the vast amount of accumulated archives, invoices, and other documents belonging to the office which require storage and care, it seems to be advisable and proper to make allowance for storage rooms, which are understood to be separate from the consular offices, to which the 20 per cent. clause of the statute applies."

It may be remarked here that previous to the correspondence referred to the views of the Secretary of the Treasury were requested as to the expediency of destroying the great mass of accumulated documents of ancient date and of no special value, consisting largely of invoices of goods long since shipped, and that officer replied that under the law such a course would constitute a penal offense.

Under the instruction of the Department last referred to, Mr. Merritt rendered accounts from July 1, 1883, to May 17, 1885, being seven quarters one month and seventeen days, at $229.23 per quarter, amounting to $1,723, which were approved by this Department, but disallowed by the Comptroller.

This constitutes the entire history of the transaction.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. A resolution offered by myself was called up and passed over relating to opening the doors for the transaction of certain executive business as it is now called. It went over on an objection interposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I ask now to consider that resolution notwithstanding the objection, and I ask the Senate to allow the yeas and nays to be taken on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia is advised that under the special order——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Five minutes' debate is allowed, and I do not propose to exceed that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order being called for, under the rules the motion of the Senator is not in order under the special rule under which the Senate is acting to-day.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did not agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 1862 will be read, the Senator from Colorado having withdrawn his objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask again whether the Senate can change its rules every day. I ask now whether I can not move to take up the resolution to which I have referred, and ask for the yeas and nays on it? I ask whether that requires unanimous consent? I wish to move to take up the resolution notwithstanding objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have read the order, adopted by the unanimous vote of the Senate two days ago, under which the Senate is acting.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That after the disposition of Senate bill No. 371, the rest of to-morrow and next day be devoted to the Calendar under the five minutes' limitation for debate and subject to objection, which objection shall operate only to pass over the case, retaining its place on the Calendar; and that no motion shall be made to proceed to the consideration of any bill where objection is made to the consideration of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the last clause of that order the motion is not in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. May I ask whether that resolution will go over? Objection can only carry it over one day, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This rule expires to-day, and to-morrow it will be quite in order for the Senator to make a motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Before 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before 2 o'clock.

OMAHA INDIANS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. TELLER. Now let Senate bill 1862 come up.

The bill (S. 1862) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, which were, in line 10, after the word "appropriated," to insert the words "and paid per capita to said Indians;" in line 11, after the word "of," to strike out the word "ninety" and to insert the word "forty-five;" in the same line, after the word "being," to insert the words "one-half of;" and in line 15, after the word "fifty-four," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That said sum shall be paid per capita, in two annual payments of $45,000 each, or that the last one-half be paid in annual installments of $9,000 each, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the bill read:

That in view of the advanced condition in civilization of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, and to enable said tribe to further improve their condition by making improvements upon their homesteads, by the purchase of stock, cattle, agricultural implements, and other necessary articles, and in accordance with their wishes, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and paid per capita to said Indians, the sum of $45,000, being one-half of the last nine installments of $10,000 each unappropriated, and secured to said Indians under the fourth article of their treaty dated March 16, 1854.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN D. FINCHER.

The bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let all the pension cases go over. They always get consideration when the Pension Committee wants it.

ADMIRALS ROWAN AND WORDEN.

Mr. HALE. I ask now to take up the bill that was informally laid aside, and I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. In view of the explanation of the Senator from Maine that there are only two officers to whom this applies, I think the bill should be amended so as to specify those two particular officers who are to be benefited by the provisions of the bill, so that it will not be a general law. If we pass a general law authorizing every officer of the Navy who may have received the thanks of Congress, &c., to have this privilege, we simply invite them all to come here and try to get resolutions of thanks passed by Congress. I believe that in the last six or eight years one or two such resolutions have been passed. I, therefore, ask the Senator to insert the names of these two particular officers in the bill.

Mr. HALE. I will give the names: Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden.

Mr. COCKRELL. Strike out "any officer of the Navy of the United States."

Mr. LOGAN. How will the bill read; that they are to be appointed on the retired-list?

Mr. HALE. That they are allowed to retire.

Mr. COCKRELL. Give the names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed after the word "that," in line 3, to insert:

Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden.

Mr. LOGAN. Read the rest.

Mr. COCKRELL. "Who, upon recommendation of the President by name, has received the thanks of Congress for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, and who has been advanced one grade in consequence thereof, may, after forty years' service."

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out all that refers to receiving the thanks of Congress, and I will state the reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment has not yet been acted on. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I move to strike out all that part which recites the fact that they have received the thanks of Congress; and if the Senator desires to hear the reason I will give it readily.

Mr. HALE. I will make no objection to that.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. The word "has" seems to refer to the President and not to the parties. It seems to read somewhat awkwardly.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, after the word "who," it is proposed to strike out the word "has" and insert the word "have."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee has not yet been acted on, and the question will be put on that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will now be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden, who, upon recommendation of the President by name, and who have been advanced one grade in consequence thereof——

Mr. HALE. I would strike out those words "and who have been advanced one grade in consequence thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to strike out those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. That simply leaves the designation of the officers, so that it will read:

That Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden may be retired from active service by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. "After forty years' service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as the Secretary has it amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden may, after forty years' service, be retired from active service by the President, upon his own application, with the highest pay of the grade to which he belongs.

Mr. LOGAN. "His own application" there refers to the President. Put the word "their" instead of "his," and then probably it will read correctly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read as now amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden may, after forty years' service, be retired from active service by the President, upon their own application, with the highest pay of the grade to which they belong.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say that I do not like the precedent set by this bill, but it is amended so that it will not become a general law, and it is a special favor to these gentlemen who were very distinguished in their service. I do not approve of the principle involved.

Mr. LOGAN. Nor do I.

JOHN M'KERNAN.

The bill (S. 1817) for the relief of John McKernan was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. That is a pension bill. Pension bills get consideration whenever that committee wants. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over and the next bill will be reported.

THOMAS A. M'LAUGHLIN.

The bill (S. 1094) for the relief of Thomas A. McLaughlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "eight hundred and twenty-four dollars and twenty-two cents," and insert "one hundred and fifty dollars;" so as to read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas A. McLaughlin, of the District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150, in full payment for extra work done in the construction of the central gate-house in the distributing-reservoir, Washington Aqueduct, and for loss of material occasioned by turning water into said reservoir before the completion of said gate-house.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. CADWALLADER.

The bill (S. 2166) for the relief of John F. Cadwallader was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John F. Cadwallader $462.75 for services rendered in writing up back records of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE S. FISHER.

The bill (S. 1834) for the relief of George S. Fisher was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. That is adversely reported. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment. After line 9 of section 1 to insert:

And any dividends hereafter made in favor of the home shall be paid to the United States and covered into the Treasury.

There may be other dividends. If so, the Treasury ought to have the benefit of those dividends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, in section 2, line 2, I move to strike out the words "Treasurer of the United States" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Can not the bill be so amended by a word or two as to dispense with that long and argumentative preamble?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall move to strike out the preamble.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the preamble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be necessary to insert a word or two in the bill—the name of the home.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is any necessity for an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on adopting the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

SARAH E. E. PERINE.

The bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE], who makes the report in that case, is absent, and I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under the rule.

PROPERTY SEIZED IN THE UTAH EXPEDITION.

The bill (S. 386) referring to the Court of Claims the claims for property seized by General Johnston in the Utah expedition was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that in lieu of that bill, but not as an amendment to it, Order of Business No. 991, House bill No. 1357, which is a similar bill, now on the Calendar, be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that Order of Business 991 be substituted for the present order of business. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the House bill now to make it in the language of the Senate bill as reported by our committee; and in order to do that I move to insert in line 4, after "property," the words "claimed to have been taken;" and then in line 7, after "expedition," to insert "as well as for property alleged to have been sold to the Government;" so that it will be in the identical language of the Senate bill as reported by our committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps the better way would be to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the exact words of the Senate bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be inserted in lieu of the House bill will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the claims of Joseph C. Irwin & Co. and C. A. Perry & Co., freighters, for property taken and impressed into the service of the United States in the year 1857, by orders of Col. Albert Sidney Johnston, in command of the Utah expedition, be, and the same are hereby, referred, with all the papers relating thereto, to the Court of Claims, for adjudication, on the proofs heretofore presented and such other proofs as may be adduced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained a little.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read:

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, April 28, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 286) referring to the Court of Claims the claims of Joseph C. Irwin & Co. and C. A. Perry & Co., have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

This matter was presented to the Thirty-sixth Congress, and was favorably reported to the House and passed that body, but was not considered in the Senate. From that time it seems to have been presented for attention either in the Departments or in Congress.

Favorable reports have been made in both Houses, and favorable action has been had in the Departments, but a final settlement has never been reached. This bill has been favorably reported to the House at this session, and is now on the Calendar of that body. The facts seem to be as follows:

The claimants, C. A. Perry & Co., state that in 1857 they were merchants doing business in Salt Lake City, Utah; that on August 13, 1857, they started fifty-eight wagons drawn by oxen and five wagons drawn by mules, loaded with merchandise belonging to themselves, from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to Salt Lake. That there were seven hundred and fifty head of cattle, thirty-seven mules, and seven horses in their train. They allege that en route they were overtaken, and their trains taken possession of, by General Johnston, and used for the benefit of the Army, and they claim compensation under the act of March 3, 1849.

That there was some control over this property exercised by General Johnston there seems to be no doubt, but whether it was of such a character as to amount to an impressment under said act is not clear. The transaction was a continuing one, covering two or three months of time, perhaps, and is such a case as could not be examined by this committee so as to do justice to all parties, hence they think the matter should go to the Court of Claims.

Joseph C. Irwin & Co. were freighters, and they allege that their teams and wagons were also taken possession of by General Johnston on the same expedition, and that their wagons, &c., were subsequently sold to the Government, but that they have never been remunerated either for their property impressed, as they allege, nor for the property sold to the Government.

It appears to this committee that under the circumstances of this case that it should go to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

The committee suggest that in line 4 of the printed bill, after the word "property," that the following words be inserted: "claimed to have been;" and also that in line 7, after the word, "expedition," the following be inserted: "as well as for property alleged to have been sold to the Government," and that as amended the bill pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any report from the Secretary of War or any War Office papers from General Johnston about the impressment of this property? The occurrence was twenty-nine years ago.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I did not distinctly hear the Senator from Vermont, but I will state that the report of General Johnston about this transaction was among the papers in the case. There are letters from the Department showing that there was at one time favorable action by the Department. There was quite a long correspondence by the Department relating to this case in the papers showing that when the claim was presented in 1857 it was decided favorably, but was afterward rejected on some technical ground by some officer of the Treasury Department.

The claimants came to Congress and the matter has been pending between the Senate and the House at different times, and the application of the claimants to be heard in the Court of Claims has been favorably reported by different committees of Congress and different officers of the Government. I think there is no objection to the measure from any quarter. The fullest investigation has been asked on the part of the parties. All the facts can be ascertained. The records of the Department have been placed before the committee and fully examined.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does this bill mean that this is to be an adjudication by the Court of Claims according to its own sense of what is fair or on some general principle of law?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should suppose the court would be governed by the ordinary rules of law governing such cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object then if the bill may be amended in that way; and I move in line 11 of Senate bill 286, if that is the one we have now under consideration, to insert after the word "adjudication" the words "according to law."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I presume that would be understood as the meaning of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it says, "on the proofs heretofore presented." I suppose that means the ex parte affidavits or statements submitted to Congress. I do not think we have ever agreed to do that sort of thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will remember that in all these cases the evidence that had been filed in the Departments and before Congress is allowed to go before the court, and they of course give it such weight as it is deemed entitled to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not allowed before the court when you authorize parties to institute suit. If it is a mere reference to the court to examine into the facts and report to Congress, then it would be proper; but this says "for adjudication." It seems to imply that they are not to report to Congress again, but merely to render a judgment against the United States, that is to be paid out of the general appropriation to pay judgments of the Court of Claims. If that be the case, then I am sure that the Senate has never consented that ex parte affidavits should be taken; and that seems to be the effect of this bill, that this is to be a final adjudication, not to be returned, as under the Bowman bill, to Congress. Therefore I move to strike out the words:

On the proofs heretofore presented, and such other proofs as may be adduced.

So as to leave all legitimate evidence, according to the course of that court, to be offered, and no other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Sentor from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This is a claim, as has just been stated by the Senator from Vermont, that has been pending for near thirty years. Of course a great deal of the proof that might have been adduced at that time is now entirely lost, and it seems to me that there will be no wrong done to the Government by allowing the court to take up and consider whatever of evidence has been presented to the Department at different times by these claimants, from the time the claim originated until to-day. It seems to me the Government can not afford to shelter itself behind a technicality and refuse simple justice to a claimant of this character. Where its own tribunal is organized for the purpose of hearing a matter like this, it appears to me there can be no wrong done the Government in allowing the court to consider the whole case and weigh all the evidence that has been accumulated from time to time as this matter has been presented to the Government. The Senator knows that many of the witnesses are doubtless dead. It will be a difficult matter for the claimants to establish by proof that would be to-day obtainable facts which might be shown by papers already in the case; and it seems to me but fair and just that the court should have the privilege of hearing and considering whatever is presented and whatever may be presented in the future.

As this clause provides for considering the case "on the proofs heretofore presented, and such other proofs as may be adduced," it seems to me there can be no wrong done the Government, and it is but a matter of simple justice to allow these claimants to be heard by the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be perfectly true if this was a mere inquiry to be returned to Congress, so that we could judge whether these ex parte affidavits and statements were such as to commend themselves to our impressions. But if you are going to leave this court to determine this case upon ex parte affidavits heretofore presented, as a court of law, and then to say that on the judgment of the court on those proofs the money is to be paid out of the Treasury, then I submit with great respect we depart from every wholesome principle that governs such cases.

General Johnston was an officer high in the Army. He understood his duties. It was by his command and under his direction that it is alleged this property was taken. If it was so taken, his reports to the Secretary of War taking up this property through his quartermasters, &c., will show the fact. If it stands merely upon the pretensions of private persons that this high officer took their property without giving any voucher for it or carrying it upon his books, he being dead, it is an extremely unsafe proposition to adopt to say that we will remit to any court to decide upon the ex parte statements of claimants, and without the report of officers who are said to have received this property and who are now dead, whatever ex parte affidavit they choose to file. If this were a mere matter of inquiry to be returned here, it would be another thing; but I do not understand the bill in that way.

If the Senate choose to turn his bill into a statement that the court shall hear this matter and then report to Congress upon all these papers how they find the facts to be, according to the principle of the Bowman bill, I have no objection; but to remit to this court the final jurisdiction to determine upon claims on papers that have been filed in the Departments is to overset the whole theory upon which we act in protecting the Treasury against unjust and stale claims.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know nothing whatever about this claim, but I avail myself of a reasonable opportunity occasionally to protest against the course of this Government in refusing to allow its citizens to bring suit against it, have their day in court within a reasonable time, and then after the lapse of ten, or fifteen, or twenty, or thirty years objecting to the nature of the evidence which the claimants bring.

Twenty-six years ago it appears, in the Thirty-sixth Congress, these claimants came before Congress with some proof which they have kept laying before us from Congress to Congress. We have put them off until now. They ask that they be allowed to go to the Court of Claims; and now we are insisting that they shall go there in strict accordance with the rules of law. At the very threshold we waive our claim to the statute of limitations if we have any as a Government, but we require that they shall put in such proofs as they could have put in perhaps at the time they first applied to Congress, but which it is obvious they can not find now in nine cases out of ten.

I am perfectly willing they shall go to the Court of Claims as they would have gone to the committees of Congress, and shall carry all their old papers, and that the Court of Claims shall report to us its opinion of the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I agree to; and I withdraw my amendment, and move to add the words:

And report the same to Congress.

So that we shall get what the views of the Court of Claims are.

Mr. TELLER. This case has been before the Committee on Claims and before Congress since 1861, and I do not think there has ever been a question in the Treasury Department about the facts but a question about the law. There are two or three other cases of the same kind that have been pending. I examined these cases several years ago, and thought I could put my hands in the papers or the report I made, but I do not find it.

The fact was admitted that the Government took this property, put it into the service, and used it. That has never been disputed by anybody. General Johnston—I can not find it in the papers, but I venture to say they are on file—so certified that the property was so taken and so used. The Senator from Arkansas tells me there are letters to that effect. I remember that there were letters of that kind, but I can not put my hand on them now because I have not looked at these papers in four or five years. There were several other cases of the same kind.

The question raised in the Department was whether the taking was an impressment within the terms of the act of March 3, 1849. The Auditor held that it was. Mr. Chase held that it was not. Attorney-General Bates held that it was. Mr. Chase succeeded in convincing the Auditor that he was wrong, and the Auditor reconsidered his opinion, which, according to the authorities, commencing with the first volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General and running down to the present time, he could not have done legally and properly. But he took back his first decision that it was within the terms of the act of 1849, notwithstanding the opinion of the Attorney-General.

A case similar went to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims held that it was not within the terms of the act of 1849, and the party lost his case, not because the Government did not have his property, not that there was any question about the facts, but upon a question of law. And there is where these men will come out when the court disposes of this case. It will say that there was no impressment within the meaning of that act, and consequently the Government is not legally liable, and that it is only dealing with the legal liability of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you have the court report the whole case with the proofs and facts to Congress, then we can see whether it is a case of equity or not.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing the court should report the whole case to Congress. I consider it a burning shame that the Government of the United States, declining to allow its citizens to sue it, will hold them off at arm's length, and then, upon a technicality of law, reject them on the ground that theirs is a stale claim, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests. There is not a man doing business in the United States who would pursue the same course toward his fellow-men that the United States pursues toward its citizens who would not be degraded in the eyes of every honest man in the land.

I have examined one case in connection with claims of this class, and, as I said, there never has been a question of fact that the property was taken. That man has been here ever since 1861 pressing that claim, and when his claim came up four years ago I heard a Senator rise on this floor and declare that it was a stale claim and it ought to be received with a great deal of distrust, and that Senator voted against the claim without ever having looked at a paper in the case; and that is the way these claims are disposed of.

You have a Committee on Claims, a capable committee—I am not on it now—a committee that gives these cases careful consideration; and when they come here Senators who will not inform themselves upon the subject, simply because they fear that they may vote for something they ought not to vote for, vote against the claim, and thus the citizens come here year after year until it is a fact that everybody understands that hundreds of ordinary small claims are abandoned by citizens rather than present them against this great and rich Government.

I repeat that I am willing the cases shall go anywhere where the facts may be shown, so that Senators will vote for them. I am prepared to vote for them now, and every other Senator ought to be prepared to vote for them upon the report of the committee. These cases have been reported by committees both of the House and of the Senate, and if I am not mistaken have passed both branches of Congress at some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time is out.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado if he is able to state from his familiarity with the facts in this case whether this property was impressed by Colonel Johnston on his march to Utah or on his retreat?

Mr. TELLER. On his march, if I recollect aright.

Mr. DOLPH. As a matter of history, according to my recollection, Brigham Young issued a proclamation warning Colonel Johnston not to enter Utah with United States troops, and the Mormons fell upon his supply train and destroyed it, and Colonel Johnston was obliged to retreat to the nearest fort, the name of which I forget.

Mr. TELLER. I think the facts will show that the property was taken on the outward trip.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an important consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The property was taken the winter before he reached Salt Lake City at the pass in the mountains on the way going toward Salt Lake City. After Brigham Young had issued his proclamation these goods were taken possession of, or rather put in General Johnston's train, and when he encamped this side of Salt Lake City the property was taken by the Government for the use of the troops in their quarters.

Mr. DOLPH. After the retreat?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No, sir; it was as he was going to Salt Lake City.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the Senator able to state that the property was not captured by Mormons?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. No; it was never in the neighborhood of the Mormons. It was taken possession of by Colonel Johnston.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I have spoken my time. I do not want to object to this bill, but I ask unanimous consent to reply for three or four minutes to my friend from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent of the Senate to be heard. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I ought not to let this matter go even with my amendment without making a word of reply to my friend from Colorado as to the course of the Government of the United States.

I have not so poor an opinion of that Government as he seems to have. The Government has to act through its agents, and its agents are not authorized to violate the law. If any agent of the Government of the United States took property from a private citizen that he had no lawful right to take, that private citizen had an immediate remedy in the courts of law, and he could have sued General Johnston or anybody else who took his property contrary to law. If General Johnston took this property in conformity to law, by the consent of these people, and took it up on his books, or if he did not put it on his books but used it for the Army, the law provided in the appropriations for the Army in that expedition for paying for it.

It is not just therefore to deride the Government of the United States as being mean toward claimants. There is no other government in the world that has a tenth or a fiftieth or a hundredth part of our private claims, for the reason that this Government acts upon the same principle that private people do, and that is, if any man's rights are invaded he has his redress, just as he has now and always has had in this Government. If they are not invaded, and his property has been taken in conformity with law, the law provides for his being paid for it. It is only in cases where contrivances are resorted to, like counting the Indians' cattle by running them twenty times around a hill and counting them every time, so that they last longer, that trouble comes. There is a right and a wrong about this business; but I repeat that wherever there is a right the law has always provided an immediate remedy, and where there is a wrong the law has always provided that the wronged citizen may sue the wrongdoer. Here, thirty years ago, just in that Mormon time—and whether these were Mormon cattle or not nobody knows—this property was taken up.

But I do not want to occupy the time. With the assent of the Senator to my suggestion that this be reported to Congress when we get all the facts examined by the Court of Claims, I shall not object to it.

Mr. TELLER. I will claim the right to say a word. ["Go on!"] The Senator from Vermont is greatly mistaken as to the law, if he is chairman of the Judiciary Committee. That is the very controversy which has been going on; was there any law for the payment, not for the taking? Of course a military officer going through the country had a right to take whatever he found that he thought was necessary for his protection. General Johnston asserted that it was necessary for the protection of his army that he should take in, and he did take in, every freighter that was going out—three, four, five, or six of them—and use their stock for the purposes of the Government to feed his soldiers and haul supplies. Upon that I say there is no question.

When the Senator says that these might have been Mormon cattle, he is doing just what I complain of—going outside of the facts and outside of the record to hunt up something to allege against a claim that is presented here in order to defeat it. There never was any question—I repeat again, with a knowledge of the facts—in the Treasury Department as to the facts. I hold in my hand the report made upon the documents submitted to the Committee on Claims when I was a member of it years ago, by which it appears that the Auditor inquired of the Attorney-General, do these acts fall within the provisions of the act of 1849, so as to make the Government liable? That is to say, it being admitted that General Johnston took this property, its value being admitted, is the Government liable so that these parties can have their pay from the Treasury Department? Attorney-General Bates said, yes. Thereupon an award was made, a matter of record, in one case of $10,500, or something in that neighborhood. Thereupon Mr. Chase said, "You have mistaken the law; the law of 1849 does not cover this case."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see what the law of 1849 was.

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference here now what the law was. It did not cover the case. Thereupon the Auditor reconsidered his award and made an award for $750, not upon the facts—not that there was a dispute as to the facts, but that a certain portion of the property did not fall within the provisions of the law. Then these parties were sent to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims said they did not fall within the provisions of the law, and there they were hung up like Mohammed's coffin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator the opinion of the Court of Claims here?

Mr. TELLER. I have not got it here, but I have read it. I have the Auditor's report here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Court of Claims report will show what it was.

Mr. TELLER. It goes off on a technicality. I am speaking largely from recollection, having had but a moment to look at the case. One of the parties went into the Court of Claims, but was ousted for want of jurisdiction. So the Senator, when he says there is a way for these parties to make their claim against the Government, is mistaken. There never has been any; there is not any now; and they have appealed to Congress year after year, and they will be glad even now of an opportunity to present the facts to the Court of Claims, facts that they have presented to the Departments, and which, as I said before, have never been disputed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator refer me to the act of 1849?

Mr. TELLER. The act providing for payment for horses and other property. It was claimed that cattle did not fall within it.

Mr. HOAR. I have been upon the Committee on Claims, I think, during the whole of my service in the Senate, a service now extending through nearly ten years, and I wish to bear my testimony to the truth of all that has been said by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Connecticut.

The scandals of the English court of chancery, which have been immortalized by the genius of Dickens, do not surpass in wickedness the dealing, not of the American people but of the American Congress, with private claims against this Government. Again and again men come here year after year, Congress after Congress, with claims which when they come to be voted upon find no negative voice raised in opposition they are so clear, palpable, and just; and yet under the provisions of our rules and the rules which prevail elsewhere they are thrust over from Congress to Congress and from year to year. A committee of the Senate investigates them thoroughly, faithfully, and with every temptation to reject a claim rather than to allow it, because to reject it ends it, and to allow it imposes upon the Senator who has charge of the matter the burden of attending to and caring for its passage through the Senate. And some Senator gets up and guesses that the facts are not so or wonders if something else was not the case and makes an objection and the public business takes precedence. That is the history, as thousands of American citizens can bear witness, of claims which men prosecute from youth to age until their gray hairs go into the grave with sorrow.

The party to which I belong reproached its political antagonists a few years ago, as I thought justly, with seeking contrivances to avoid the obligation of the national debt. That national debt was protected by the straight sentiment of the great class of property-owners and creditors in this country; and the men who undertook to escape from its obligations went down before the public sentiment of the civilized world. But the arguments which were made for paying the public debt in fiat money and not in gold were respectable compared with the arguments I have again and again heard used by men in this body and seen used elsewhere in another legislative body to defeat honest and just private claims; and for one I thank the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Connecticut for what they have said.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us dispose of this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I hope the motion will be withdrawn until this case is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. CAMERON. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to discuss this question, nor do I propose to oppose the bill if the claim is honest; but I desire to say one word in response to the Senator from Massachusetts, who accuses this Government of being so very dishonest. He is upon the Committee on Claims, and I should like him to tell me whether or not the report of Albert Sidney Johnston has been before that committee in reference to the taking of this property.

Mr. HOAR. I was not present when this claim was passed on by the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. A letter from General Albert Sidney Johnston stating the facts in this case is among the papers.

Mr. HOAR. I was not speaking in regard to this case, but in regard to the general history of claims.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not objecting to this case; but there are ways of getting at cases that gentlemen on committees ought to look at somewhat before accusing other people of trying to aid the Government in being dishonest. If I was to undertake to investigate this case, the first thing that I should look for would be Albert Sidney Johnston's report, because he was in command of the troops that went to Utah and he had to make a report to the War Department of all the affairs connected with that expedition. In that report must be found a statement of all the property that he took possession of and used for the benefit of the Government, for he was an Army officer of great ability. So it is not necessary to accuse men of opposing a thing when you do not want to get at it in the proper way unless you examine the testimony yourself and find out what it is.

Mr. HOAR. Does the experience of the Senator from Illinois differ with mine in regard to a very large number of cases? He was speaking to-day about two or three cases which he had in mind where that exact thing had happened to constituents of his own.

Mr. LOGAN. I was not speaking to-day of any constituents of mine that I know of; but that does not make any difference. I am not opposing this claim, but I do not propose that it shall go before the country that I object to claims because I do not want the Government to pay its honest debts, for I do desire to do that as much as anybody. But I do object to claims coming up here nearly every day from persons who were within the lines of the confederate armies, on ex parte testimony to prove the loyalty of men when I know it is not true, and I object to men on our side of the Chamber being the leaders in pressing rebel claims through Congress when the men themselves will not do it. I do object to that, and I have done so several times.

I am not objecting to this; but I propose to defend my action in reference to the objection to certain claims. If this is an honest claim, if these freighters went along with General Johnston for protection, under the wing of his army, and their property was taken for the benefit of the Government, you will find the evidence in his report and in the report of the commissary and quartermaster without going outside of it; and it is the easiest matter in the world to find that evidence. I will vote for the claim to-morrow if the reports show that this property was taken and used for the benefit of the Government, and I will vote to pay whatever it is worth. But that is the way to ascertain.

Mr. TELLER. That has all been done.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I say if this has been done I am not objecting to the claim; but I am replying to the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to these things. Where claims are presented there is a way to get at the facts, and let the facts be gotten at in proper form and then the objection will not be made if they are facts. It is the simplest proposition in the world. If these freighters went under the wing of the Army and their property was taken and used for the Army, of course in equity they ought to be paid for it; but you will find the evidence right in the records without using ex parte testimony to establish the facts in reference to it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The evidence in the case is abundant.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt there is some truth in what the Senator from Massachusetts has said about the injustice of the Government; but there is another side of the case that he did not say anything about.

We pass a great many claims that we ought not to pass, and when they have been passed and it comes to the attention of Congress that something of that kind has been done, it undoubtedly occasions a stricture in regard to other claims. A claim has passed this body at this session which I can refer to in a personal way—I do not desire to examine it here—coming from the Committee on Claims, which allowed $4,000 for the timber taken off 120 acres of land in the State of Tennessee during the war, and I have been told upon what I conceive to be good authority that that land was valued at about $1 an acre. Everybody knows that a price of that kind for wood which the soldiers cut themselves on land anywhere in the State of Tennessee not in proximity to a great town was a price greatly beyond what it would have been worth.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator state the location of that?

Mr. HOAR. What case was it?

Mr. PLUMB. A case the Senator himself appealed to me to let pass, and which is now on the Calendar of the other House, or has gone to that House. I remember the Senator got up here, like Joshua commanding the sun to stand still, and asked me to allow that claim to pass, which was one of the claims he has been speaking of now, I suppose; but it is confessed substantially now to be a fraud.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to interpose my denial, on knowledge and belief, of the entire statement of the honorable Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I will furnish the RECORD to the Senator in which he got up here in a stagy kind of way, and wanted the Senate to pass over all other business and pass a certain claim, the one to which I have referred.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he had better furnish the record as to the probable value of that land of which he speaks, because I think he will find that the statement is an entire mistake.

Mr. PLUMB. It did happen, and I will bring the RECORD to convict the Senator from Massachusetts out of his own mouth. I do not say that for the purpose of impeaching his general good judgment, or for the purpose of imputing to him anything that I would not have imputed to me, by any means. I only say that we go in that kind of a way about these claims as to come to cast discredit upon all of them. It is not because we do not pass the good claims alone, but it is because we pass the bad claims. It is because in one way and another we permit claims to go through the Senate, and urge them through, which have no foundation in fact, and by which we have, as I said, produced this stricture in regard to another class of claims. That is, in my judgment, one part of this case; and it has come to be understood, very wisely in some instances, too, that a certain amount of lobbying becomes necessary, and so we have cast a suspicion upon all our legislation in the things we do and the things we do not do.

I do not believe the United States is unjust. I do not believe there is any intention in Congress to be unjust. I do not believe that Congress is unjust. No doubt some claims do get delayed, and in nine cases out of ten it is the fault of the claimants themselves. Who shall say that a claim of this kind, for instance, which has been here ever since before the war, has been delayed on account of the fault of Congress, and not on account of the claimants themselves? Who shall say that in the case of the claim for a boat, which was presented yesterday, which has been pending here, a claim which has been in existence for twenty years, the delay in regard to it comes because Congress has not done its duty?

So far as I am concerned, I am here to object to claims I do not understand, about which I think there is any doubt; and I am no more responsible for the imputation which the Senator from Massachusetts seems to cast upon all those who object to claims which come from the Committee on Claims than he is in his action. I do not believe that either individually or collectively Congress deserves any such characterization. He knows more about the scandals of the chancery court of England than I do. No doubt he picked out the vilest example he could find in the history of all English-speaking governments in order to convict Congress, as he has done before.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the last sentence of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments pending.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the last sentence of the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments pending now.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senator from Massachusetts may be heard.

Mr. HOAR. I do not ask unanimous consent. ["Go on!"] What I wish to say is exactly this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will understand that assent is given for the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I will venture to assert, with a general recollection and knowledge of the facts—and I think the recollection of the members of this body will confirm my own—that a majority of the cases which pass Congress, pass without a dissenting voice when they are reached and come up for a hearing, in either branch, are cases which are six, eight, ten, or twelve years old and which have been presented in due time by the claimants themselves, and have failed because under the rules of this body or the other body they could not get taken up for a hearing in consequence of a single objection. We have passed something like twenty or thirty bills to-day. I do not believe you will find one of them, those that were passed without a dissent in the vote, where the claimant has not been kept by our method of doing business out of justice for a long time past the ordinary statute of limitations which prevails in our States.

The Committee on Claims arrogates nothing for itself which it has not a right, which every other committee has not a right, to claim. There is certainly no lobbying there. Those cases are referred to members of the committee in order; and it is a rule of the committee that if there is any application from the party that his case be sent to a particular Senator, it shall not be sent to that Senator, so as to insure a just and fair examination. Then the reports are scrutinized by the full committee, and it is in very few cases in proportion to the whole that any other member of the committee when they meet for the full hearing has heard or known anything about the case until it comes there.

I undertake to say that the statement which the Senator from Kansas has made about a certain case which he connects with me is not a figment of the imagination. He spoke of a stagy manner. I do not know what kind of a stage he was referring to, whether a two or a four horse stage.

Mr. PLUMB. A one-horse stage.

Mr. HOAR. At any rate I presume that the Senator was expressing his judgment of somebody else, and it would take a very large term to express the judgment of the Senator.

In what I said I meant nothing personal to any particular Senator, nothing personal to the Senator from Kansas. I was saying, and I reiterate what I said, that the effect of our rules and methods of proceeding puts it into the power of single objectors to do an injustice which is unparalleled in the history of free governments.

I will venture to state one case, not perhaps the case of a legal claim, but the case of a well-founded appeal to the bounty and generosity of this Government, for which, I think, nearly every Senator voted, and that is the case of the gift to the owners of the brig General Armstrong who made the gallant defense of that brig. The son of the commander of that brig told me himself I think, at any rate I heard of it when he was here, that when he was a young man and had just studied law his father suggested to him it would be a good way to learn something about the method of doing things to take his application and bring it to Congress. The act was passed when he was an old man past three score and ten.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into a discussion upon the general subject of how much injury is done to claimants, but I acquiesce in the view taken of this subject by the Senator from Colorado. I regard it as a disgrace to the Government and an imputation upon every one of us that claims fail to receive prompt consideration and redress.

In every system of law it is a maxim that justice delayed is justice denied. No more perfect illustration of the extreme error of these proceedings can be found than the bill which is now proposed to be passed. It is stated by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Arkansas, as a matter of record there is no doubt of the fact that this property was taken for public use; that the record is to be found in the Treasury Department; that it has been so decided by the accounting officers of the Department; that it has been the subject of investigation by the Attorney-General; that the facts are all ascertained; and now it is gravely proposed to refer to the opinion of a single judge the ascertainment and verification of facts which are beyond dispute, when by every principle of justice and common sense the remedy should be to pass a bill paying the debt without a moment's delay. I venture to say that no Senator can give a reason why this case should be referred to any other authority than to Congress, with the facts all ascertained and beyond the possibility of denial, and matters of record.

No clearer illustration can be furnished of the injustice of these proceedings and of the delay that constantly attends honest claims than the fact that it is proposed now to refer the claim to a judge to ascertain the facts which are indisputable and which are matters of record and have been so reported by an intelligent committee of this body, and the evidence furnished.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been afraid that the defense which has been made of the Committee on Claims in this general attack upon Congress for delaying the consideration of claims might defeat the consideration of this claim. It certainly will if it is protracted very many minutes longer. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is proper. Indeed, if I understood the Senator from Colorado correctly, the bill in its present shape would probably bring the claimants no relief, because he says the Court of Claims has decided in another case that there was no legal liability. I suggest, therefore, that we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment:

And report the same to Congress.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that there should be an amendment of the title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The title of the Senate bill is right. Let the title be amended to conform with the title of the Senate bill, but adding the words "for examination and report."

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill referring to the Court of Claims the claims for property seized by General Johnston on the Utah expedition, for examination and report."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 286, embracing the same subject-matter, will be indefinitely postponed.

READING OF HOUSE REPORTS.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to offer a resolution to be considered to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

The resolution was received and read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate it is not out of order when a private bill is under consideration to read or refer to a report upon the same made to the House of Representatives during the present Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 10, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 9, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. W. HADDAWAY, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RANGE-LIGHTS, GROSSE ISLAND, DETROIT RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a recommendation from the Light-House Board for an appropriation to establish range-lights at Grosse Island, Detroit River, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate for an additional appropriation for procuring evidence relating to French spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CARSON CITY MINT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Director of the Mint in relation to an appropriation for the United States mint at Carson City, Nev.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a communication from the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury in response to a resolution of the House calling for information concerning trust funds and unexpended balances in the custody of the several heads of Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for sinking artesian wells and constructing irrigating dams and reservoirs on the Navajo Indian reservations in Arizona and New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) making an appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate amendments to House bills of the following titles (on which a conference was asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses); which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo; and

A bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time, and referred, namely:

The bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts—to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railroad companies—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2474) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co.—to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, until Saturday next, on account of important business.

JOHN P. BUSH AND JAMES GRIGSBY.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and Martin Grigsby, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to John P. Bush and Martin Grigsby, doing a distilling business at Glenville, in the county of Washington and State of Kentucky, under the firm-name and style of Bush & Grigsby, the sum of $1,029.34, in full for taxes paid by them for and on account of deficiencies in not producing 80 per cent. of the producing capacity of their distillery as established by law, by reason of unavoidable accidents which occurred during the months of February, March, April, and May, 1875.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out the name "Martin" where it occurs in the title and in the bill and insert "James."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEACH. I think we had better have a little explanation of this.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this is unanimously reported from the Committee on Claims. In the Forty-eighth Congress it was unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and is also reported by the Committee on Claims in the other end of the Capitol. It has been passed upon by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who finds that this amount of money was due to these parties and ought to be paid. The reason it was not paid was because the appropriations made for the purpose of paying these sums of money had been covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. BEACH. It seems that this occurred in 1875. What was the cause of the long delay?

Mr. ROBERTSON. There were two years of limitation before these parties acted upon it under the law. It is all right, I will say to the gentleman, and ought to be paid.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform to the change in the body of the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMALLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States.

Mr. BEACH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I hope the gentleman from New York will allow the bill to be read. I think he will withdraw the call for the regular order after hearing it read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the bill will be read. It should be read at least so that we may know what it is.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is a very meritorious measure, and I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMALLS. I think if the bill is read the gentleman from New York, if he has any heart in him at all, will allow it to be put upon its passage.

Mr. BEACH. It is not on account of the merits of the bill that I object. It is a bill on the House Calendar and is among that class of bills in regard to which I have uniformly objected to their being called up out of their order. I shall therefore be obliged to maintain my call for the regular order.

Mr. SMALLS. Then objection might as well be made to every bill.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by the terms of the joint resolution of the State of Kentucky, approved March 28, 1872, transferring the control and management of the Louisville and Portland Canal to the Government of the United States, it is expressly provided that the right of drainage into said canal is reserved to the city of Louisville; and

Whereas it is reported that the United States engineers in charge of said canal have objected to the exercise of that right on the part of the city of Louisville: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to report to Congress whether, in his judgment, said right of drainage should be conceded to the city of Louisville, and, if not, the reasons therefor, together with such information on the subject as may to him seem proper in the premises.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

A bill (H. R. 116) for the relief of Albertine Cockrum;
A bill (H. R. 308) granting a pension to Mary Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. 3623) granting a pension to William H. Nevil;
A bill (H. R. 3640) granting a pension to James T. Irwin;
A bill (H. R. 3737) granting a pension to John H. Downing;
A bill (H. R. 3831) granting a pension to Charles T. Reber;
A bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to James Dunbar;
A bill (H. R. 3954) granting a pension to Henrietta Fisher;
A bill (H. R. 4023) granting a pension to Caroline Sturtz, widow of Jacob Sturtz, deceased, late of Company G, Twentieth Maryland Volunteers;
A bill (H. R. 4124) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth;
A bill (H. R. 4143) for the relief of Margaret Madden;
A bill (H. R. 4145) granting a pension to Maria Kile;
A bill (H. R. 4163) granting a pension to Dr. William H. Sheffield;
A bill (H. R. 4199) granting a pension to William B. Jacobs;
A bill (H. R. 4226) for the relief of Samuel Kitzmiller;
A bill (H. R. 4382) to increase the pension of John F. Chase;
A bill (H. R. 4386) granting an increase of pension to William F. Clark;
A bill (H. R. 4426) granting a pension to Fannie E. Evans;
A bill (H. R. 4501) granting a pension to Daniel B. Randall;
A bill (H. R. 4552) for the relief of Susan Smith;
A bill (H. R. 5632) granting a pension to William L. McCall;
A bill (H. R. 4642) granting a pension to James Carroll;
A bill (H. R. 4644) granting a pension to Noah B. Brookshire;
A bill (H. R. 4685) for the relief of John A. Orndorff;
A bill (H. R. 4730) for the relief of Mary Murphy;
A bill (H. R. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth McKay;
A bill (H. R. 4797) granting a pension to Robert H. Stapleton;
A bill (H. R. 4868) granting a pension to William Field;

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees, my object being then to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does it require more than a majority vote to dispense with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. A two-thirds vote is required.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope we will have a morning hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to dispense with the morning hour, and ask unanimous consent that after a formal call of committees gentlemen may be recognized to make reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that what the gentleman from Alabama desires is the second hour for the consideration of reports of committees.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; I desire that we shall have the second hour.

The SPEAKER. The motion to dispense with the morning hour does not affect the second hour. If the morning hour for the call of committees is occupied by the House, immediately after its expiration it is in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and if that is agreed to, it does away with the hour for the consideration of reports.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no objection to dispensing with the morning hour, but I desire to retain the hour for the consideration of reports.

The SPEAKER. That is to be determined when the gentleman from Indiana makes the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand it is proposed that the Chair shall recognize gentlemen to make reports if this motion carries?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to dispense entirely with the morning hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana whether it would not be better to allow recognitions of members to make reports.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 62, noes 22.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HERBERT. If the House votes down that motion I presume the regular order will be the hour for the consideration of reports.

The SPEAKER. It will unless a motion be made to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pending the motion I have made, I move that all general debate on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to two hours.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You will only get into trouble by that motion. If you insist upon that, I think you will not get into committee at all.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana had better let the general debate run a little longer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will not attempt to limit debate now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to limit debate.

The question being taken on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, there were—ayes 69, noes 40.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2463) for the relief of H. J. T. Moss;

A bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Frazer; and

A bill (H. R. 1815) for the relief of Ellen Corcoran.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1829) for the relief of the Greensburg Limestone Company, and others;

A bill (S. 1813) to amend the laws relating to patents, trade-marks, and copyrights;

A bill (S. 1793) to confirm the homestead entry of John Waishkey, jr.;

A bill (S. 1730) providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever, and of a method of preventing that disease by inoculation, and to obtain all information possible as to the cause and prevention of that disease;

A bill (S. 1664) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster;

A bill (S. 1591) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward," approved February 14, 1885, so that the same shall apply to the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1527) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy;

A bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico;

A bill (S. 1417) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy;

A bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter;

A bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees;

A bill (S. 457) for the repair of Fort Marion at Saint Augustine, Fla., and the inclosure of the grounds attached to said fort; and

A bill (S. 330) to remit the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning, and to refund the proceeds of the sale thereof to her owners, Edward D. Morris and C. Morris.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CABELL was recognized and yielded thirty minutes to Mr. COMPTON.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, unlike my colleague from the fourth district or my colleague from the sixth district of my State, I admire the courage which induced this committee to place upon the pending bill the particular provision which has been most discussed so far in this debate. I do not propose, sir, here and now, because my time is limited, to answer the speech of ill omen made by my colleague of the sixth district. He will find, I think, when time shall have shown what is the true financial result, that his prophecy has been made in vain and not realized. I think he will find, when the administration shall have performed its duty and this House its duty, that the figures will vary materially from those which he seems to anticipate as the result of the combined action of this House and of the Democratic administration.

In announcing my opposition to the law approved January 16, 1883, known as "an act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," and the rules and regulations made and adopted by authority thereof, I am uttering a sentiment not newly formed, but deliberately entertained and distinctly expressed at least to those whose representative I am upon this floor. And now, sir, in the outset I wish to state distinctly that I yield to no man, high or low, in or out of official position, be he an honest and fearless advocate of the present civil-service system, speaking his honest convictions and representing correctly a constituency, or be he an independent individual citizen speaking for himself and upon his own responsibility, or be he a pharisaical aspirant for notoriety, courting it, because unable to obtain it otherwise, through the hired columns of a newspaper or the bought leaves of a literary magazine, or be he one of that increasing class of wealth-getting or wealth-gotten individuals who, having no time to spare from an elegant leisure, or what they esteem the whole end and aim of life, the accumulation of more money, to devote to the irksome and unworthy task of performing political duties and meeting political responsibilities, delight in assuming virtues they do not possess—I care not who he may be, I repeat, I yield to no man in the entertainment of an earnest, honest, and sincere desire for a thoroughly efficient, economical, and honest administration of the civil service of this Government. Upon the question of how this shall be obtained I declare my conviction that, in my judgment at least, the law and system to which I have referred do not guarantee such, and even if they did it would be done at a cost and sacrifice, as I esteem it, of that consistency with the provisions and genius of the Constitution itself, the true character of the form of government under which we live, and the integrity of the institutions established thereby, that for one at least I should be in opposition to it and favor some plan which would produce the same result and yet be in harmony with the theory of a representative democratic and republican form of government. I speak, sir, not for my party, not as a representative of my party. I am not authorized so to speak. I do claim to reflect the sentiment of those I represent correctly, and do and shall speak only with a due and proper regard for my responsibility to the God who made me and those whom I represent upon this floor. And now, Mr. Speaker, first let me ask how and why a public sentiment ever grew up in this country so pronounced and determined for a radical reformation in the administration of the civil service, so radical and so threatening as to justify the adoption of an experiment so at variance with the previous history, legislation, and accepted theories, as announced by the great political lights of the land, with reference to this subject of civil-service administration as the present anomalous system, created by the law and rules to which I have referred. Sir, let us be honest with each other. Let any gentleman who can, turning to the great debates by the great men who discussed this matter in the early days of the country's history, on and down through that most memorable controversy in which Clay and Webster, Calhoun and Benton, and the other great lights of that time, in the stormy days of Jackson's administration, considered the subject from every standpoint with a view to comparative permanency, honesty, efficiency, and its non-partisan character, point me to any suggestion by any of these great men looking to the establishment of a system embodying the objectionable features of the present law. Sir, every honest man in the country must want an honest civil service, and every honest man in the country, from the hour that it became a matter of public notoriety that the civil service of this Government had become flagrantly corrupt, rightfully demanded reform. Then it was, sir, that political parties, catching the drift of public sentiment, fashioned their platforms to meet the demand, and, as is always the case when a great popular outcry known to be well founded asserts the demands of the people, rival political organizations sought to outstrip each other in the race for popular approval upon this subject. On the one hand the spectacle was presented in every Republican county, State, and national convention of a party which had sown the seed that had produced the whirlwind out-heroding Herod in its merciless denunciation of the very sins this same party had produced and tolerated, and putting to the blush the most piteous professions of the worst conscience-stricken sinner in the agonies of a deathbed repentance, of a purpose to amend its ways and correct admitted abuses if only once again intrusted with power. Alas! words of promise to the ear, to be broken to the hope. How well they were kept is a matter of history known of all men, illustrated most graphically in the conduct of the War and Navy Departments, the star-route service, the Pension Office, and other Departments and bureaus of the Government, but most strikingly, consistently, and pathetically in the kindly caring for of every scoundrel who blackened his soul with perjury and his hand with forgery in perfecting returning-board certificates for Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina in the ever-memorable farce and deplorable fraud of 1876. On the other hand we had the spectacle of a party, in no way responsible for the disgusting condition of the civil service referred to, but, on the contrary, entitled to the credit of having exposed to public view its enormities, instead of standing firmly upon its traditions, professions, and pledges, rushing recklessly into the arena and exerting itself to fasten upon the statute-book such a contrivance. Sir, how shall I characterize it; a mouse-trap, a gambling device, with loaded dice; heads I win, tails you lose, by which, in the event of success, the Republicans had both the law and the offices, and in the event of our success we had the law without the offices?

The very name of the contrivance, in the light of recent experience, was enough to have condemned it in the estimation of Democrats. A commission!—a makeshift to avoid responsibility and flank the Constitution; the same unhealthy and unnatural fungus whether designated electoral, tariff, or civil-service commission. Sir, I have glanced at the causes which led to that demand for reform in the civil service and that temper of an outraged people which created the sentiment which tolerated the present civil-service law and system; and now, sir, as to the law itself. It will not be disputed, I think, sir, that there are those in this country familiar with the organic law and rules of construction who are firmly of the opinion that this civil-service law, in some of its provisions, is not consistent with the requirements of the Constitution. Though not trained in the law or familiar with the application of judicial tests in the trial of constitutional or legal questions, I unhesitatingly declare that for myself, by the light of such intelligence as I am able to bring to the consideration of the question, I can not square the provisions of this civil-service law and the theory upon which it is based with either the letter or the spirit of our organic law. I shall not attempt, sir, to construct an argument in support of my view. I shall content myself with propounding to those who maintain its constitutionality a few questions which they are in duty bound to meet and answer. Article II of the Constitution, in its second section, provides that "Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of the Departments."

Where is the power to create a commission to aid the President or either of the designated repositories in which the power of appointment may be lodged by the Congress to be found? It was attempted in the convention which framed the Constitution to provide for a council to assist the President in conducting public affairs, but it was rejected. Says Curtis in his history of the Constitution:

> The question of an advisory body, with which it was proposed to surround the President to assist him in the discharge of his duties, did not receive the sanction of the convention, but the committee substituted a different provision, which gave the President power to require an opinion in writing of the principal officers in each of the Executive Departments relating to the duties of their respective offices. The plan of a council was rejected, for the reason that the President of the United States was to be personally responsible for his official conduct, and that the Constitution would do nothing even in appearance to diminish that responsibility.

Now, sir, it will not do for an answer to say that this commission has no power of appointment. It is true they have not directly, but the powers conferred upon the commission limit the discretion and choice of the appointing power so effectually as practically to control it. It is doing indirectly as effectually as though clothed directly with the power what it clearly could not do directly under the Constitution. Where in the Constitution is there to be found any authority for the imposition of any limitation upon the rights or privileges of a citizen other than those specified in the Constitution? Article IX of the amendments to the Constitution provides as follows: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." Sovereignty is an attribute of the citizen, and when assumed by government is fatal to the liberties of the citizen. In lieu of the only tests which the executive power should or can of right apply—is he honest? is he capable? is he faithful to the Constitution?—inquisitorial and restrictive tests are applied under this law, destructive of what should be the inalienable right of every citizen—the right to hold office under the Government he supports and to which he owes allegiance. He is subjected to questions of residence, questions of age, and educational tests which as effectually deprive him of his right to participate in the administration of government as though convicted of treason or other high crimes or misdemeanors.

Sir, against such a system, in the name of free government, in the name of justice and equality before the law, in the name of a Constitution made and designed to promote the welfare of all the people, and to prevent and forever prohibit the erection of a favored class; in the name of a confiding people, who when asking for bread have been given a stone, I enter my ineffectual but defiant protest against this anti-republican and undemocratic usurpation of the people's rights. Sir, this whole system is bottomed upon a plausible but vicious theory, namely, that this Government is simply a vast mechanical contrivance to be worked independently of the people by a trained band of professionals, rather than a flexible but effective instrumentality for the protection and benefit of the people dependent for its preservation and character alone upon the affectionate interest and intelligent support of an interested constituency. Sir, I am against this civil-service system because it divorces the Government from the people, and sooner or later, if persisted in, will render the people indifferent to the Government. No device however artfully contrived will ever become an effective substitute for that "eternal vigilance" which alone can guarantee the preservation of popular liberty. In the vigorous and healthy administration of executive trusts no more subtle but deadly ingredient can be injected than a division of responsibility. Responsibility should always be coupled indissolubly and unmistakably with power.

This scheme, pretentious but inconsistent with itself, establishes the absurd proposition of holding the head of a Department responsible for the doings of his subordinates while denying him discretion in selecting them. He and his party are held responsible for the faithful, honest, and efficient performance of the public work, and yet his hands are tied in the choice of his instruments. The advocates of this system are perpetually boasting of the necessity for a "business" conduct of civil administration. The parallel is deceptive and does not hold. What railroad management, what merchant, what bank directors, or business organization of any character was ever weak enough to select its trusted employés from a class of persons indorsed only by a certificate of proficiency from a hired schoolmaster? What reasonable business man ever yet consented to employ or keep as his confidential clerks and bookkeepers men known to be by association, affection, or hire, enlisted heart and soul in the success of his rival across the street? And yet it is claimed that the present system rests upon business principles. The tests applied are either pernicious or inadequate—limitations of age, or technical knowledge of elementary schoolbooks, the ascertainment of the true amount of this sort of knowledge dependent upon the guesswork of a pedagogue for crammer or examiner. Real mental strength, soundness of judgment, practical tact or talent, moral stamina, are as unknown to the appointing power as the secrets of his or her early love scrapes.

In so far as the test required by the law reveal true qualification the appointing power is left as ignorant of the real merit of the party appointed as the Frenchman in Peregrine Pickle was of the sex of the painter in petticoats. The awarding of prize scholarships in the form of salaried offices is not and should not be the business of Government. That system alone is suited to the business and interests of the Departments, which secures those best qualified in acquirement, disposition, and character. Any other is a fraud and a snare. Let the power of appointment rest where the Constitution designed it should repose, and trust to the watchful guardianship of an interested and intelligent public sentiment to see that it is properly and judiciously exercised.

The doors to our governmental offices should not be supposed to be entrances to "infernal regions." We want no triple-headed monster, no Cerberus, on guard there. And, mark the prediction, if kept there either some seductive Republican Orpheus with his enchanting lyre will lull him to sleep, or some Democratic Hercules will drag him in disgrace from his abiding place.

I have said nothing, sir, of the objections which may be justly urged against that feature of the system so offensive to the republican instincts of the people—the creation of a bureaucratic class. I will let another speak for me on this point. Says one representing the opponents of the civil-service act: "They say that it is not desirable to form an official class; that it is not desirable to introduce into this country the stereotyped method and deadly routine of European officialism. They say that where bureaucracy has thoroughly established itself the office-holder has greater difficulty in realizing that the country was not created for him to govern; that he is a servant of the public is not in his thoughts. They say that where men are virtually immovable, save for gross misconduct, they generally become sluggish in the performance of their duties. They point to such an institution as the English post-office, which, during the régime of Rowland Hill, a man who was forced on it from without, exhibited a great degree of life and energy, but which under his successors shows the bureaucratic spirit in perfection, and is becoming as noted for its dullness and lethargy as once it was for intelligence and the spirit of progress. They say: Carry out this examination consistently; apply it, as is done in England, to all branches and grades of the public service, and we shall have in due time here a vast and comprehensive mandarinism existing apart from and presiding over our national life. They point to the intolerable airs which the official classes give themselves in most European countries, implying a definitely established superiority on the part of the functionaries over the citizens with whom they come into contact. They add that however great an evil office-seeking may be to-day, it is, after all, confined to a small percentage of the people, those who by reason of the political services rendered by themselves or their friends consider themselves entitled to some consideration in the distribution of patronage, whereas, if commissioners and examiners are employed to perambulate the country, advertising the public service in every city, town, and hamlet, the number of those whose minds will be more or less unsettled by the thought of perchance obtaining a Government situation will be vastly greater. The picture is not very unlike the reality. They say we have as yet in this Republic but a partial measure of the so-called civil-service reform, but if the time should ever come that the English system should be adopted in its entirety, there can be no question that in the course of half a generation we should have among us an official class such as we do not wish to see. The public business would not be done on business principles, but on departmental principles, something very different. To master the technique, so to speak, of a department, would take some years of application, and nothing would be easier than for the permanent officers to persuade political heads, who might wish to introduce reforms, that the machine was working as well as could be expected, and that to try and make it work otherwise would be throwing everything into confusion." The correctness of this picture is verified here to-day.

Sir, the attempt to impress the American mind with the value and efficiency of this civil-service system by pointing to its success in other countries is a most impotent and unfortunate illustration. Such a plant may be indigenous in such a soil; here it must ever be an exotic. The essential differences in the form of governments make particular forms of administration absolutely incompatible. Sir, I believe the spirit of our institutions is onward, and that it is more consistent with that spirit to look upon the expedients of despotic governments to preserve their integrity as monuments of our triumph, rather than to seek to find materials there with which to reconstruct new fortresses from which to assail the imprescriptible rights of our countrymen. Here all power emanates from the people, and the Constitution, which is paramount to all laws, should secure them against the slightest encroachment of legislative and executive usurpation.

The paramount object of the Constitution is the protection of the equal rights and privileges of all, the few as well as the many. The spirit of despotism is entirely different; erected upon the destruction of the rights of man, its main object is to protect the few as against the many. Hence the policy of separating its officers from sympathy of feeling and interest with the many, creating a distinct class and elevating them above the mass. Our institutions, resting upon the just foundation of popular rights, admit of the mutilation of no privileges of citizenship as a prerequisite for office. The attempt to impose upon the credulity of the American people the merit of methods that flourish under the cruel and intolerant policy of the mandarins, approved by a Bismarck and adopted by aristocratic England, is as stupendous in presumption as any exhibition yet made by the modern "scholar" in politics. Inverted political Darwinism.

I end as I began, sir; I am against the civil-service law as it stands, radically and irreconcilably. I understand full well, sir, how few of those who occupy official positions agree with me, or rather let me say how few are ready to avow their opposition. It may be imprudent in me to do so, sir, but it is not my habit, I hope, to utter aught but my real sentiments, or to restrain that utterance when occasion seems to demand an expression of opinion. I know too, sir, how inconsiderable the effect of my declarations, but they are honestly entertained and fearlessly expressed for what they may be worth. If true and right, as I believe them to be, they will ultimately prevail; if not, let them die and be dishonored, as they should be. Sir, as I understand the politics of my country, I am a Democrat, believing in the traditions, principles, and policy of that party as expounded by Jefferson, Jackson, and Hendricks.

Such is my devotion to that party, so convinced am I that not only the welfare of this people and the salvation of the Constitution and form of government under which we live are dependent for their success and maintenance upon its success, that I would have my right hand paralyzed and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth before I would knowingly utter a sentiment or do an act which I believed would militate against the success of that party. I do not believe that what I have said to-day will so do; and I say to my Republican friends that they need not lay the flattering unction to their souls that because we have the manhood and independence to differ upon questions of mere policy, because we choose to say, some of us, that we prefer that silver should cease to be coined, and others that the coinage should continue, because we differ as to the amount of duty that should be laid upon a particular article or the amount of revenue that should be raised by a tariff, and upon other incidental questions of policy—that therefore we are going to pieces or the party is in danger. We are as firmly united upon the great principles which underlie our institutions, and upon which personal liberty and a republican form of government depend, and as invincible as were the gallant hosts who followed Napoleon at Austerlitz, as unconquerable as the legions who under Wellington at Waterloo defeated his assaults, as fixed and immovable as the gallant band who added the cognomen of "Stonewall" to the name of Jackson, as invincible as the hosts who held the heights of Gettysburg under the now immortal Hancock. [Applause.]

Mr. RYAN was recognized and yielded fifteen minutes to Mr. HITT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Appropriations Committee who framed this bill providing for three great departments of the Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, have discussed and will discuss its many provisions in detail with their usual ability. I am not a member of that committee and shall not enter upon their province. But in this bill there is a provision relating to the civil-service reform—the subject upon which the gentleman who has just sat down [Mr. COMPTON] has spoken, a matter which is not before that committee at all, which they have gone out of their way to attack, but which was a subject of investigation by the committee on which I served in the last Congress, and, having given it much attention, I thank the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] for yielding me a few moments of his time that I may comment upon this extraordinary provision which has been forced into an appropriation bill to nullify the civil-service law. It appropriates the money to carry it on, but the money is not to be available till the Civil Service Commission shall change and break down its rules so as to abandon civil-service reform. I hope that provision will be birth-strangled by being ruled out on the point of order as general legislation injected into an appropriation bill—a rider forbidden by the rules of the House. If it is not, I hope this House, representing the public opinion of the country and the advanced thought of the hour, will have the courage to defeat it by a square vote. But whatever be the result, this discussion must be healthful and will, I believe, advance the cause of this great reform—based upon deep and far-reaching reasons which the more they are discussed and the better they are understood make it more clearly the duty of the Representative to stand by the interest of the whole people to aid in securing a pure, efficient, and in the end a far cheaper service of the Government, to contribute as far as his vote goes to elevate and purify American politics.

Mr. Chairman, it is not for partisan advantage that I oppose this proposition to destroy the civil-service law. Undoubtedly, as a matter of mere partisan policy, it would have been greatly to the advantage of the Republican party to have had all the incumbents of office turned out incontinently as soon as Mr. Cleveland became President; for then, instead of being the quiet host of silent clerks in the Departments they are now without politics, or rather without political activity, few of them even intending to vote this summer, they would have been an active, powerful partisan army scattered through all the townships, restlessly, zealously, and vindictively working to defeat you. We shall lose even their votes, besides all the working power of these active, intelligent, experienced men, most of them in the prime of life and capable of exercising a wide influence.

But this reform is a measure that concerns the whole country and the public good. As such I favor it. It has been tried. It is no longer a speculation, no longer an experiment. It has been for years subjected to the test of trial in other countries, where long before we tried it here it proved, in spite of many social conditions there which we have not here, a successful experiment. In the English home service, in the India service, and under the French Government it has upon most thorough trial been found to be conducive to efficiency, to cheapness, to honesty in the service itself and to purity in public life everywhere. It is the fixed policy among all English statesmen. Mr. Gladstone's administration was defeated night before last, but the clerks in the departments there worked on steadily yesterday. There was not much work done the day after the result of our last election was known and foretold a change of administration.

The discussion of this subject spread to our country last, and thoughtful men were convinced that our system could be improved. I do not say that our civil service has been weak or inefficient. I believe it has been, in the character of the individuals employed, as good as any other; that the clerks who have been employed to do the work of the Government have been generally quick-witted, industrious, efficient. But this has been not because of the political control which interfered with the system but in spite of it; it has been because of the intelligence, the activity, the progressive character of individual Americans everywhere. The duties required in these positions are not extremely difficult, and the men appointed almost always perform them fairly well. But the Government is entitled to the very best. We can have fairly good men by tens of thousands; we can, at the same price, have excellent men, picked men, chosen out of hundreds of applicants, everywhere throughout the public service.

We can have this superior quality of men without paying more—in fact we can have them for a great deal less than we now pay if we will only let them alone, keep them in their places so long as they do the best kind of work. If they are relieved from the fear of being turned out at every election they will be glad to stay at lower salaries. The department clerks in other countries are paid about half, many of them only one-third as high as ours for similar duty, since they have adopted the civil-service reform, and men are not changed for political reasons. We have now a corps of thirteen permanent consular clerks who are paid $1,000 a year for five years, then $1,200 if they prove efficient and worthy, and who can not be removed except for cause. I had a letter from one of them a few days ago, who is filling temporarily the post of consul at a consulate salaried at $6,000. He is a man well known to the State Department to be thoroughly trained and versed in all that relates to the service, far beyond the consuls. He feared he might be appointed consul, and wrote me apprehensively, as one whom he knew at Washington where he had few friends, that he did not want any consulship, however high the salary, with all its political uncertainties.

The railway mail clerks are a finely organized, laborious, and very moderately paid body of men. That is probably the best part of our whole public service. They did their hard work zealously and were content, because, till lately, it was thought the service was comparatively permanent. The recent rapid changes are having a bad effect in all that part of the service of which I have an immediate knowledge. Such changes to put in party favorites are costly to the service. We should work upon the same principle as does the head of a large mercantile house; we should endeavor to get for the people the very best work that we can with the people's money—get good men at reasonable rates and keep them till you can get better. The civil-service law does not prevent any or all from being dismissed, but it aims to take away the motive for wanton dismissal by preventing any one from being appointed except for merit. I can well understand that it is distasteful to men who have come into power with great expectations to be annoyed by the clamors of their disappointed adherents and balked by this law when they propose to reward them. Thus there has come a great opposition and an intense aversion to it which the Democrats before the election did not feel so keenly nor express so bitterly. That opposition has often this session been shown in this House, and now at last their anger at the civil-service law, which the Republicans passed in the last Congress where they had control, the disappointment of place-hunters, the general hatred in the ranks of the Democratic politicians for the whole civil-service reform have resulted in this covert attack upon the law, intended to substantially repeal it and uproot and end all prospect of reform in the civil service of the country.

That great law passed January 16, 1883, and I rejoice that I, with the great body of Republicans then on this floor, had the privilege of voting for it. Among many wholesome and rigid provisions for protecting the service from spoilsmen and securing efficiency in those who were employed to do the Government work, it provided that all persons who desired positions in the Government service might present themselves for competitive examination; that the degree of knowledge and efficiency which they showed should be recorded in a register to be kept by the Civil Service Commissioners, and then wherever a vacancy occurred and there was occasion for the appointment of a clerk in a Department at Washington, or in one of the great post-offices or custom-houses, the chief officer of the Department, post-office, or custom-house needing the new clerk should call upon the Civil Service Commission, who should send the four names highest in grade among those who had been examined, out of which he might choose whom he pleased. No indication was to be given as to whether any of these four persons were Republicans or Democrats. This was intended to secure impartiality and efficiency—to get picked men, tested fairly in advance.

This system has been tried for several years now, and has worked well. Your own Democratic commissioners say it is a great success, and your President commends it. During the last Congress I was a member of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, and I recall the significant fact that when we first met there were but three gentlemen on the committee who were known to be outspoken friends of the principle of civil-service reform. All the others were indifferent or rather averse to it, some regarding it with contempt, some with mere dislike. We discussed the subject day by day. We called for the examination papers in a vast number of cases from the Civil Service Commissioners. We had those gentleman before us—Mr. Eaton, who was not active in politics, and chiefly known for his zeal for this cause; Mr. Gregory, who was a Republican, and Mr. Thoman, who was an active Democrat. They explained to us the practical daily working of the system. We went through the various papers which they submitted to find out whether there was any catch in the machinery by which partisans could be worked into office. Before the first session of that Congress was over every member of that committee, Democrat as well as Republican, was convinced of the excellence of civil-service reform, both in principle and in practice. The committee unanimously voted to bring into the House the bill repealing the four years' tenure of office in order to carry out the principle of the law still further and remove the excuse for changes every four years. I am sorry to say you gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House voted almost solidly against the bill and defeated it. You had not had the same full discussion as your political brethren on the committee. I hope the discussion now will result as healthfully and as favorably for the cause of truth.

Remember, I am not complaining that you turn Republicans out—either the Department clerks or the postmasters or public officers anywhere; but we think it is a fair subject of criticism to point out the execrable manner in which many of the offices have been filled.

Now, what is the practical treatment this great law has had at your hands?

It is a recent and notorious scandal in this city, which has been published widely through the press of the country, that the Department officers manage to evade the spirit of the law by taking the four names thus sent them and referring them to the several Democratic members of Congress from whose districts the persons come to scan their personal history and find out whether they are politically acceptable to them. If none are good working party hacks another batch is tried.

But this is a slow and unsatisfactory way of dealing with the hunger and anger of the horde of place-seekers who are pressing upon Washington, and have been for more than a year; and now it is proposed by this bill to compel the Civil Service Commission when they are called upon for the names of applicants to select from to send not the names of the four who are best qualified but the whole list of those who have passed examination. This will substitute pass examinations for competitive examinations.

What will be the practical result? It is intended to operate in two ways. If any young man of bright mind, education and ambition, but not a good party worker, applies to his Congressman for a place he can get rid of him without offending him. He refers him to the Civil Service Commission for examination, saying that he is powerless to appoint; thus he gets rid of the applicant. Another comes who is a faithful henchman. He tells him: "I can not appoint you directly, but go to the Civil Service Commission examination. You are bright enough to pass it among the crowd, even if you do not stand high. If you are even the lowest among one hundred your name will be sent up with the rest on the list, and I will see the Secretary or Commissioner or chief and will look to it that you are appointed." It is substituting pass examinations for competitive examinations; and pass examinations were the device of politicians to defeat the civil-service reform in the earlier stages of the discussion ten years or more ago. Pass examinations were then tried and were found to be a convenient way of apparently complying with the demands of the country for a better service and practically evading it.

This bill does not abolish the Civil Service Commission in terms. That would be a bold and flagrant violation of the very words of the last platform which the gentlemen on the Democratic side of this House were elected to carry out. Every one of you stumped his district on that platform. No, it allows the commission to exist still; but the money appropriated for maintaining it is not to be available until that commission has so changed the regulations, so broken down the barriers which prevent spoilsmen from placing all their workers, that the civil-service reform is substantially destroyed. Then the money is to be available, and the Civil Service Commission, shorn of all efficiency, will be maintained with full salaries to exist still, but not interfere with the men inside politics. The form of the commission will be kept up, but the machine politician will be given unobstructed sway through all the hundred thousand offices under the President's control. That is the exact scope and purpose of this proposed law, which is slipped in as a proviso in an appropriation bill.

The covert fashion and hollow pretense of enlarging the choice of the appointing power with which this public wrong is proposed to be perpetrated is in exact keeping with the pretension and insincerity which this reform has had to contend with at every stage of its progress. Fourteen years ago, when the general discussion of this subject through the country had begun to shape opinon, the Democratic party inserted in their national platform a long rhetorical flourish in favor of "thorough reform of the civil service," and these pledges and professions were reiterated in the platforms of 1876, 1880, and last in 1884, when the platform was re-enforced by the high professions of Mr. Cleveland's letter of acceptance. He even urged that it be extended to all offices as far as possible. On that they carried the election and came into power, and this is the way they are using power.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. HITT] may have his time extended for five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the House for this unusual courtesy. I was speaking of some professions. How about their fulfillment when the test of action came?

Now some of us during all this time have distrusted the sincerity of these professions which cost nothing and could in no way be tested, as the Democratic party was out of power. We could not fail to observe that the workers of the party everywhere treated these professions as a "good enough Morgan till after election;" that in this House all measures to practically carry out and enforce the reform met the opposition of the great body of the Democratic members; that most of them voted against the civil-service law when we passed it in January, 1883; that they opposed and defeated the bill to repeal the four years' tenure; that when a Democratic leader like Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, made himself too conspicuous by real work to advance the reform he was set aside and his seat in the Senate given to Mr. PAYNE, who immediately announced that the true idea of reform was to "reform the Republicans out and the Democrats in."

But the platform professions and the candidate's reform letters were worked for all they were worth to catch the Mugwump vote, and Mr. Cleveland was elected. Then the millennium was about to dawn. But there was an interval between November, 1884, and the inauguration of March, 1885, when the era of reform was to begin, and that interval was well improved by the politicians. I have no doubt Mr. Cleveland meant well; but the influences upon him were stronger than the man. The constant pressure of able, experienced, intensely earnest partisan politicians soon began to produce results; and Mr. Cleveland celebrated Christmas Day by writing a letter declaring that there was "a class of Government positions not within the letter of the civil-service statute, and many holding such positions have forfeited all just claim to retention because they have proven themselves offensive partisans." This letter made the holiday season of that year joyful to millions of Democratic office-seekers, who soon made the computation that there were over eighty thousand positions in the Government service "not within the letter of the civil-service statute;" and here was a door through which to enter them all.

On the 4th of March Mr. Cleveland entered into possession, and the Cabinet began the serious work of civil-service reform. The new Postmaster-General was one of the most fluent in daily professions of his resolution to "make this a purely business administration, conducted on business principles;"—often repeating the words of the President's inaugural: "The people demand the application of business principles to public affairs." He was rapidly getting ready for business. Local elections were approaching in some of the Western States, and on the 29th of April he issued a letter as Postmaster-General to the Democratic members of Congress from the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Virginia, instructing them in the "action that can be taken in the way of removals," by which "15 to 25 per cent. of the fourth-class postmasters in Ohio might be removed within the next two months and great good accomplished thereby, if our people will adhere to the proposed plan."

What was the plan? "Pick out the most obnoxious and offensive partisans in each county." How was the charge to be proven? He says:

I will require no more proof of partisanship in these selections than the affirmation of knowledge on the part of a Representative or Senator that the person has been an active editor or proprietor of a Republican newspaper printing offensive articles (easily shown by slips), or a stump-speaker, or member of a political committee, or officer of a campaign club, or organizer of political meetings, or that his office has been made the headquarters of political work, or that his clerks have been put into the performance of political duties. Possibly other acts of equal force may be noted in some cases. If the Representative does not know the fact it should be established by the affidavit of some person whom he can affirm to be of unquestionable credibility, or by some documentary evidence.

It was by this cheering call to office-seekers to get ready the load of slanders, by this advertisement for affidavit defamation, that he proposed to apply "business principles" in the reform of the civil service. Was ever Government before brought to such debasement? And from that hour the work has gone on. The Post-Office Department is far the most extensive branch of the public service. Its officers are in every city, every village, every cross-roads in the nation. There are more than fifty thousand postmasters. The mills of slander were set in motion, charges poured in, and the guillotine worked rapidly. Of those called "Presidential offices" nearly one-half of the incumbents were turned out and Democrats appointed in their place within a year. He has sometimes removed a thousand Republican postmasters in a single month. He has removed more in that Department in one day than all the removals in all the Departments during the first forty years of the Government from Washington to Jackson.

The President's chosen personal friend, a renowned machine politician from Albany, in the mean while was conducting the Treasury Department with a rival zeal, but more frank; and the country, which scorns cant and hypocrisy, has evinced more respect for Mr. Manning and his direct methods than all the rest. He went straight to the mark. Mr. Higgins, of Baltimore notoriety, was chosen to conduct reform in that Department and was placed at the head of the work of appointments. Mr. Higgins was chosen for the task because of his extended reputation, which had been earned by very active work in the most discreditable political scandals of Maryland. A distinguished citizen of Baltimore described the appointment of Mr. Higgins to carry out the work of civil-service reform as similar to a choice of the late lamented Boss Tweed to have charge of the public moneys. Mr. Higgins has vindicated his reputation, and in spite of civil-service law hinderances has almost equaled the efficiency of the Democratic Postmaster-General in the rapidity with which he has given out the spoils of office.

The different branches of the great Interior Department have competed in the same race. The Commissioner of Pensions, for example, succeeds not only in those cases not covered by the law, but he knows how to drive four horses between the words of the law. For example, in his testimony given before a Senate committee March 25, 1886, he said:

I have removed as many Republicans as I could with due regard to the expedition of public business. * * * I can state approximately that 90 per cent. of those originally appointed, out of all originally appointed, have been Democrats.

In one list of seventy-seven which he submitted, he coolly stated:

Of those appointed under civil-service rules seventy-two have been Democrats and five politics unknown.

While the President's Cabinet officers and their chiefs have been competing with each other in their zeal to evade or violate the civil-service law and gratify the horde of spoilsmen who have gathered here, the President (good, easy soul), yielding gently, month by month, to the pressure, has at last changed the commission itself and appointed as its presiding officer Mr. Oberly, of Illinois. Mr. Oberly enjoys the reputation in our State of being the most active and efficient Democratic machine politician who has had charge of the State central committee for many years. He is a man whose name is the very type and representative of good old-fashioned Jacksonian politics. He is able, genial, popular—an ideal boss. No man knows better how to work a doubtful county, how to fix primaries, how to manufacture public opinion.

Only last week his resignation as chairman of the Democratic State central committee of Illinois was reluctantly accepted that he might go on with reform here. Reluctantly, for they will miss a master-worker; and it is their second recent bereavement. [Laughter.] Mr. Joe Mackin, the efficient secretary of the executive committee, convicted of forging election returns, has been sent to the penitentiary [laughter and applause], while Mr. Oberly, their chairman, is taken away to Washington and made the head of the Civil Service Commission. [Laughter.] He will not come in vain. No man can sympathize more keenly than he with the gnawing hunger for office that now pervades so many thousands and their impatience at this hindering law. That hunger is great in any political party coming into power, but the marvelous passion that has been displayed recently is new to history. Note for example the statement attributed to the honorable gentleman from the fifth district of Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], that one-third of the 12,000 who voted for him for Congress have applied for office. Every step in this progress has been hindered and made vexatious and annoying by the existence of this civil-service law, the object of so many platform laudations and private execrations; and now the great controlling committee of this Democratic House proposes, by a covert rider on an appropriation bill, to substantially repeal the whole essence of the law itself, and make an end of reform altogether.

That unfortunate, friendless Civil Service Commission has just been notified to leave the rooms it has occupied at the Agricultural Department. Turned out of doors there, while you are seeking its life here, it is hunting temporary shelter in the City Hall. Wait till after the next election and the Republicans will once more give them comfortable, permanent quarters.

Go on, gentlemen; that cause will grow with buffetings. That light can not be put out. Truth is like a torch—the more it is shaken the brighter it shines. The reports of your own officers show its value. The President, feeble in action but sincere, still indorses it. Will you go with him against this insidious proviso? All of our side of the House will vote against it. Will you leave your Democratic President to look for his support in Congress from us in all he does that is right, and only stand by him yourselves on old party questions where he is wrong?

This discussion will awaken a reaction which will be a most emphatic response to what is proposed to be done. The people have recognized the merits of this system all through the North, as the press of both parties largely shows. I believe that the principle of this system will yet penetrate the public mind in the South and even in the great Democratic States, and in the end it will be everywhere conceded to be a good thing that a man who is employed in a Department should attend to his business and should be chosen because he is fittest, not because he is a favorite; that elections should turn upon principles and questions of public policy, and not to distribute clerkships; that a man who is elected to legislate here and who is paid $5,000 a year to attend to legislative duties should not spend ten hours a day begging clerkships at the Departments and trading as an office-broker. [Applause.]

Mr. RYAN. I yield for fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to my friend from Kansas for his kindness. I can scarcely do more than enter my protest against the proposition nullifying the civil-service law that is in this bill. That I do most earnestly.

The civil-service law authorizes the commission to formulate rules at the request of the President, and the rules which have been promulgated by the commission have been approved and ratified by the President. The proviso proposed by the Committee on Appropriations contains two propositions. One is to change the existing law with reference to the ages of persons who may be admitted into the service. The other is to so change existing law that the present rules respecting nominations by the commission to fill vacancies shall be impossible. I ask it to be noted now that the President has the power to modify the rules to any extent consistent with the execution of the law. Rule XVI requires that four names shall be submitted to the head of the Department in which a vacancy exists. The President can incorporate, if he chooses, into the rules now in force the very proposition embodied in this proviso, that all the names on the list shall be sent to the head of the Department where the appointment is to be made.

Therefore this change is to be made, not only against the existing law but against the President as well, and a vote for this proposition in this bill is to my mind a vote of want of confidence in the President of the United States. For, sir, these rules are in reality made by the President. The President has said by the adoption of these rules that he is satisfied with the nomination of four persons to the head of the Department where the appointment is to be made. But the proviso of the Committee on Appropriations requires that all the names from a given State belonging to a certain class shall be submitted, otherwise the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission shall fail.

Now, as I have said, the President can change the rules and embody that provision in those rules if he chooses to do it. The presumption is that he does not want to do it. I presume that his Cabinet has not advised him to do it. That is, his regular Cabinet has not. The kitchen cabinet, I suppose, has. It is evident the President himself is not dissatisfied with the civil-service rules. His regularly organized Cabinet is not dissatisfied with those rules. The chiefs of divisions and bureaus who make appointments have not made any complaints audible to the public ear at least. The only ones that complain of these rules are the members of the kitchen cabinet.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Who are they?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know. But there is always a kitchen cabinet. There are always a certain number of politicians——

Mr. STEELE. Don't you think Mr. ADAMS, of New York, is one of the members of that kitchen cabinet? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. There are always a certain number of politicians who devote themselves to securing appointments, and who unless they are constantly engaged in that work believe they are left out in the cold. [Laughter.]

I say, Mr. Chairman, that no other construction can be put upon this except that which I have given it, that a vote for this proposition by the Democratic majority in this House is a vote of want of confidence in the President of the United States and his Cabinet. It is a vote of want of confidence in the President and his Cabinet because the President has the power to make the change which is made in this proviso, and he has not done so. Now, I believe the President of the United States is a sincere and honest friend of civil-service reform. think he is doing his level best to carry out that law.

Mr. MCKINLEY. But under great difficulty.

Mr. BAYNE. As my friend from Ohio says, "under great difficulty." He and I believe most of the members of his Cabinet are undertaking in good faith to carry out the civil-service policy of the Government. I know they have to resist a great pressure. I can appreciate the power and force of the kitchen cabinet. It is an irrepressible cabinet.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Irreconcilable.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; and irreconcilable and constantly spurred to activity by men seeking public positions. It is always on the go—always on the alert, and can scent a vacancy from afar.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we have a law demanded by the best public opinion of the country and sanctioned by our own experience, as well as that of other nations, why should an effort be made to cripple it, to nullify it? It only reaches about fifteen thousand of the one hundred thousand office-holders. There are still upward of eighty-five thousand appointments that may be made for political ends without violating the letter of the civil-service law. Why should not the fifteen thousand be appointed because they are fit for the places, because they are ascertained to be qualified by a preliminary examination? I submit that the scope of political preferment is quite wide enough. Four names are submitted, and out of those four names the head of the Department is likely to find a man of his way of thinking politically if he insists upon it and chooses thus to ignore the law. It is pretty evident that the present administration is too conscientious on the subject of civil-service reform to suit the majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Why, in the name of common sense and in the name of the great policies and platforms of the parties, shall we deny that which we all voted for, all asserted to be what we believed in, before the election? It is not, in my opinion, a frank and honest method, and in my judgment that provision with reference to age incorporated into this proviso of the bill is put in there as a mere make-weight and make-believe to shield and cover up and conceal the real intention of that portion of the bill, which is simply to get a list of all the names from the States sent to the subordinate officers of the Government upon which the kitchen cabinet can exert its influence and secure such Democratic appointments as it may want.

Mr. FELTON. Have you any objection to the age feature?

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection whatever to the change of age if that was all this provision implied; but with reference to the other provision—that is, increasing the number of names which shall be certified up for appointment—I would much rather decrease it below four than exceed that number.

I would not make any change in reference to this law on our appropriation bill, because it would be a violation of the rule; and I am content to let the civil-service law be amended upon its own merits. I will vote for a proposition which comes in in a proper way to change the limit as to age, and I do not believe that a single friend of civil-service reform would object to the consideration of such a bill if brought in independently. It can be brought in at any time; but I do object to a scheme which is intended to render this law utterly nugatory and void and without effect upon the appointments that ought to be made and would be made under it if the law and rules of the Civil Service Commission were let alone.

How are these rules working now, Mr. Chairman? The Democrats are getting nearly all the offices under the civil-service administration to-day. Why is that? I read in the public press, as I said the other day, that in Philadelphia Postmaster Harrity had admitted into that post-office sixty men who fell within the provisions of the civil-service law, and the public press of Philadelphia has asserted, and I have not heard a contradiction, that every man of the whole number was a Democrat.

Mr. RANDALL. That shows that they were more intelligent than the Republicans who applied.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well, if the Democrats are more intelligent than their Republican neighbors why are you afraid of competition? Now, I do not mean to be understood as saying that Postmaster Harrity has violated the civil-service law in Philadelphia; but the very fact that the Democratic party is in power induces more Democrats to compete in the examination for these appointments and get them, and the same fact discourages the Republicans——

Mr. STEELE (interrupting). To compete and not get them. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. Fewer Republicans compete for these places, and this is very reasonable in view of the existing circumstances. When the Republican party was in power a larger proportion of Republicans than Democrats would naturally apply for such offices, whereas now the Democrats being in power the reverse applies, while in point of fact the applications under either administration should be about the same; but the reason is that many people in this country have no confidence in the Republican or Democratic administrations with reference to the civil-service policy. Now, if the people knew that this policy was honestly entertained, if they knew it was to be observed, and if they knew that the great parties, when they declared in their platforms that they were in favor of a civil-service reform, meant what they said, it would be otherwise, and Democrats and Republicans would go before the examining boards and stand competitive examinations and they would be appointed irrespective of their political affiliations if found otherwise qualified. That is the condition of things that I want to see in this country; and that is the condition of things that is going to come about. Merit will win; merit must win. It is just as certain as the progress of civilization. Indeed, it is a chief aspect of that progress.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. You admit that this condition of things did not exist under Republican rule?

Mr. BAYNE. I did not admit that, but I said because the Republican party was in power it was quite probable and natural that more Republicans should apply for examination than Democrats, and that because now the Democratic party is in power practically more Democrats apply than Republicans, and also that under a Democratic administration it is altogether probable that a much larger proportion of Democrats are appointed. That is the way the law works now, and now when it is working so satisfactorily apparently to the Democrats, unless indeed they want to shut out the meritorious men in their own ranks and put in political henchmen who can do good work at the polls but who can not stand competitive examinations. I do not see why any Democrat should complain of this law and these rules. It may be and probably is true that the men in the Democratic ranks who can stand the competitive examinations, and therefore get appointments under the law as now administered, as a class would not be recommended by the kitchen cabinet for appointment.

Mr. TAULBEE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he thinks it fair to all applicants for positions that persons in these offices shall be exempted from competitive examination?

Mr. BAYNE. Well, this is the adoption of a new system. In the change of a great system in a Government like this a year is but as a day, and the fact is we have got to bide our time and wait until the policy shall have become permanently established and test its working and ultimate results. Besides, the men who are in and have not been examined have shown their fitness by service. If any of them are not fit and capable, nothing stands in the way of their removal.

Mr. RYAN. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. We have before us for our consideration a bill which appropriates in round numbers twenty millions of dollars. At the commencement of the present session this House directed a committee to formulate a bill for the appropriation of the necessary funds to carry on during the next fiscal year the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of our Government. The result of their labors is this bill to appropriate $20,560,119.42. They having performed their duty, there is but one duty now for the House to perform, and that is, as a court sitting upon the report of referees, to decide as to the propriety of the several amounts recommended by them. If we need the service that they provide for, we should appropriate the necessary amount; and if the amount recommended is too large, we should reduce it; if it is too small, we should increase it.

During yesterday and to-day up to the present hour the controversy on this bill has not been upon this line of policy, but all the eloquence, all the statesmanship of all the gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber that have addressed the House on the subject have been devoted solely and purely to a question that can be better argued through the press and on the stump in the next canvass than on this floor. No analysis has been made of the bill, no attempt has been made to ascertain whether the amount recommended by the committee is the proper amount or in excess of or less than the proper sum to be appropriated.

Men on this floor are too apt to be politicians, and too little apt to investigate, examine, criticise, and analyze a bill presented for their acceptance or rejection. In the short time in which I have the honor of addressing this House by the courtesy of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] I can not of course go through this bill. I can select certain points in it, I can call the attention of the House to certain abuses which have grown up during the years that this country has been growing grander, greater, richer, and more populous; not with the slightest expectation of making any change in the sentiments of any gentleman on this floor, but only with a hope, faint as it may be, that by a publication of the facts, and calling attention to the abuses that have grown up, to create a sentiment behind the members on this floor that will compel men to address their conscience and judgment to the consideration of a measure of this kind or drive them into a deserved retiracy.

We have in this bill a proposition to appropriate $36,600 for the purpose of policing this Capitol, and five thousand more to police the Capitol grounds.

We expended last year for this same purpose $36,800. A Government building, isolated from others, as nearly fire-proof as practicable, and yet we propose to appropriate the sum of $41,600—over $100 per day—for the purpose of policing it and to employ thirty-four men. Will you gentlemen who vote for this bill be able to satisfy your constituents that that sum is necessary? Is there any intellect here so weak as not to know that $10,000 would suffice to discharge that work and discharge it well? And if that be true, is it not plain that $31,000 are taken from the people by this bill to be conferred upon political pets? This, Mr. Chairman, is but one of many such abuses. It is not democratic; it is not republican; it has grown up with the years, and it seems up to the present time no man has taken the trouble to set before this House the exact condition of these affairs.

The next item I find here is for the compensation of members; you can not change that. The next is for mileage; you can not change that.

A MEMBER. The compensation of members ought to be increased. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman on my right says it ought to be increased. I think a better plan might be adopted than the one suggested by the gentleman. I would have a tally kept of the number of hours that each member was present attending to his duties here during the sessions, and I would pay him a proportionate sum of his salary and nothing more. Under such a rule my friend would not get much. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Are you for the eight-hour law or the ten-hour law? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I am for a man addressing himself to the discharge of any duty that he assumes with all the conscience and all the brain he possesses; I am for a member of Congress attending to his duty here and not permitting twenty millions to be voted away by a mere minority.

Mr. TAULBEE. That does not answer my question. I agree with you as to your general proposition.

Mr. PRICE. Then I say to the gentleman that I am in favor of a public officer devoting to the public business all the hours that he can, consistently with proper regard for his physical condition, until that business is well performed. If his duties require eight hours, make it eight; if they require eighteen, let it be eighteen; if the business can be done in four hours, do it in four hours and go home. Now, perhaps, I am an old fogy in these matters, and my friend from Kentucky may not understand me.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think I understand you now. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I would have a member of Congress work for the public as I would have an employé work for me; I would have him apply all the ability God has given him to the intelligent, conscientious discharge of his duty until that duty was completed.

Mr. Chairman, the next item that strikes my eye here is for officers, clerks, messengers, &c. Let me call your attention to it in some detail, and if I can not reform your action here let me at all events call the attention of the country to it. We have on this floor thirty-five nice, bright little boys at $90 a month each, when away back in the country among the people who pay the money which we are voting here three men support their families and pay their taxes on the same wages that one of our little boys get here. Our doorkeepers get equal to $240 per month, and other employés in proportion. I mention this only as a sample. The same thing runs through all these departments. There is reckless extravagance wherever you put your finger, and I venture to say that any prudent business man can take $644,156 of the $1,644,156 that we appropriate in this bill for expenses of the two Houses and do the work, and do it well. If that be true, what excuse can you make to your conscience or your constituents for voting away $1,000,000 in excess of that amount of other people's money?

Are we honest if we do so? If I were hired by you to make your checks and disburse your revenues, would I be justified in paying out on your check to anybody unless for some service that had been rendered to you or some service that was to be rendered? If I exceeded that, would I be honest? And I ask any gentleman here to correct my old-fogy notions by showing me that one rule of morals applies to the employé of an individual and another to the employé of the Government.

The whole sum expended last year for the incidental expenses of the House, not including the pay and mileage of members, was $497,160,06. At the same time that we were making that expenditure here there was an expenditure on the Senate side of $533,000. Thus you have an aggregate of $1,030,000 for the expenses of the short session of the Forty-eighth Congress, in addition to the pay and mileage of Representatives and Senators, which is $2,146,624. You know, I know, God knows that you and I know, that in this way six or eight hundred thousand dollars of the public money is taken and given to persons who have conferred no advantage upon the Government and rendered no equivalent for the money they have received.

Mr. BRUMM. How about the mileage of members?

Mr. PRICE. It does not require a very bright intellect to inject questions into a good-natured man's speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the next item is "furniture and repairs." Tell me, my friends on the committee, why did you put in this $10,000 for furniture and repairs? There is but one reason for it under heaven, and that is that you have been in the habit of doing it year after year. Ten thousand dollars for each branch of Congress for furniture and repairs! Thirty-six thousand dollars for policing the Capitol and $5,000 for policing the Capitol grounds. Sir, there is petty larceny in every provision and grand larceny in the aggregate. [Laughter.] I know gentlemen laugh at this, but let them contradict my statement if they can; show me the figures if you can, or confess that you are recreant to the trust reposed in you, and are voting away money that is not your own and for which you are getting no equivalent.

The contingent fund. How do you expend it? I wrote a line to the Secretary of the Treasury asking for an itemized account of some funeral expenses which are paid out of this fund. You say that is a small business—is it? Where did you get the warrant of law to take other people's money to pay for funeral expenses? I know the sum expended will not ruin this Government; but those who are capable of taking small sums of money and expending them for purposes not warranted by law will be just as reckless in reference to larger sums, and these principles, if followed out a little while longer, will, in my judgment, disrupt the Government, because it is a procedure unjust in its nature; because it is a discrimination against a class; because it has no warrant of law; because when the people understand we are recreant to duty and careless in making expenditures, if not downright dishonest, in what reverence can they hold the law-makers?

In what respect will they hold the law when the conduct of the law-makers is so reckless? When you have weakened the people in their attachments to the law, when you have convinced the rank and file upon whom rests the future of this Government that this thing is as rotten as it is, how are you going to call upon them to defend an administration and a Government in which they have no confidence? Is not that a thing worth thinking of?

Let me repeat that idea and warning, as I see a smile on the countenance of some of my friends. If I were the chosen custodian of certain funds confided to me for a specified purpose and should disburse those funds for any other than that specific purpose would you not consider I was not acting honestly? Then how much better is the case here if while I am custodian of the people's funds in the capacity of a Representative upon this floor and I vote to expend their money for something for which there is no consideration whatever returned to them? Am I less dishonest than in the case where I spent private funds for a purpose different than that for which they were confided to me?

If this expenditure is unjust and dishonest it should not be made. When we hold a postmaster in the backwoods States responsible for the failure to account for a 3-cent stamp, upon what principle of justice can we pass an appropriation of six or eight or ten thousand dollars, as we did only yesterday, to relieve a public officer for a liability to that amount? Those who are false in small things will be dishonest in any greater trust. If we are careless, if not dishonest, in unjustly expending the public money in small matters, they will have less confidence in us in larger appropriations.

Gentlemen will stand here day after day and year after year and talk about civil-service reform to make political capital out of it. There is no political capital in it. No man in his senses blames the Democratic party for having made that promise. For no man in his calm judgment can say he is disappointed in the Democratic party not keeping it. For thirty years the whole pathway of the Democratic party has been marked by the shattered links of broken promises. Of course they did not mean to keep any such promises with the people. Who for a moment took stock in any promises made by them? Who when they made such promises did not expect them to be broken on the very first opportunity, and yet we spend two days in pointing out to the country that this bill practically repeals the civil-service law. Why should you trust a party in whom the people lost confidence thirty years ago?

But I shall speak of the duty of this Congress in expending the money of the people and appropriate it only for the purpose the people intended it should be expended for. Now, I hold in my hand an itemized account of three funerals, the expenses of which were paid out of the contingent fund. I do not expect it will make you better men, but I do wish the people to know of a practice which has grown up here for years in which the money of the people is used. I shall insert them in my speech. They will show the condition of things here which would certainly be characterized in private transactions with very strong language and perhaps send the actors engaged in them to the penitentiary.

I called the attention of the minority of the House a few days since to another expenditure much of this same character, a part of this same method of unjust appropriation of the people's money. It was that a million of dollars last year was appropriated to the retired-list of the Army and Navy. It is a part of the contract with them if they are rendered, by wounds or disease, incapable of further discharging their duty to the Government they are to be placed upon the retired-list, and also at a certain age. Fifty-eight thousand dollars of that is paid to men who are morally disqualified for the discharge of duty; and yet we keep them on the list and continue paying them. You know and I know, every intelligent man on this floor knows, that the compensation of these men is sufficient if they practiced the average economy which is practiced by all the people who have to labor and earn their own living in this country to permit them to lay by enough to provide against old age and sufficient to prevent their being paupers upon the people; and I use the word "paupers" advisedly.

Such men are not paupers if retired for either of the two causes designated in the law, and which were understood when the service was undertaken; but it is the meanest kind of pauperism and we are the meanest kind of sycophants if for any other reason than that embodied in the law we retire these men to fatten upon the hard earnings of the people. Take the agricultural class, the manufacturing class, the working people generally who are toiling for fifteen or sixteen hours a day; they are the men who come nearest to divinity—to create is the attribute of divinity; and these men come nearest to divinity because they create the great wealth of this country. They are the men who take a tree worth $1 on the stump and by their labor make it into boards worth $12, thereby adding to the wealth of the country $11. They are the men who coin the labor of their sons, and their wives, and their daughters for fifteen hours a day every month in the year and every day in the month, and if at the end of the year their financial condition is as good as when they began their work they are doing well.

Every reduction of price of the products of labor affects them and their interests, but these men who are provided for in this bill are benefited by the reduction of wages and the reduction of prices of commodities. In this bill, I do not know how many, but there are items for the rent of buildings for the use of the Government. I do not know what the total amount is; but the bill is dotted all over by appropriations for the rent of buildings. In this very city we allow a rich corporation to occupy land enough belonging to the Government without the payment of a dollar's rent which, if properly managed, would pay the whole of these rents.

Look at the item appropriating $6,000 for stationery for committees. There are forty-seven committees, and this sum gives each committee $127 worth of stationery. I hazard the opinion that there is not used legitimately by the committees of this House an average of $27, and that this sum is in excess of the needed amount from $4,500 to $5,000.

But I have not time to go over the half-dozen hundred items in this bill, but will say that I have given fair specimens of all, and then hazard the opinion that five or six million dollars less than the appropriation asked for by the bill would pay liberally for all the Government will get by the expenditure of the whole twenty and a half millions.

In the matter of paying members, can anything be more glaringly dishonest than to pay both contestant and contestee in case of a contest?

At the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress we paid a member on this floor $11,000 for less than eleven minutes' service.

The pomp and display of Presidential inaugurations are in bad taste in a Republic, and dishonest to the extent that they are maintained at public expense. As a nation we have come to the place where, without blushing, we gravely talk of the respect that is due to the rank, to the position, and call it statesmanship to be able to approximate closely to the amount of money it will require to carry a county or State for a political party. No place can confer honor on its occupant. The honor or dishonor must spring from the honest effort to discharge the duties of that office or the failure to do so.

Mr. RYAN. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY]—ten minutes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I reserve the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope now, Mr. Chairman, that we can arrive at some conclusion, by common consent, as to the termination of the general debate; and I would suggest that it close at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. to-day.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman if it can not be closed sooner. It is quite late in the session now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be exceedingly glad to name an earlier hour, and if it is more agreeable to gentlemen I will name 4 o'clock.

Mr. LONG. I think if you can get through with it to-day you will be doing well.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want to see the time of the House wasted by political discussions which will prevent important public business being taken up and considered. We are here late in the session, and if those who want to defeat action by Congress on public measures can secure a long debate on every appropriation bill, why of course they can defeat all action.

Mr. RANDALL. In justice to the members of the committee upon the other side it is proper to say that there is no purpose on their part to prolong the debate on the bill. They state that there are many gentlemen who would like to be heard on this provision of the bill, which has caused so much discussion; but I am satisfied that they are reasonable with reference to the time and will agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana to close the debate at 4.30 o'clock to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The other side has occupied twice as much time as this side.

Mr. REAGAN. The real debate, at any rate, will take place under the five-minute rule; and it is too late in the session to sit here and listen to essays on political subjects. I trust therefore that we will close the debate promptly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest 4 o'clock.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let it run until 4.30, as first suggested.

Mr. COBB. I object to extending the time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How is it to be divided if agreed upon?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The other side has already occupied twice as much time as this.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Because they have twice as much to say.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You have had two hours to our one already.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then, as I understand it, you propose to take the remainder of the time, practically; and I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the committee the Chair will state that up to this time the majority side of the House have occupied one hour and forty minutes, and the minority three hours and fifty-five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. We want the entire time fairly divided.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If that be the case it will give our friends upon the left practically the balance of the day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; it is now quite early in the day.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly it would. I understood the Chair to say that this side of the House have occupied three hours and the other side one hour and forty minutes. Now, if you take the difference between one hour and forty minutes and three hours and fifty-five minutes and give it to that side, then divide the additional time that remains between the two sides, it would not give us half an hour.

Mr. REAGAN. What I call attention to is the late period of the session at which we have arrived; and the fact seems certain that those who wish to defeat the majority in the doing of anything by this Congress would be glad to waste time in general debate. If that is their purpose I think such measures should be taken as will prevent it.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing that the other side should have half the time from now on, if they will agree that the debate shall close at 4 or half past 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think it is fair that this side should not be permitted to occupy as much time as the other.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill shall close at half past 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. And pending that, I move that all general debate on the pending bill be closed at half past 4 o'clock this afternoon; and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman will gain nothing by that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You have filibustered against your own committees, and now want on a bill of great importance to limit the debate to one day.

Mr. HOLMAN. While my motion is pending I wish to inquire what gentlemen on the other side ask; if they are not satisfied with the debate continuing until half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the general debate run for the whole of to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will have half an hour for the consideration of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That will not amount to much.

Mr. LONG. Let the debate close at 5 o'clock; and let it alternate between the two sides of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will make my motion that the general debate be closed at ten minutes before 5 o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman to permit me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will do so.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend so that general debate shall be closed at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call the previous question on the motion and on the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me suggest that the arrangement to close the debate at ten minutes to 5 o'clock can be agreed upon without a vote, and thus time will be saved.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has moved an amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I appeal to that gentleman not to insist upon his amendment, so as to save time.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. REAGAN, it was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN to close general debate at ten minutes before 5 o'clock was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate on this bill will be closed at ten minutes before 5 o'clock.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, was recognized and yielded half an hour to Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. LONG. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proceeds, I desire to suggest to the Chair whether an arrangement as to the division of time can not now be made, so as to facilitate the transaction of business. I suggest that an hour and a half be allowed to our side and two hours to the other side.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not understand why there should be attempts to get advantage in regard to time. We ought to be actuated by considerations of equity and fairness.

Mr. CABELL. Any arrangement to be made now should depend on how much time has been occupied respectively by speeches on each side. I am willing that the division of time should be equitable.

Mr. LONG. What I desire is that the point shall be settled, and I think it would be for the relief of the Chair if that were done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] asks unanimous consent that one and a half hours be accorded to the minority and two hours to the majority.

Mr. REAGAN. To that I object.

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the order of exercises has been so frequently changed since it was made up that I have been thrown out of my proper place in the line of this discussion. My honored friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] had some observations he desired to submit, and which it was understood he would contribute before our side of this question was further presented. I submit, however, that it is very proper that the other side of the House should have the closing argument, because the onus is upon them to defend this incongruous provision, to defend a policy which has been denounced by every convention of the Democratic party held during the last decade and by every officer of the Government who owes his allegiance to that party, at least whenever he has been called upon to pronounce an abstract proposition or advocate a theory upon the subject of civil-service reform. Theory, however, is one thing, practice quite another.

I am gratified to observe that my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is supremely happy in the contemplation of the fact that the Democratic party has, with reference to reform in the civil service, been able in a very small measure to redeem the profuse promise it has persistently and continually made to the country during the last ten years. The gentleman has comfort in the contemplation of the fact that right here in the presence of the administration the Commissioner of Pensions has been able, and is able to-day, to point out a few spared monuments of his political mercy, a few worthy men upon whose heads he has not yet visited his political wrath.

I am aware that some gentlemen on that side of the House conceive it to have been a mistake to spare anybody; and touching the point of observance of the law by the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, I want to say to the gentleman that the fact that that officer knows that in making appointments the line was evenly drawn by him between the two political parties shows that he clearly meditated the perversion of the spirit of the civil-service law; since, as my friend knows perfectly well, if there is anything shut out by the civil-service law from the knowledge and consideration of the appointing power in making appointments from the list of names placed before him, it is the religious and political opinions of the applicants for appointment.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I ask the gentleman a question? How did Commissioner Dudley find out as to his?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Whenever the Democratic party is arraigned for any shortcoming, they find solace, and what seems to them an ample vindication, in the fact that at some time in the long ago the Republican party has been guilty of the like delinquency in the same behalf.

Mr. SPRINGER. We want you to condemn the Republican party for doing in an aggravated way what you now charge against the Democratic party.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is due to the Republican party that we have advanced to our present position in this matter of reform, while our brethren on the other side have been and appear to be still lurking about the camp which we left years ago. The gentleman thinks he has found something in the history of the Republican administration that will authorize him to say, "You did this thing which you now criticise." I am not here to defend any disregard of law on the part of any Republican official.

Our worst practices are the only ones our friends on the other side seem consciously to imitate.

I am here to insist that it is the duty of this House to vindicate the law, and not to trample it down in the manner proposed by the clause of this bill now being considered, and the gentleman occupies a humiliating position before the country when he offers no better excuse for trampling the law under foot than to say, "You did it also in days gone by." You came into power on the express declaration—not believed by the wise, I admit, but believed by the simple-minded—that you would lift the civil service of this country out of the mud and mire into which it had, as you alleged, fallen, and that officers and employés of the Government should be selected only with direct reference to their fitness to discharge the duties appertaining to the places to which they are appointed and without reference either to their politics or their religion. I am in favor of that kind of civil service, and I protest that this is an attempt, neither wise nor manly, to nullify absolutely the law which you were sworn to observe and enforce.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. When you were Commissioner of Patents did you appoint any Democrats in your office?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did.

Mr. SPRINGER. How many?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I never knew the politics or religion of one individual whom I appointed in that office while I was Commissioner of Patents. [Applause.] And I say further to the gentleman from Illinois there never was a time when the representation of a Democrat whom I knew to be worthy of my confidence as to the qualifications and fitness of an applicant for a position, whether as a skilled laborer or more important place, did not weigh as much with me as the statements of my own political friends made in the same behalf. All I desired to know as to any applicant was whether he was competent or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask a question——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask the gentleman to keep still a moment. When he asks me a question, let him wait till I answer it. When the time arrived when I had to make an appointment to any position coming within the classified service I sent a request to the Secretary of the Interior to notify the Civil Service Commission that there was a vacancy in the list of examiners or of clerks, as the case might be, and on such notification there was sent to me four names. I always held that the best man, the man standing highest in point of qualifications, should be selected without reference to his politics; and I had no trouble about it, because the men knew that I adhered to the letter and spirit of the law.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman name a Democrat he appointed?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No, sir; nor can I name a Republican I appointed, for I do not keep the roster in my memory; but I know the general course of my action in that bureau.

Mr. MORRISON. I can name a Democrat that the gentleman from Ohio appointed, a nephew of my friend General Merritt and the son of a distinguished Democratic member of the senate of the State of Illinois. The gentleman appointed him for me, and I have had a good deal of trouble in keeping him in.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of course I do not know what trouble my friend may have had in keeping his appointee in since I left, but I say again that, acting under the obligations of the oath which rested upon me, I asked neither the politics nor the religion of any man who applied for an appointment, but only the question, "Is he fit for the performance of the duty to which he is to be assigned." I believe my successor pursues the same course as to the classified service.

I know not what the course of other men may have been, nor was I concerned to know.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this House places itself in a humiliating position before the country when it seeks in this manner to nullify a statute which is the outgrowth of the knowledge, the patriotism, and the wisdom of this Republic gathered in the school of experience during the last century—a statute which embodies a principle to which nine-tenths of the intelligent, patriotic people of this nation are thoroughly devoted.

I have been induced to go into this subject ahead of the time and out of the order, I had designed, and, having entered upon it, I wish to call attention to the witness borne in regard to it by men who are authorized and competent to speak for the Democratic party. I am not here to engage in any personal political controversy with my Democratic friends.

If this country prospers that prosperity is for all of us. The reverse is equally true. Good administration is for the benefit of my children as well as yours. Wise and sagacious appointments inure to the benefit of all. The blessings of good government do not confine themselves to the homes of Republican citizens or to those of Democratic citizens. In regard to the object and intent of this provision which you now seek to adopt, let me stop to say that I will not stultify myself, nor will I pay so dubious a compliment to any gentleman upon the other side of the House as to affect to believe that any man upon this floor who ranges above the point of sanity thinks that this provision has any other intent, aim, or purpose than to remove the barrier that now stands between the appointing power and the arbitrary selection by him of his partisan friends; that it has any other office than to break down the wall which now protects the non-partisan applicant, the man who seeks an appointment upon his merits, and not simply because he is a hustler in a ward or an active bummer in a township.

The object of this proviso is very plain, and I see on the other side of the House a smiling, good-natured face, which breaks into a broad grin when any other view is taken of it. [Laughter.]

One of Shakspeare's characters is made to say: "He takes away my life who takes away the means by which I live." So, gentlemen, you take away the life of this Civil Service Commission when you take away the means by which it lives. The appropriation which is required to enable the commission to discharge their duty under the law and secure its beneficent results to the people, is by this provision made available only on condition that the President, with the co-operation of the Civil Service Commission, shall violate the letter and spirit of the law which he and you, gentlemen, are by the oaths you have taken bound to uphold.

I read the clause in order that all may observe its exact purport. After making the needful appropriation for the commission, this proviso is added:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If we break down this "barrier," what will become of those "bums" that you had there in Cincinnati and that you paid with that "good" greenback money that you took from under the seat of the carriage?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no doubt that the question the gentleman propounds seems to him pertinent. It evidently comes flush up with the top of his ability in that direction. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, President Cleveland came into power upon the promise to the people that he would observe in all respects not merely the letter but the spirit of the civil-service law. You gentlemen are charged with a like duty, for the country had and has your promise to uphold the President in faithfully enforcing that law. That was your promise; here is your performance. What has been the experience of this country under the civil-service law? What is the testimony borne by the President as to its operation? I wish to say at this point that I do not forget that it is written, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people;" and I believe it is our duty not only not to speak evil of our Chief Magistrate, but that it is our duty to stand by the President and to uphold his hands, for, whether he be a Democrat or whether he be a Republican, he is the President of this whole people, charged with executing the laws so that they operate equitably throughout the whole country.

I have no doubt of the seriousness, the candor, and the honesty of the utterances of the President which I am about to read to the House, in which he bears testimony to the effects of the civil-service law. I read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of the Civil Service Commission for the year ended on the 16th day of January last.

The exhibit thus made of the operations of the commission and the account thus presented of the results following the execution of the civil-service law can not fail to demonstrate its usefulness and strengthen the conviction that this scheme for a reform in the methods of administering the Government is no longer an experiment.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] dissents from the President's view. He said yesterday that this law is a mere experiment; but, sir, there is abundant evidence that it is something more, it is a fixed reality; it has borne excellent fruits in the administration of the civil service of this country, and as the President says has passed beyond the domain of experiment, and when the gentleman bears testimony otherwise it is the office-seeking fellow behind him whose opinion he is echoing, and not his own. The President continues:

Wherever this reform has gained a foothold it has steadily advanced in the esteem of those charged with public administrative duties, while the people who desire good government have constantly been confirmed in their high estimate of its value and efficiency.

Mr. President, to whom are you writing? To the House of Representatives, whose Committee on Appropriations is here, and to-day, by this means seeking to strike down the policy professed devotion to which recommended you to the confidence of the American people, and I may say of the world.

Says the President, "* * * the people who desire good government have constantly been confirmed in their high estimate of its value and efficiency."

That is testimony to the value of the law which his partisan friends in this House are attempting to destroy. The logic is that they do not "desire good government."

Did gentlemen note the evidence I am now offering before they charge that this law is a mere experiment? Had they consulted these utterances by men authorized to speak for them before they testified against the law? But what else does President Cleveland say? I read on:

With the benefits it has already secured to the public service plainly apparent—

Except to those who will not see or hear, I interpolate—and with its promise of increased usefulness easily appreciated, this cause is commended to the liberal care and jealous protection of the Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 25, 1886.

Mr. President, behold in this provision the care and the zealous protection which your party friends in this House are bestowing upon the system of civil service, which was the ladder upon which you ascended to the high office you hold. You pledged your word to the people that you would maintain and enforce the law in letter and spirit. And here and now your party friends are sapping and mining to overthrow you by calling upon you to violate the pledge you made to the people. If that is keeping faith then I have no conception of what is justly due to the Chief Magistrate of this nation.

Mr. Chairman, if I mistake not at least two members of the Civil Service Commission are Democrats, men of great learning, men of high character, men fit to hold the positions they occupy; yet they are described here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] as a cabal that meets together to parcel out the spoils. Where did you get authority to so arraign these gentlemen? What has there been in their official conduct to justify such criticism? Would they feel complimented to be told that they are not the peers of the gentleman from Illinois in matter of honest discharge of official duty? Have they violated their official oaths in the discharge of their important office?

Why does not South Carolina rise up and defend her son against the charge that he is the member of a cabal which is engaged in distributing the spoils of office against his oath and against the right performance of his sworn duty?

Mr. BAYNE. South Carolina is no longer in the commission?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. From what States are they?

Mr. BAYNE. Indiana and Illinois.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, Mr. Edgerton, of Indiana, is arraigned also here as belonging to that little combination, that cabal.

Gentlemen, this character of assault upon public officers for the fearless discharge of duty will do the country as much harm as the repeal of the civil-service law. If men are not to be upheld in the honest discharge of their duty, and I am assuming that it has been honestly discharged, we had better disband. If we are here to represent chiefly the appetites, the passions, the prejudice, the bad ambition of the groundlings, instead of the nobler and worthier aspirations and efforts of the intelligent and patriotic worth of the country, the sooner we are adjourned, as the "Rump Parliament" was adjourned, the better it will be for us all, for the sooner we will build on a sure and lasting foundation. Government is a growth, gentlemen. Good governments are a healthful growth and development, which find expression in wise constitutions and just and equal laws. This civil-service reform is an encouraging evidence of the fact. The attempt that is made to impair its usefulness is evidence that some gentlemen believe that Government ought to go backward.

This Republic has grown to vast proportions. It has grown in its material development. It has grown in that wisdom which is born of experience. We will not retrograde. This spirit of civil-service reform will live. This law will survive, though it may be by this species of unfriendly legislation reduced to a mere skeleton, yet it will remain and be rehabilitated in all its usefulness when in God's providence there shall be restored to power the Republican party—a party which keeps its promises to the people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Civil Service Commissioners have a word to say in response to those who have attacked and who call in question the wisdom of the system and who do it in the questionable manner here proposed; and apropos of that manner of attack I submit that it would be more commendable to boldly advocate the spoils system. Why come with the voice of Jacob and the hand of Esau to snatch that which you account a blessing—the spoils of office? [Laughter and applause.]

If I opposed the system here assailed I would oppose it openly. I would not seek to throttle it in this covert way, nor would I, while paying the homage of a kiss, thrust a dagger into its vitals. Gentlemen may differ honestly as to the merits of system, but the country is pledged to this civil service, and those who seek to overthrow it in the face of their pledges to uphold it can have no other hope, expectation, or aim than to enable partisan officials to select their party friends and favorites for appointment. It is against that very evil the civil-service law in its letter and spirit sought to provide.

The Civil Service Commissioners seem to have an apt apprehension of the precise character of the opponents of the system. They are not only scholarly, but they write with clearness and vigor. I read from their report made to the President:

It is often said that in private business examinations are not made before employing clerks. Why, then, should they be required for the public service?

It might be simply answered that Congress, several Presidents in succession, and every enlightened nation have found them necessary.

Our nation was, under our system of politics, the last to adopt this beneficent system. Shall it be the first to abandon it?

Do you intend to place our nation again at the heels of the procession? The commissioners correctly say that every enlightened nation on the globe has found it necessary to adopt such a system. While we were in power we endeavored to keep abreast, if not ahead, of all of the other enlightened nations; and yet, gentlemen, you hardly get warm in your seats as the party in power before you seek to turn out of the road, lock the wheels of progress, and allow the meanest nation on earth to pass you in the march of enlightened advancement.

I read again from the report:

But more elementary reasons may be stated. Every office-seeker claims an equal right to enter the public service. The appointing officer can not, like a man in private business, reject arbitrarily.

How true that is. The politician can not arbitrarily refuse to recommend for place and preferment.

That is just the trouble, Brother FINDLAY; the man who can strike straight from the shoulder, who has abundance of neck and a wealth of under-jaw, claims that these useful agencies in a political warfare in precincts of doubtful morals and still more doubtful methods entitle the possessor to the same consideration for appointment as the intelligence, the excellence of character of his orderly, law-abiding competitor. This better and more benign system, which is by this provision to be struck down, gives the advantage in the competitive race for public employment not to a surplus development of muscle, neck, and under-jaw, but to cleanliness of character, intelligence, moral uprightness, and general fitness for the performance of official or clerical duty. In other words, this system limits the demand for insolence and under-jaw in a race for public employment. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. I would suggest all jaw.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir, as my friend suggests, or all jaw.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. Are you in favor of persons, under the present civil-service law which requires applicants to be examined, being exempted because they held positions at the time the law was passed? I mean, do you acquiesce in the propriety of the absence of any provision in the law to provide for the examination of the incumbents in this classified service at the time of its enactment?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am for continuing every man in the public service whose moral and mental qualifications fit him to discharge the duty appertaining to his employment, and I want to say, if my friend was at the head of any bureau or department, and he found Paul or Silas or Barnabas or anybody else unfit for the service, he should put him out.

Mr. BURROWS. Except for political reasons.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of course that goes without saying. And in filling the vacancy you should make your selection with reference to the moral and mental qualifications of the applicant and his fitness for the place, and not with respect to his mere physical characteristics nor the time within which he may have been able to manipulate some ward or township in the interest of his party. The people at large are not actively concerned except to know that the Government is administered well.

Now, the power of removal ought to rest in the wise discretion of the officer charged with the execution of the law; but he ought not, under the pretense of exercising that discretion, to nullify the law by removing persons known to be competent merely because he desires to punish a political adversary or reward a political friend.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And let me suggest further to my friend from Ohio that the experience of the officer in the service is the best possible examination of the fitness of the applicant.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will you allow another question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is a question suggested by the remarks of the gentleman himself. Does the gentleman undertake to say that the incumbents in these public positions, at the time of the passage of the civil-service act, were competent for the positions which they held and that they were appointed to these positions with a view to their competency and not with a view to their political affiliations or otherwise?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Some were fit and some were doubtless unfit. There has been some weeding out, and it may be very properly. Many appointments were made under the old system, and while the heads of Departments and bureaus may not, under that old system—which was known as the spoils system—always have selected a good man, they did not always get a bad one. But the test should be fitness, mental qualifications, character, and ability to perform the duties, and should not rest upon any other rule, unless the officer or appointee bears such relation to the President or head of Department as to make his political views a proper subject for consideration for obvious reasons.

This report further says:

He must reject on some reasonable basis.

That is, the politician, the member of Congress, must do so.

Shall the test be a party test, shall it be official favoritism, or shall it be the merit of the office-seeker? If superior merit is to prevail, how shall it be ascertained? This brings us again to the main question—the value of examinations for testing merit. Even large business firms and corporations are more and more resorting to examinations for discovering merit.

No attack upon examinations is so common on the part of the supporters of a spoils systems, or perhaps is so frequently expressed by others not well informed, as that which asserts that examinations can not absolutely test either character or capacity for rapid work or directing the work of others. Those who make it have not generally constructive minds, and they rarely appreciate how poor and shallow is the criticism which is unable to suggest anything better than that which they simply declare not to be perfect.

Because possibly some individual can conceive it possible to add a new tint and shade to the lily, therefore he deems it imperfect and neither satisfying to sight or other sense. Because the Infinite may possibly sharpen the sting of the bee, these finite critics hold the sting as blunt and dull. We must have their idea of perfection or we must have nothing.

Now I want to turn you to the sayings of another man who is a special favorite with the Democracy in this country, a very oracle of his party, a man who succeeded in being elected governor of New York in spite of our efforts to defeat him—Governor Hill. While I have criticised his methods in many things, I want to applaud him to the echo for his utterances which I will read to the House. And I trust I shall praise that which is worthy in him in the field of action. Let those who do well for the State and the country have the full meed of praise to which they are entitled.

What does he say in regard to the merits of the system under consideration? It is interesting reading in view of what is passing here. It is written in a scholarly way, and proclaims Governor Hill to be a man who knows what is right and one who desires to secure a pure administration of government in the State of New York. What he does in practice I do not know. His theory, as disclosed in the lines I read, is admirable. Governor Hill, in his message to the Legislature of New York, said——

Mr. SPRINGER. He is a good man.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hear that there is a strong expectation that he will be your next candidate for President. In that case you will require to have this utterance of his expunged from the record, unless his practice is such as to give needful assurance that he used the language I here quote in a Pickwickian sense.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Governor Hill says:

The methods of civil service have become the policy of the General Government and of some of the States, and like all genuine reforms, aiming only at good government and the public welfare, this reform is likely to be universally accepted. The State of New York, always foremost in administrative reforms and the adoption of salutary measures of improvement, has taken the lead in this reform.

Mr. SPRINGER. Inaugurated by Tilden and Cleveland.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. When Tilden is buried, if you should go at any time of the day or night you will find my friend from Illinois hanging around the grave mourning and refusing to be comforted. [Laughter.]

My friend from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] calls my attention to the fact that in the State of New York more offices are filled under the civil-service system than are filled by the General Government under the civil-service law. In point of fact under the General Government there are less than 15 per cent. appointed according to the civil-service system.

Mr. FINDLAY. There are fifteen thousand appointments under the civil-service system in the State of New York and fourteen thousand under the General Government.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will read further from the governor's message:

The fundamental idea of this reform, that public office is a trust to be exercised solely for the public welfare, and that offices should be filled only by those best qualified for the service to be rendered after their fitness has been ascertained by proper tests, is the corner-stone of popular government.

And that which Governor Hill styles and which is conceded to be the corner-stone of popular government his political partisans here are trying to pull down or undermine.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him once in my life?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. As the gentleman is commenting on the action of the present Committee on Appropriations, I would be glad to have him express his opinion of successive Republican Congresses which have refused to appropriate the money necessary to conduct the work of the Civil Service Commission appointed by his own party.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not aware they did that. If they did I am here to condemn the omission of duty.

Mr. WILLIS. And I join you in condemning it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the gentleman has not got past the milestones we raised six or ten years ago I sympathize with him. He will not catch up till this discussion is over. [Laughter.] Whatever else we have been doing we have been growing. Keeking pace with the demands of the hour. But I do not want to do injustice to my friend, for I understand him to be in favor of the civil-service law.

Mr. WILLIS. At a time when my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] was not.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You are mistaken. But I get better every day. [Laughter.] I think one of the most amusing things is that with reference to our respective attitudes on this question, my friend is made happy by comparing himself of to-day with what I was years ago. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I am sorry I can not return the compliment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It might not be a compliment. I trust I will now be allowed to proceed to read the rest of Governor Hill's message:

The bestowal of office solely as a reward for partisan service, or as a means of livelihood for the incompetent and thriftless, is an abuse that can not be tolerated by a free people. It has been found prejudicial to the public welfare and inimical to the spirit of our republican institutions, if not dangerous to their stability.

And dangerous as the spoils system is, as stated by Governor Hill, his party friends who are in a majority in this House are making all possible haste to return to it.

I read again from Governor Hill:

The history of all nations, ancient and modern, teaches the lesson that the undue thirst for office, and the unrestrained power of distributing patronage, are the most potent factors in the oppression of the people and the overthrow of popular liberty. The selection of public servants, pursuant to the forms of law and on the ground of merit instead of by the untrammeled will or caprice of an official is the safeguard of our institutions and of popular rights. It is, besides, a constant stimulus to the better education and training of the people and a recognition of the utility of our common schools sustained at the public expense and an incentive for the best men to seek the public service.

I have pleasure in also offering this choice bit of testimony from South Carolina, which shows that the Palmetto and the old Bay State are again sisters laboring together in the interest of good government, and both alike condemn the proposed action of this House:

I will insert here the joint resolutions of the Legislature of South Carolina passed on the 22d of December, 1884:

SOUTH CAROLINA RESOLUTIONS.

On the 22d of December, 1884, both houses of the Legislature of South Carolina adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina did, at the regular session of 1880, adopt a concurrent resolution, to wit:

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to urge Congress to take such measures as may be expedient for the reformation of the civil service, so that the tenure of office under the General Government may no longer be dependent upon party success nor subject to levy by means of forced pecuniary contributions to any political party, and so that capacity and character shall be the test of fitness for office and the sole but certain guarantee of its tenure;"

And whereas this General Assembly, in view of the change in the administration of the National Government, desires to reiterate and reaffirm the principles and policy of the said resolution:

Be it now resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That this General Assembly adheres to the same and tenders to the administration of the President-elect the approval and support of the people of this State in carrying out the provisions of the law in regard to civil-service reform.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor is hereby requested to forward a copy of this resolution to President Cleveland when he shall have been inaugurated.

I have quoted only a few of the expressions of the recognized representatives of his party in the State of New York, South Carolina, and the nation, and I commend the spirit that prompted them. And yet while on every housetop and in every street our Democratic friends proclaimed that the civil service as administered is defensible and was and is indeed the apple of the Democratic eye, I find here the leaders of that party attempting to gouge that eye out—not in an open and manly fight against the provisions of the law, but in a way that I am sure can not commend itself to the maturer judgment of this House, as it certainly will not to the country.

I am not going further to defend the civil-service law. It is its own defense. I believe this provision will be ruled out on a point of order. It ought to be ruled out on a point of order. It has no proper place in this bill. As touching the manner of doing this thing, I submit, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that we as the representatives of the people should do to merit the confidence of our constituents it is to have our conduct marked by perfect candor. Does such candor find expression in this proviso? Shall we descend in the exercise of the functions of the high office we hold to the level of the mere political trickster? Why is it that we are called through the land "politicians" merely? Why is it that when we are called politicians men understand they are describing little else than political tricksters? Is it not because, in the judgment of the world, measures like this are deemed to be mere tricks—a mere pretense? Who of all your constituents that is guided by right thought and intelligent conviction, whose motives are pure, will fail to recognize here a great masterpiece of a political trickery—a mere affectation of reverence for a system which we are seeking to destroy?

I say to my friends upon the other side, whether you believe the utterance or not, I say to you, I shall be glad if the administration of Grover Cleveland (and your own) shall be characterized by that wisdom and that patriotism which shall commend it to the favorable judgment and support of all men. If the time ever comes when, Republican as I am, I shall fail to commend the wise and patriotic action of any man within the domain of the Republic merely because he is my political opponent, I trust I may be retired to the rear as unfit for public station.

This blow at the system of civil service is your handiwork, gentlemen, not ours. It will not receive a vote on our side of the House. A strange spectacle is here presented to the country that the President of the United States in attempting to uphold the law which embodies the best ambitions and dearest hopes of this Democratic administration should find himself driven to rely for support upon his political adversaries, those who attempted by their ballots to keep him out of the high office he now fills—that he should be compelled to look to this side of the House for the support which he vainly seeks from his own. Do you think that the President of the United States can approve your course? If so, I should say to him, "Mr. President, did you intend to mock us by your promises?"

Mr. FINDLAY. Would not the President veto this if it went to him in this form?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Of course he would veto it. Undoubtedly he would. He, I hope, will keep the faith, though his party in this House abandon it. But these gentlemen know that it will never pass the Senate; it can not, and I am glad to observe among the brethren upon the other side of the House, men who, however much they may criticise some features of the service and however much they may be annoyed by the fact that there seems not to be an equitable distribution of the officers and employment, nevertheless stand by the law, holding the American Congress to be above the small arts of some city councils or ward politician.

I want to call attention now to what my honorable friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], has said in regard to the administration of the Pension Office. I have said (and it makes the case when the truth is known) that when the appointing power, pending the appointment, ascertains that these forty-seven applicants are Democrats and that forty-nine are Republicans, he has prosecuted that inquiry for what purpose? To ascertain the men's moral and intellectual fitness? No, sir; the examination has done that. Then for what purpose is that inquiry prosecuted? Simply that he may preserve the balance of power between political parties, I suppose.

But in this case the Commissioner of Pensions did not do that. He made appointments indeed, but they were reappointments. Men who were familiar with the service were reappointed before their terms expired. Now, whether those men were Republicans or Democrats I know not. The Commissioner was satisfied with their fitness. If he was not, and he still retained them in service, he is unfit to hold the position he now occupies. If they were not fit and competent for the performance of their duties, then, whether they were Republicans or Democrats, he should have kicked them out of the service. I have great confidence in the ability of my friend from Illinois, but does he think it was within the range of finite possibility that of seventy-seven men from different parts of the country examined as to their moral and intellectual qualifications—that in that number there could be found only three who were Republicans and who had the intellect and the moral outfit required for appointment. The proposition is absurd.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have not said anything that requires you to answer at this moment. You answered a while ago. I take it that Commissioner Black knows as well what he is doing as my friend from Illinois does. The king used to have a keeper of his conscience who was supposed to be answerable for whatever the king did, but that is not the case with the Commissioner of Pensions. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to be allowed to answer the gentleman before he is through.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You may answer me after I am through.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to answer you now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising General Black. I have no doubt that he acted up to his highest conception of the requirements of the civil-service law, and hence I say, General Black, go acquit. But the intelligent people of this country will continue to wonder how it is that the ability to run a great bureau of the Government can be found in the same physical and mental organism which believes it possible that, without discrimination or partial effort, of seventy-seven men taken at random in this country and examined as to their qualifications for a public office seventy-four could be Democrats and only three Republicans. Such a thing is remotely possible; it is not in any wise probable.

I will read what General Black says on this subject, as tending to throw some light upon his tendency to look after his own political household:

By Mr. HARRISON:

Q. Very well; go on with the statement.

A. Sixty-nine have been appointed outside of the civil-service rules. Of those appointed under civil-service rules seventy-two have been Democrats, and five politics unknown. Of those appointed outside of the civil-service rules, thirty-five have been Democrats, and thirty-four politics unknown.

He calls those appointed who were already in the office and familiar with the duties whom he took under the influence of the President's avowed purpose to remove only for cause, and in the presence of which he could not disregard for the present the pledge which that high officer has made to the people.

But, sir, I may add if under the civil-service law and regulations it was competent for the honorable Commissioner of Pensions in appointing seventy-seven clerks or agents to select fourteen out of every fifteen from among his partisan friends, it is of little consequence whether the law is repealed or not. This seems to be a case where the letter does indeed kill, and the spirit gives no life since it is not heeded.

He then goes on to say that if he could have done so he would have been very glad to have made all the appointments from among his Democratic friends. It is against that I protest. Being a Democrat fits a man, no doubt, to vote the Democratic ticket, but it does not fit him any better to discharge the duties belonging to the different positions under the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand my friend to say that he believes General Black in this matter has violated the law?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That depends entirely upon his ability to conceive what the law requires. I will not say that he has knowingly violated the law. But according to my conception of the law, according to the conception of every other man so far as I know with possibly one solitary exception, outside of the Pension Office, I think he has, though possibly unintentionally, violated its clear spirit.

Mr. SPRINGER. How did it happen that General Dudley appointed all Republicans and did not violate the law, though he was operating under the same law, the same rules, and pursuing the same manner of proceeding?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You are as happy as my other friend over there. If you can find a bad example on our side you are entirely satisfied with your own record if it squares itself to that bad example.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not want the gentleman to insist that a Democratic Commissioner has violated the law in appointing one-half Democrats and the other half Republicans, while the gentleman's own party friend in the same position appointed all Republicans.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know that such is the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the fact.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, if it is I join the gentleman in condemning it. But what you charge as wrong in one officer you loudly praise, or at least defend, in the other.

Mr. SPRINGER. It happened that under the administration of a Commissioner of your party all the appointees were Republicans, while under an officer of our party only half the appointees were Democrats.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now, I have said all I desire to say in regard to this matter of civil service. I will merely add that I believe in it. I believe the experience we have had under it demonstrates clearly and fully the wisdom and beneficence which waited upon its adoption; and I shall be found its consistent and earnest friend. But if I were opposed to it I would not assail it in this manner.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did the gentleman condemn his own party friend, General Dudley, for appointing all Republicans?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish gentlemen on the other side would make some effort to amend their own political lives rather than to feel satisfied when their best efforts come up to the plane of our worst example of years ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then you protected your party friends but now things have changed a little.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not hope to satisfy the gentleman. There is an awful chasm there which might be filled but I do not expect to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not deny that in this appropriation bill there is the form of economy; I do not deny that there is the letter of economy. I do not deny that the expenses of the administration of this Government have been reduced. But, sir, to reduce expenses is one thing; to practice economy is quite another. The reduction of expenses does not always imply economy. My friend from Indiana is aware it has been written, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." A wise, judicious appropriation to enable each and every Department of this Government to have a full and adequate force to dispatch promptly and efficiently the duties devolving upon it is wise economy, whether it costs much or little.

As an instance, I will refer to the office of First Comptroller. In this bill the Committee on Appropriations have not increased the force in the office of the First Comptroller, yet gentlemen here know that the adjudications in that office are fifteen or twenty years behind. For the benefit of my friends I will say that I do not criticise this Congress more than preceding Congresses for refusing to provide a force sufficient to dispatch the business appertaining to that office. We all know that Judge Durham is neither an idler nor a spendthrift. If he has a fault, it is in being too technical, but he works late and early, and he works his force to the utmost. Yet he bore testimony before this committee, as he has done to a large number of members of the House, that the business of his office is dragging away behind, so that the bond I give to the Government my grandchildren may be sued upon, if any of my estate could be traced to them—if I had any estate to trace. I say this is not economy. It is a mere pretense of economy to withhold the appropriations necessary for disposing of business as it presents itself at the various offices of the Government. Mr. Day, the Second Auditor, (if I get his name right,) is an energetic, conscientious, clear-headed man.

Nobody can go about his office without appreciating the fact that the President was fortunate in choosing such a man for Second Auditor. He is crowding the business of his office, and yet he says increase of force is indispensable.

I would not agree with my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] if what he said was in the spirit of unfair criticism. What he denounced was not the fact that increase of force was demanded under this administration, but the pretense heretofore made that such increase of force was prompted by a spirit of reckless extravagance and had no relation to the actual needs of the service. Mr. Chairman, I know that the demand for increase of force and for increase of salaries does not even tend to prove your officials intend to be extravagant or unjust with the public revenues. A man charged with the performance of duty at the head of a bureau knows better than anybody else what is required to dispatch the business of his office. I say generally where these increases have been asked for, so far as my knowledge goes, they are fully authorized and justified, and that the officials would have been derelict in the performance of their duty if they had not asked for them.

The criticism of my friend from Maryland comes to this and this only, that the great clamor made to the country that its business could be carried on with decidedly less expense is mere pretense; and to show it is so, the experience of Democratic officials, who are doubtless faithfully discharging their duty, is cited. The growth of the country, its widespread domain, its ten thousand newly-opened avenues of business suggest that with that healthful expansion and growth there is increase of business in every administrative office. And he is no friend of his country, no friend of true reform, who, for the mere purpose of catching votes, says there is ridiculous extravagance.

Sir, I do not believe there is a government on the earth that can show as many sound, competent, pure-minded, honest, patriotic officials as the country of which that flag is the emblem. [Applause.] No nation of the earth down to this hour has handled so vast revenues with so little loss to the people as the American Republic.

And I have no sympathy with the effort which drags any official down, and I feel loathing and contempt for any vagabond who has or may creep up to high station by imposition upon the appointing power as to his real merits, and on being installed in office at once opens a school for scandal and offers a premium to such as will perform the filthy service of befouling the character and fair fame of his political adversaries who may have held office. [Applause.]

It is the truth to say that honesty and fidelity to public duty is the rule in both the great parties of the country. The reverse is the exception. We may differ as to means, but the end we desire is for a conscientious administration of our Government.

Our friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], a man whom I have known for many years and whom I admire, has a happy faculty, if such a faculty can be called a happy one, of attempting to persuade the people of this country they are suffering by reason of some act of omission or commission on the part of the Government; that the annoying conditions in the midst of which we often find ourselves are due to the sins of Congress or the Executive.

I have no sympathy with that arraignment of our Government, no patience with that method of catching the crowd. All that Government can do, all that we can demand of it is that it shall keep wide open the door of opportunity so that no needless obstacle shall bar the way to that success which should wait upon honest and intelligent effort. I have no patience with that effort which is made to please the unworthy by assaulting the great enterprises of the country—enterprises which were in their day needful to its healthful growth, if not indeed to the preservation of its life. I rejoice to hear the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], courageous as he always is, candid as he always is, rebuke the disposition to criticise without intelligent understanding or fair consideration of the merits of the act which is the subject of criticism.

Gentlemen are too prone to rise at the close of the nineteenth century and with the gathered wisdom of ages about them presume to criticise with severity what our predecessors did, without pretending to investigate what operating influences had prompted this or that political and legislative action.

In reply to such criticisms the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] led gentlemen back up the stream of time and stood them face to face with the conditions which then surrounded those who were called upon to act. He called attention to the pressing necessity for binding the Pacific Slope to the fertile valleys of the Mississippi and the East; that between the far West and the East there were deserts and mountains and beyond this a hostile people; that what seems to us to-day to have been unwise, and what possibly was unwise, yet found justification with honest men in the trying conditions with which they had then to deal.

The thing I criticise in this bill is that the economy exhibited in the letter is not real. It makes the promise to the ear to break it to the hope. Among the items that challenge commendation I will mention one particularly. I want to commend the action of the committee in that they will no longer permit the Government to stand in the attitude of an embezzler of private funds. For more than two decades past it has been the custom of the Government to obtain possession of funds to be applied to a particular use, and when once obtained put it in its coffers and convert it to another use without rendering the service agreed upon. That has been the case with reference to the Patent Office.

This committee gave careful investigation to the subject, and said that the men who pay the expenses of securing the performance of a public duty have a right to have that duty promptly performed, and especially in view of the fact that all expense of every kind and character to the uttermost cent, every insignificant scruple, comes from the individual inventors of the country. The committee say we will appropriate the money which is paid into the Government coffers for this purpose, and render the service promptly. I say the committee is deserving of credit for doing this act of public and private justice, and the country will commend it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have in no wise pursued the line of thought which I had proposed to enter upon with reference to the bill which is now before the House. I suggested a week or two ago perhaps that I should ask the floor for the purpose of showing the relations existing between the various industries in this country—to show, in fact, the relations existing between the law of supply and demand, so far as our people are concerned, and the various agencies by which the supply has overrun the demand, and how in our attempt to make labor profitable, or rather the agencies which produce wealth, we have to study these relations; and I had hoped to be able at this time to make some suggestions which might be useful in that behalf. But the conspicuous attitude which the civil-service provisions of this bill have assumed has betrayed me into another line of discussion.

How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If any brother can profitably use that time he is welcome to it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, for weeks and, indeed, for months, I have been laboring with the subcommittee upon the preparation of this bill. This voluminous bill has been gone over word after word, line after line. I have bestowed upon it as much care as it was in my power. It has passed through the ordeal of the subcommittee and the general committee, and is now presented for the final consideration and action of this House. It is one of the most important of all the money bills that are brought in from the various appropriating committees of the House. It carries the salaries of all the legislative, of the executive, and of the judicial officers of the Government.

There are but two ways by which economy can be effected on this bill. One is by dispensing with a number of officers in the employ of the Government, and the other by a reduction of their salaries.

The majority of the committee have sedulously sought as to how we might, without crippling the public service, reduce expenditures in the reduction of salaries as well as dispensing with surplus officers. It may be that we have been mistaken in our judgment, and doubtless every man on the committee as well as the subcommittee will have his own views in reference to that question; but we have kept this purpose steadily in view.

I am one of those who believe we could largely reduce expenditures under the bill, if the methods or systems used in the various Departments were changed; but under the system which has grown up and been enforced for many years, I do not conceive how we can well reduce the amount of service without seriously crippling its efficiency.

I have differed with my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in some details in regard to the bill, and largely differ with some of my friends and colleagues of the committee on the other side who participated in its preparation. But as a whole I believe we have made as safe and as conservative a bill as was practicable to be made under the circumstances.

Now, sir, I did not intend to make any remarks whatever upon this bill except such as I might deem proper under the consideration of its various sections within the limits of the five-minute debate under the rule, until I had heard some remarks which fell from the lips of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] on yesterday and this morning. Since these remarks have been delivered I have been preparing some notes for observations in reply to points they made in regard to the bill. In the first place I will take notice of some of the remarks of my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

He has very ably and ingeniously criticised the estimates of the Departments and the work of this House during this session regarding appropriations, but in a manner which in my judgment is likely to mislead. He has endeavored to induce this House and the country to believe that the Democratic members of this House have forgotten the watchword which has ever been a favorite one with the Democratic party since its foundation by Jefferson—of adherence to the principle of economy. I believe, sir, that if the gentleman himself would sit down and carefully study the figures showing the appropriations since the first time the Democratic party regained control of this branch of Congress since the war began, he will discover that the Democratic majority, whenever it appeared in this House, has been faithful to the injunctions of the fathers of the party and the pledges of its representatives to the people when seeking election. The figures that have been prepared for me by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations demonstrate clearly that since we came into power in the Forty-fourth Congress there has been a steady and successful effort on the part of the Democratic majority in this House to reduce the expenditures of this Government.

They were wonderfully successful in the Forty-fourth Congress when they had to combat a Republican Senate and a Republican President. The results of their labors, notwithstanding the opposition of Republican members, demonstrated that the current expenditures of this Government could be safely reduced at least $30,000,000 without in any degree whatever crippling the efficiency of the public service. And if the Democratic party in the Forty-fourth Congress are entitled to gratitude for nothing else, they are at least entitled to receive the thanks of the tax-payers of this country for relieving them in the first year of their power here from the burden of $30,000,000 of unnecessary expenditures imposed upon them by the extravagance of the Republican party, which had held unlimited control of both branches of Congress for so many years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no matter how deceptive rhetoric may be, it has been said truthfully, "Figures will not lie." I will present the official figures furnished by the Treasury Department, and the proceedings of Congress. I hold in my hand a table showing the appropriations from 1873 down to and including the current fiscal year, less amount for pensions:

Forty-second Congress, Republican:
1873	$144,820,533 73
1874	167,439,297 38
Forty-third Congress, Republican:
1875	153,705,002 16
1876	149,166,833 90
Forty-fourth Congress, Democratic:
1877	125,020,139 64
1878	115,859,149 23
Forty-fifth Congress, Democratic:
1879	141,815,775 68
1880	136,636,937 17
Forty-sixth Congress, Democratic:
1881	147,747,560 27
1882	150,075,750 57
Forty-seventh Congress, Republican:
1883	181,561,602 29
1884	145,418,647 63
Forty-eighth Congress, Democratic:
1885	174,900,588 09

This table shows that in the Forty-second, a Republican Congress, the appropriations for the first session were nearly one hundred and forty-five millions, and the second session nearly one hundred and sixty-seven and a half millions.

In the Forty-third Congress, a Republican Congress, the appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the Government had reached in the first session nearly one hundred and fifty-four millions; in the second session they exceeded one hundred and forty-nine millions.

In the next Congress, the Forty-fourth, a Democratic majority appeared here for the first time since the war. The appropriations at the first session shrank to about one hundred and twenty-five millions, and in the second session they shrank ten millions more, to less than one hundred and sixteen millions. I am giving the figures in round numbers, omitting the odd thousands.

In the Forty-fifth Congress we again controlled the House. The appropriations were less than one hundred and forty-two millions in the first session, and in the second session they were about one hundred and thirty-six and a half millions.

In the Forty-sixth Congress, with a Democratic House, they were less than one hundred and forty-eight millions in the first session, and about one hundred and fifty millions in the second session. That was the Forty-sixth Congress which immediately preceded the control of this House by the Republican party in the next Congress.

In the Forty-seventh Congress—when the Republicans regained this House—see how the figures sprang up under Republican control of both branches of Congress, with a Republican President in the White House to sign the bills. The appropriations of the first session of that Congress ran up from one hundred and forty-seven millions under Democratic control to over one hundred and eighty-one and half millions; and in the second session, the short session, they were about one hundred and forty-five and a half millions. As they had lost power in the House they purposely reduced the expenditures below what they knew were the growing needs of the service in order to make a sham show of economy and create deficiencies for the Democratic House to provide.

In the Forty-eighth Congress the figures show the appropriations were less than one hundred and seventy-five millions in the first session, and one hundred and fifty-nine and a half millions in the second.

In the last Congress there were extraordinary appropriations, which do not belong to the ordinary appropriations of the Government, such as the appropriation for the New Orleans Exposition, and the appropriations for an increased number of public buildings ordered by Congress, and for other than the ordinary expenditures of the Government.

But I have a much more interesting table than the one I have exhibited for the careful consideration of my friends on the other side.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me get through these tables first.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a correction at that point, or to mention a fact that the gentleman has not taken into account.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield to the gentleman after I get through the next table. I call attention to a very interesting table which the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has prepared for me within the last few hours. It is a table showing the amount of estimates made since 1877 by the Departments, except the year 1878, of which he did not have time to procure the verified official data. It also contains the amounts of the appropriations as the bills passed this House during that period, and shows also the appropriations as they were finally enacted into law.

The object of this table, I will frankly state, is to show what were the estimates made by the Republican officials and sent to Congress of what they deemed it necessary and should be appropriated to carry on the Government during that period of nine years. I particularly desire to show by this table that the House, where Democrats, except in one Congress, held control during that period, reduced the amounts of appropriation hundreds of millions below the estimates and sent the bills to the Senate with the amounts so reduced. I wish to show further by this table that the Republican Senate was a most extravagant body, and that it largely increased the appropriations above the reduction of the House. When the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] railed at the Democratic party for having failed to secure larger reductions during its power here, he forgot the fact that there was another body which has equal power with this House over appropriations, and controlled by his party during that period, which in a large degree defeated our efforts for economy, and steadily and largely, unnecessarily, extravagantly increased the appropriation as authorized by this House.

Look at this table:

Statement showing aggregate amount of the annual estimates submitted to Congress and the aggregate amount of the annual appropriation bills as passed by the House and as passed by the Senate for the fiscal years 1877 and 1879 to 1886 inclusive.

Year.	Amount of estimates.	Amount of bills as passed by the House.	Amount of bills as passed by the Senate.
1879	176,226,348 31	147,687,739 94	161,852,269 41
1880	204,202,270 53	188,381,875 01	197,823,373 38
1881	193,059,042 17	184,840,549 02	189,672,961 23
1882	219,641,791 61	193,708,587 44	217,447,283 26
1883	309,495,451 15	289,288,557 84	297,198,639 86
1884	306,380,163 16	*227,582,931 41	*231,821,264 77
1885	235,098,044 12	184,961,954 69	205,101,598 51
1886	266,403,181 42	*213,262,447 55	*223,357,254 00
	2,113,605,317 95	1,768,466,983 32	1,882,535,243 05
	1,768,466,986 32		1,768,466,986 32
Reduction by House under estimates	345,138,331 63
Increased by Senate over House			114,068,257 73

* Does not include river and harbor bill, which failed to pass.

NOTE.—In the estimates as stated above are included supplemental estimates transmitted to Congress after the regular books of estimates were submitted to Congress.

Now, what are the total figures? This table shows that the estimates made by the Departments during that period of nine years amounted to $1,768,466,986.

What did the House do with the estimates during that period? This table shows that those estimates were reduced $345,138,331. You see if the bills had become law as they left this House there would have been a saving to the Treasury of over $345,000,000. But what did the Senate do with them? This table shows that the Senate increased appropriations during that period $114,068,257.73. In other words, the Senate increased the appropriations of the economical Democratic party in the House over $114,000,000. These figures furnish the answer to the inquiry made so frequently in this debate upon the other side why those of us on this side have not succeeded in reducing the expenditures more than has been done. It is mainly because your Republican Senate have in every instance where we have sent them general appropriation bills largely increased the amount of the appropriations, and hereby in many instances defeated our efforts at economy.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion at this point?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I hold in my hand an official statement from the Democratic Treasury Department of the expenditures for the different fiscal years, beginning in 1856. It does not make any difference for my present purpose what the appropriations are, but from this statement it appears that in the years 1881 and 1882, when there was a Democratic House, there was expended $518,000,000. In 1883 and 1884, when there was a Republican House, in the Forty-seventh Congress, the expenditures were $509,000,000; 9,000,000 less than the Congress before. I call the gentleman's attention further to the table which he holds in his hands, and say to him that if he will throw out the appropriations for pensions in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses he will find that the appropriations made by the Forty-seventh Congress were $18,000,000 less than those made by the Forty-eighth Congress, the one which my friend talked about a few moments ago as the Democratic Congress that cut down appropriations so largely. My friend knows very well that estimates are one thing and appropriations are another thing. The real question is, what is the money expended and what are the liabilities incurred?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not allow my colleague to make a speech in my time. I thought my friend had candor enough to admit that he knew that those figures which he cites were not accurate. He has taken them, doubtless, from this book which I hold in my hand, and which comes from the office of the Register of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Is that wrong?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, it is not in all respects wrong, but it is misleading.

Take the year 1883, and, according to this book, the source from which the gentleman gets his figures, I can show that the appropriations of the Republican House and Senate of the Forty-seventh Congress amounted to over nine hundred millions. But I know that these figures are not, in the ordinary sense, correct. Amounts are included in those figures which we know were not embraced in the appropriations of that year. This is so of the year my friend has cited. He well knows that the figures he has read do not represent the ordinary expenses of this Government or the appropriations of the years mentioned. I do not know what the table in this book is really intended to show. It certainly was not intended to show the appropriations by Congress, because I know that, with all its extravagance, that Republican Congress, the Forty-seventh Congress, did not appropriate $900,000,000.

In the table I have presented will be found the true and exact amounts of the appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the Government. It does not include appropriations for pensions in the Forty-seventh or any other Congress. It was prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations from official data which can not be questioned.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will my friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not. My time is very limited. The gentleman will have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish you would yield for a moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not the time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, do. [Laughter.] I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, make it brief.

Mr. HISCOCK. Are you aware of the fact that the lowest point reached in the appropriations over which Congress has any control in its annual supply bill was $90,000,000 in 1871 and 1872? And are you further aware of the fact that the appropriations over which we have control by our annual supply bills have never exceeded $125,000,000 in any one year, and that the varying amounts of all these appropriation bills are due to the payment of bounties for which the Government had become obligated?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HISCOCK. And that this reduction of the appropriation bills about which so much is said resulted from certain of those obligations having been discharged?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, there is a rule of this House which forbids any gentleman to speak out of order. I decline to yield. The gentleman was rapped down by the Chair. I decline to permit him to make a speech in my time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not understand that he declined to yield. I am very sorry. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, I have accurately given the estimates and the appropriations as the bills passed both Houses of Congress. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is greatly mistaken in his estimate of the amounts annually appropriated during the periods mentioned.

Now, I wish to speak for a few moments of the present administration of some of the bureaus of the Departments. Why gentlemen on the other side are so anxious to criticise the administration of the Commissioner of Pensions is to many a mystery. There are many members of this House who wonder why it is that whenever a pension appropriation bill or an ordinary appropriation bill relating to the Pension Office is under discussion an assault is made, if there is the slighest excuse for it, upon the administration of the Pension Office by Commissioner Black. Many are mystified with this; I am not. I fully understand the motive which prompts gentlemen on the other side to make these assaults. Some inquire, "Why is it so?" A gallant soldier has been elevated to the head of the Pension Office—as gallant a soldier as ever faced a foe upon the battlefield; he has demonstrated his loyalty and love of his flag by the wounds which to-day he carries, wounds which have never yet healed, although inflicted over twenty years ago; a soldier as faithful as any who ever fought under the flag, one who has been horribly mangled in both arms, one still painfully suffering from these wounds.

Why are these assaults made upon him? I know well the motive. Gentlemen who make these assaults feel deeply grieved because Mr. Cleveland did not appoint as Commissioner of Pensions some one who had served in the confederate army, in order that they might go before the people this fall and insist that their prophecies in a measure have been verified. These gentlemen know well that the stump orators of the Republican party, and doubtless some of these gentlemen themselves, have deluded and misled many a soldier from his allegiance to the Democratic party by asserting that if a Democratic President should be elected the confederates would capture the capital, that the Union soldiers would be in danger of losing their pensions, that the confederate debt would be paid, and the negro would be enslaved.

Such demagogy based on statements which those who make them know in their hearts to be false has prevented the Democratic party in the North from carrying the elections in many Congressional districts. Now, because Mr. Cleveland, as soon as he came into power, appointed as Commissioner of Pensions a crippled Union soldier, a soldier beloved for his gallantry by all Union soldiers who love gallant conduct whether it comes from a Democrat or a Republican, these gentlemen are sadly disappointed in their selfish hopes, are angered, and are unable to avoid manifesting their disappointment and anger by assaults on General Black. By this appointment the President has deprived them of campaign arguments which they no doubt hoped would influence the votes of soldiers at the coming election.

Now, I make this assertion—and it is proved by the records of the office—that since General Black came in as Commissioner of Pensions the number of cases favorably acted on has largely increased over any previous administration of the Pension Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then his charges against Mr. Dudley can not be true, because he charges that Mr. Dudley allowed too many.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not intend to engage in that controversy again. I have my own opinion about it; the gentleman has his. I only assert that a larger number of applicants for pensions have received their pensions under the administration of General Black than in the same length of time under any previous Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BINGHAM. And with the same clerks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. With nearly the same clerks. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania has furnished me with evidence which will answer and refute the charge which has been so frequently made against General Black in this debate by gentlemen on the other side of violating the civil-service law in removals and appointments. How could these pensions have been passed upon by the same clerks if he has violated the law and turned out Republican clerks coming over to him from the former administration and replaced them with Democrats? My friend testifies truthfully to the fact that General Black has not violated the civil-service law in that regard.

But in order that my assertion may be fully fortified I proceed to present indisputable evidence. Yesterday afternoon when I asserted in this House that I had been informed that not one single Democrat was found among the special examiners when General Black came into power several gentlemen questioned that statement; several denied it who no doubt honestly believed they knew the facts; others again who care nothing for the facts, but recklessly deny anything that militates against their interests of their party. I asserted it then; I reassert it now. I care not who questions it. I have an official statement of the fact.

When General Black went into office, March 17, 1885, he found one hundred and forty-eight men holding positions by express appointment as special examiners. There was not one single Democrat among the number. Those who administered that office did not want Democrats; they no doubt were Republicans who would use their official power to influence voters at the polls. I do not charge that this in every instance was the motive of appointment of these special examiners, but judging by the actions of men who came into my district and others in Illinois who did thus exert their influence—and it was a powerful one with the poor applicant for a pension—it would seem that such a purpose at times influenced their appointment.

Look at this statement. Of one hundred and forty-eight regular special examiners General Black found in office not a single one of them was a Democrat.

Mr. GALLINGER. How did the gentleman find that out?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. From the Pension Office, of my own seeking; from the very best authority which can be given.

Mr. GALLINGER. How did the gentleman from Illinois find it out? Have these men testified they were all Republicans? Or has it merely been assumed that they were Republicans?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the best authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. What authority?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the best authority; and I defy the gentleman to deny its correctness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know the name of one man in the special service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I dare the gentleman to deny it, or any one else.

Mr. GALLINGER. But you do not know that fact.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do know it. I have it from authority in which I have the greatest confidence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from official authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. We want to know.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We want to know the gentleman's authority.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have it from the Pension Office.

Mr. REED, of Maine. From whom?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is none of your business. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have your authority.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I state again I have it from the Pension Office, and every word of it is true. And I believe the gentleman knows it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know it; and I would not take your word for it [laughter], or that of anybody else. These men have not testified they were Republicans. Who knows whether they were or not?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not through yet. In addition to these special examiners there were two hundred and twenty-nine clerks detailed in this special examining service, making nearly four hundred clerks and special examiners engaged in that business. Out of the two hundred and twenty-nine clerks so engaged there were found two men who claimed to be Democrats. That made nearly four hundred men engaged in special examination of pension claims. And out of nearly four hundred men, under a Republican administration, there were found but two Democrats, or men who dared to avow themselves Democrats.

What other facts are there in regard to the Pension Office? When General Black came in there there were sixteen hundred and sixty-five employés engaged in the office. How many Democrats were among them? The evidence shows there were but seventeen who dared to say, under a Republican administration, they were Democrats.

Mr. BRUMM. When were these men polled?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Out of four hundred under a Republican administration there were only seventeen Democrats.

Mr. BRUMM. When were these men polled?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me give you some more figures. These are official.

Mr. BRUMM. When were they polled?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have been ascertained.

Mr. BRUMM. Your assertion, merely; you have no facts.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the record of your party, that out of nearly seventeen hundred officials in the Pension Office only seventeen Democrats were allowed; most of them, perhaps, came in under the civil-service law since its enactment in 1883.

But, sir, I wish to be just in my statements. I am willing to admit, as claimed by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], there were some Democrats appointed under Republican administration. My friend from Ohio himself was perhaps one of the most liberal of the heads of bureaus in making Democratic appointments. The number of Democrats, however, that were appointed was, "like angels' visits, few and far between." There were some of them, it is true; but it seems in the Pension Office that out of seventeen hundred the Democrats only secured seventeen appointments.

Now, what is the course of the present administration of the Pension Office? It has been stated, and I will restate it, that the first seventy-one or seventy-two—to be safe I will seventy-one—of the special pension examiners appointed by the present Commissioner of Pensions every one of them were Republicans. Some say: "Oh! these were reappointments." That may be true. But I reply that in every instance the Commissioner had it in his power to have appointed entirely new men, men who had never before held the appointments. But instead of that, sir, he reappointed every one of the old appointees, although Republicans, and yet gentlemen on that side jeer and sneer at General Black as a violator of the civil-service law.

Mr. BURROWS. How many Democrats were there appointed?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know. I think he could have obtained employés if he had selected competent Democrats; but exercising his own judgment in this connection, as he had a perfect right to do, he appointed or reappointed Republicans to fill the first seventy-one or seventy-two of the vacancies occurring among the special examiners. And yet your Republican Commissioner of Pensions went out of that office without leaving a single Democrat upon the list of special examiners. Was there ever such generosity and liberality shown to an opposing political party since this Government was organized as that shown by this much-abused gallant Union soldier who fills the high office of Commissioner of Pensions?

Why, what do you want, gentlemen? Do you want all the appointments? Is that what you are after? If you do you had better elect a Republican President, and then, take my word for it it will not be long before nearly if not all the officials will be Republican, just as it was when Mr. Cleveland came into office.

Now, General Black states that there have been eighty-four new appointments in addition to those I have mentioned since he came into power, and nearly all of these eighty-four, thanks to General Black, were Democrats, just as it ought to be. It is only about half of the special-examiners corps. Now, what further could you ask of him? When the Civil Service Commission presents to him some three hundred names from which he may select his appointees for special examiners, and General Black is called upon to make the selection, he no doubt remembered how the Republican special examiners abused their power and became mere drill-sergeants of the Republican party. Now, can you expect him to appoint such men again?

Exercising his own free-will and judgment, he chose to select Democrats to fill at least about one-half of these positions. In this he acted fairly; at any rate, no Republican has a right to complain. Would a Republican Commissioner have been as liberal to Democrats? I insist it was his right and duty to select at least one-half, if not more, of that corps from Democrats. Gentlemen on the other side have raised the false cry, and it is echoed by the partisan press of the Republican party, that a Democratic administration has removed Union soldiers from the public service and replaced them with civilians or those who had served in the Southern army. I am warranted in making the statement, sir, that if you will ascertain the number of Republican soldiers who have been removed from office under this administration it can be shown that an equal number of Democratic soldiers have been appointed. Has the President not the right when a vacancy occurs in an office filled by a Union soldier to select a Democratic soldier to fill his place?

Did not Democratic soldiers fight as bravely and make as great sacrifices to preserve the Union as Republican soldiers? Were there not as many Democrats in the Union Army as there were Republicans? I tell you now, gentlemen, that if the long roll could be called of the dead and the living who fought for the Union in the late war and their political sentiments could be ascertained you would find that a majority of them were Democrats. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. LINDSLEY. The votes did not show that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When Mr. Cleveland came to make a new Cabinet on the 4th of March, 1885, did he find a Union soldier in the Cabinet of his predecessor? If I am correctly informed there was not one in the Cabinet which he was called upon to reconstruct. That Republican President did not have a single soldier in his Cabinet.

Mr. McKINLEY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Point out one.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Hatton was a soldier.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was not aware of that fact. I understood that there was not one.

Mr. McKINLEY. Yes, sir; there was.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman give the character of the present Cabinet and its antecedents?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You will find in the present Cabinet as gallant a Union soldier as the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself.

Mr. BINGHAM. But I want the whole personnel of the Cabinet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now if you mean to intimate that Mr. Cleveland has gone South to select some members of his Cabinet, I can say to you that the example of doing so was set for him by Republican Presidents. General Grant did the same thing in putting a confederate brigadier in his Cabinet (Akerman, as Attorney-General), and Hayes in putting a confederate in his Cabinet (Key, as Postmaster-General). I merely wished to call attention to the fact that Mr. Cleveland had recognized the Union soldiers by appointing one of them a member of his Cabinet. If you go to the various Departments of the public service you will find that for every Republican soldier removed, or whose term has expired, there has been appointed a Democratic soldier, not always in the same position, but the aggregate of soldiers under Mr. Cleveland will be found to be as great as under Mr. Arthur.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have no time to dwell upon these details.

Mr. McKINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I am assured my statement as to Postmaster-General Hatton is true. He was a private soldier from my own State, a brave and gallant one.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no doubt the gentleman states it correctly. I had been informed otherwise, and I accept the correction.

Now, I wish to say a word or two in regard to this civil-service clause in this bill. I voted in committee against the insertion of that clause in this bill. I am opposed to its retention in the bill now. With my understanding of the law and of the rules of this House I do not see how it can be properly inserted in this bill.

The civil-service law, for which nearly all of my Democratic friends who were here in Congress when it was passed voted, conferred upon the President the sole power of establishing such rules as he may deem proper regulating the appointments under this law. Now, as the operation of this proviso will work a repeal of this law to a certain extent, I do not see how it can become a part of this bill. The third clause of Rule XXI of this House declares: "Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto." In my judgment it is not in order on this bill. I do not wish, however, to be understood as opposed to the changes proposed in this proviso. I am especially in favor of a modification of the rule with reference to age, but as the Executive is the only power which can control this question without a change of law, and probably of the Constitution, I think we should trust his discretion as to what modifications should be made.

I am only antagonizing the proposed action of the House in restricting the power of the President under the law. If, in my judgment, we should refrain from an attempt to coerce him by this amendment the President will modify the rule with regard to age, for it is so reasonable and just that the rule with regard to age should be modified that I feel confident if the President is left free to act upon his own convictions, as is his constitutional right and right under the civil-service law, he will no doubt modify that rule without Congressional dictation. There is no need for attempts at coercive measures to induce the President to change the rule if he can be convinced that it is unjust. Under the terms of the civil-service law and of the Constitution the President in making appointments can not be forced to be governed by any other influence than his own convictions of duty.

I am no great admirer of this civil-service law. Mr. Cleveland, however, in the enforcement of the law has done no more than he pledged himself to do before and since his election. In his adherence to the civil-service law he has done what every Democratic voter of this land bade him do when they voted for him standing on the Democratic platform which declared for civil-service reform. Every Democratic platform from 1876, the one on which Tilden was elected, has declared in favor of civil-service reform.

It was well understood when we voted for him that Mr. Cleveland would faithfully enforce the civil-service law. Those who framed the Democratic platform of 1884 doubtless had in view the shams covered up by the law enacted by a Republican Congress; but they emphatically declared in favor of a sensible and honest civil-service policy. Mr. Cleveland has attempted in good faith to pursue that policy. It is true he has gone further than the law. He has extended the policy to appointments not within the law, not contemplated by those who made the law. And while Democrats may complain of him for so extending his policy, and I am one of them who regret to some extent this course, certainly the gentlemen on the other sid of the House have no right to complain at or question the sincerity of his belief in civil-service reform. For, as I have said, not only has he been governed strictly by the letter and the spirit of the civil-service law, but he has gone far beyond it and extended the policy to officers not embraced within the law.

Mr. BAYNE. Are you not questioning it by this proviso in the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have stated I am not in favor of the proviso, because it is not in order in this bill under the rules of the House. I would be glad to see the rules changed as proposed in this proviso, but I am not in favor of this method of bringing it about.

Mr. McKINLEY. And the President has the power to change the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He has, and I am willing to leave it with him. I have confidence in his integrity, in his judgment, in his Democracy. He is hampered by this civil-service law. He is pledged to a civil-service policy by the platform on which he was elected. I believe he is as eager to-day to substitute good and capable Democratic for Republican officials as any of us upon this floor if he could do it and maintain his pledges to the country, for I have no doubt he believes as I do, that the best way to reform the public service is to put the men in the offices who believe in Democratic principles and Democratic policy. So far as Mr. Cleveland is himself concerned I would say I do not regard him to be such a thoroughly philosophic statesman as Jefferson was or so profoundly learned in the Constitution as Mr. Madison was——

Mr. BAYNE. I think he is far more philosophic than Mr. Jefferson was.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He has different ideas perhaps in statecraft from those of Jackson. But I am convinced that no one from the foundation of the Government to this day ever occupied the White House who has shown himself possessed of greater executive ability than Grover Cleveland.

This is a time when we need purely an executive officer, not a pyrotechnic statesman. We need one who has capacity for details. This is not an age of sentimental questions. We have by precedent and the sword settled most of the great constitutional questions. This is an age of economic questions. The problems that the President has to grapple with now are those arising out of the laws made by the legislative body and interpreted by the judicial body. What we need in the White House is a strong man, a brave man, a pure man, a man possessed of executive ability.

But, Mr. Chairman, why was this civil-service law enacted? Has that question occurred to you during this debate? Wherefore was the necessity for the civil-service law? I will tell you. After a long lease of power by the Republican party it had degraded the public service into the mud and the mire. That service had become a sham and a disgrace among civilized nations. Republicans who were conscientious and who loved their country better than their party clamored for some law which would lift up the public service from the mire into which it had been trampled by Republican administrations. Am I warranted in this statement? I will read to you from the speech of as good a Republican as you have in your party, Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts. I believe him to be as bitter and extreme a partisan as you have, but a man gifted at times with lofty ideas and patriotic sentiments. What has he said of the condition of the public service under your Republican administrations?

SENATOR HOAR'S ARRAIGNMENT.

My own public life has been a very brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of Senatorial office; but in that brief period I have seen five judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption or maladministration. I have heard the taunt, from friendless lips, that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption. I have seen in the State of the Union foremost in power and wealth four judges of her courts impeached for corruption, and the political administration of her chief city become a disgrace and a by-word throughout the world.

I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, now a distinguished member of this court, rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military school. When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in the highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should be gained in the Republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used, when gained, is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of trusted companions of the President.

This is an indictment prepared by one of your most powerful leaders against the character of the public service which existed under Republican administrations. It was a condition of things like this that induced the people to demand a reform in the civil service. I have not time to dwell upon other evidences of the corruption that prevailed under the old system, but I want to ask you what is the condition of the civil service to-day? The great bane of the Republic, the thing that threatens its life with more peril than anything else, was the system of political assessments which were levied under Republican administrations upon every office-holder from the highest to the lowest.

Down in my own Congressional district postmasters receiving but a trifling salary were importuned by circulars sent them in the nature of threats that, unless they surrendered a portion of their salaries, they would be required to surrender their official lives. Are any such things practiced under this Democratic administration? You carried the election for President in 1880 by corrupting the ballot-box in Indiana, mainly by means of assessments forced out of the pockets of the employés of the United States. How has it been under the present Democratic administration? Have any political assessments been made?

A MEMBER. They have not had the chance yet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir; we had the chance last year in the election for governor in the State of New York—a very important election. That election was held without being influenced by the exercise of Federal patronage—without the levying of assessments upon any Democratic office-holder under Democratic administration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did not the President make a contribution?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The President himself, exercising his right as a citizen, by his own free act not only contributed his money for the legitimate expenses of the campaign, but he went over to Buffalo to exercise the right of American citizenship by casting his vote. But the President never allowed a single employé of the administration to be forced into a contribution to elect the governor of New York?

I am sorry my time has expired.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I yield the time back to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. CANNON. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] yielded to me fifteen minutes yesterday, and I promised to return it.

Mr. RYAN. Then I will yield my ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to my friend from Kansas for his kindness. I do not desire, however, to trespass further upon the attention of the House, as the time for general debate is limited and several gentlemen on this side as well as on the other are exceedingly anxious to speak. I will therefore reserve the ten minutes which my friend from Kansas has yielded to me, and will see whether I shall have an opportunity to use it. I may not wish to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HOLMAN] is entitled to an hour to close the debate, but has indicated his disposition to occupy only forty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will simply reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not practicable for the gentleman to reserve his time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well, then; I am willing to lose it. Several gentlemen have importuned me for time. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] is anxious to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. I yielded my time to the gentleman from Illinois because I supposed he wanted to use it himself. As he does not, if there is any gentleman on this side who desires to speak I will yield to him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] wants to speak, and my friend from New York [Mr. ADAMS] had agreed to give him a portion of his time.

Mr. RYAN. I will reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair repeats that the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to an hour to close the debate, but asks for only forty minutes. There are only fifty minutes remaining altogether for general debate, and it is not possible for any gentleman to reserve his time; it must be used now.

Mr. RANDALL. If no gentleman desires to occupy the ten minutes we can close the debate that much sooner.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, it is recorded in Scripture that Saint Paul, although a convert to Christianity, became afterward the chief of the apostles; and although our Republican brethren for twenty-five years persecuted the civil-service reformers, there is no reason to doubt, from their expressions here to-day, that in the future they may become its chief apostles.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at this question of civil-service reform frankly and candidly. The civil service of the United States had gotten into a very bad condition. As will be admitted by even our Republican friends, it was intensely partisan. More than that, from the failure to recognize certain States and sections of the country, it was openly and notoriously sectional. A large number of States had no representatives in the civil service of the Government. In fact, although the law itself after it was passed said that appointments should be apportioned among the various States on the basis of population, citizens of a portion of the States were carefully excluded from participation in the affairs of the Government, so that the administration of this Government was not only partisan and avowedly sectional, but it had grown in the course of years to be disgracefully dishonest.

In addition to this the Hubbells and kindred political pirates walked in the light of day levying campaign contributions from every unfortunate Federal employé, from the scrubwomen to the chiefs of bureaus. Public office was no longer a public trust, in the language of our Chief Executive, but private, personal, and party property to be held subject to the whim and caprice of the feudal lords of the Republican party. The people's Government had become but an adjunct and appendage to campaign committees. Patriotic and honest men in the Republican party became alarmed. Becoming mutinous at this shameful prostitution of public trust, they were quickly deposed and relegated to private life. Allied to every corporation, the party was plutocratic without and autocratic within. Democratic-republican government was in supreme danger. A spontaneous uprising of honest men all over our land in clamorous protest faced the demoralized organization then in power.

There was no wonder, therefore, the people of the United States rose in their might and demanded that the civil service should be reformed. There was a great deal to reform. It was an honest demand of the honesty, morality, patriotism, and the intelligence of the land that the civil service should be reformed. In the work of reformation the leading spirits, the men who took the initiative, were members of the Democratic party, and if they were Democrats in spirit as well as in name the animating cause, the basis upon which they were seeking to make a reform of the civil service must be on the text of the illustrious Thomas Jefferson. For, sir, Thomas Jefferson stands to-day to the Democratic party as an apostle of the sacred writings does to those who came after Him. The civil-service ideas of Thomas Jefferson were put in one sentence, brief, sententious, incisive: Is he honest, is he capable, and is he faithful to the Constitution?

The civil-service reform which was initiated by Democrats was to place in the civil service men who were honest and capable and faithful to the Constitution, as construed by those who administer the Government.

Here my brilliant, eloquent, and witty friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] may construe his duty to the Constitution in such a way that I will be obliged to think he is unfaithful to that instrument. In those words, "faithful to the Constitution," the spirit of it was men appointed to administer civil affairs of Government were faithful to the Constitution as construed and understood by those who were responsible to the people for the administration of public affairs.

Now, is there anything wrong in the fact that the Democratic party protests against the exclusion from the public service of all those who are faithful to the Constitution as they understand it? The trouble about this whole affair originates in this way: It is the misfortune of all reforms in the whole history of the world that they fall into the hands of theorists, fanatical and impracticable people. And when civil-service reform had been fairly launched it was seized upon by impracticable, self-righteous, and conceited theorists; and worse than that, men who had no sympathy with our institutions, men who in our large cities, who get up public meetings for additional, extraordinary, and property qualifications of voters, who advocate limited franchise, who want legislative commissions instead of popular elections, who want appointive officers instead of those elected by the people. In a word, sir, that element in the United States who by the growth of population and increase of wealth becomes more numerous every day and is composed of men who are not at heart Americans, but who sympathize with what they call the mother country and who have no faith in the intelligence and the ability of the people to govern themselves, who are distrustful of free government and utterly at variance with the ideas of Thomas Jefferson. They are insidiously and unconstitutionally endeavoring to model our Government after the British constitution and to have a class established here with vested rights in the public offices. I stop here to note an answer to this charge. It is said that the competitive system was a reform in England as against hereditary property in public office—was in favor of the people.

A recently issued English book on land reform, here before me on my desk, says that a result of the yet existing feudal system is that a class of idle, worthless, and profligate men have a monopoly of the public offices. I grant English civil-service reform, so far as it goes, to be a good thing in England, and a measure of justice to the English democracy. It does what we are now trying to do, namely, make the civil service representative of the majority and not the exclusive property of one class or party. The exclusive and extreme reformers are really moving backward to the English system as it was before reform was there inaugurated. We have been in advance of all countries as to popular rights.

Sir, it was our proud boast that the American people, whether they came from the humblest cottage on the prairies of the West or in the meanest tenement of our large cities, that they had the capacity and the intelligence to govern themselves without being placed under the fostering care of any exclusive circle. That honorable ambition might be excited a large number of the executive and ministerial offices of our States and municipalities were made elective. Frequent periodic elections are yet the order throughout the land. Moreover, unbroken custom has been in favor of party responsibility and control. In the Old World the divisions were simple and natural—on one side the people, and on the other the government, each antagonistic to the other. Here the people were and are the government. For the time being the party in power speaks for the principles and policy of the Government. It selects those in sympathy with it, and the people hold it responsible for good or bad government. The party is therefore vitally concerned that its agents shall be honest and capable and in sympathy with its principles.

Under this deep responsibility it was thought necessary that those in sympathy with a certain school of political thought should have charge of the public business; and it was a test of patriotism as to which set of men throughout the country should take control. The people were obliged to assume sides, and every honest man it was insisted was interested in that manner in the perpetuity of the Government and in shaping its course on public questions.

Now, as to this proviso I must confess I do not see evil in it, and think it ought to be commended. Much has been said by my eloquent friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who stands here complacently looking at the great public service of this country in the hands of his political friends, by way of glorification of the political party which controls practically the departments of the Government under the patriotic standard of civil-service reform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CABELL. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield to my friend two minutes of my time if he wants it.

Mr. MCADOO. It is well for the gentleman to be thus eloquent, apostrophizing, upholding, and glorifying, and trying to touch the honest consciences and the morals of the people in behalf of a system which has to-day given control, without examination or test, of the public service almost absolutely in the classified departments in the interest of his political friends. Is it any wonder, on the other hand, that the majority of the people of the United States, who for twenty-five years past scarcely dared look into a public office, and were more ignorant from personal inspection as to what your Departments were doing, ay, far more ignorant, than they were of the doings of the Government of France, should at this day, after a popular and electoral vote had placed them in power, make fair demands, in my opinion, that at least one-half of the public offices of the United States should be placed in the hands of those who are in sympathy with the administration? [Applause.] Is it any wonder that gentlemen upon the other side, reared in their school of politics, are astonished at the magnanimity, the Christian magnanimity, the patience and patriotism, and I may say even the self-abnegation, of the Democratic party in the hour of its victory?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. All but the Christian part.

Mr. MCADOO. Yes, sir; we are all Christians in the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is news.

Mr. MCADOO. No such spectacle has been presented in the history of this country. The civil-service law was looked upon, under prior administrations, as something nice to talk about in magazines and on the Fourth of July, or in the pulpits, or even on the floor of the House; but it remains to the everlasting glory of the Democratic administration that they have executed the law as they found it. If the law is not good, then the legislative power of the Government has the right to amend it. But, as I said before, it is to the everlasting credit and glory of a Democratic administration, in the person of Grover Cleveland, that he has executed the law, keeping his oath of office to the letter. No wonder that it has excited surprise from our Republican opponents. No wonder they are wonderstruck at the earnestness and honesty and frankness of a Democratic President with the brigades of Democrats behind him, and who for so many years were carefully excluded from participating in government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And anxious to do so.

Mr. MCADOO. Does it follow, my friend, that we are forbidden where we know this law is vicious, where theorists have run it into the ground and distorted it in pretended reform—that we may not reform the reform, cure the doctors, and advance the advanced? Theorists, illiberal, exclusive, dogmatic, conceited people, pro-Anglicans——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. You mean mugwumps.

Mr. MCADOO. People not in sympathy with our institutions, have so managed or mismanaged this reform that legislation must now interpose.

The committee, if I understand it aright, and if I do not I hope some member of it will inform me, intended to reform the reformers and correct the censors. They are not like the lily whose beauty can not be enhanced, nor are they like the pure gold that can not be still further refined. Open the avenues by your laws to governmental employment by young and old men—men yet in the prime of life.

To this commission was delegated the making of rules that affect the people of the whole country. These rules become, therefore, extremely important. Our State courts guard very jealously against abuse of delegated legislative power to any inferior body. Shall we countenance any abuse of the letter or spirit of this legislative power to make by-laws that are so sweeping in effect? Better far to legislate directly on the whole subject and make the commission executive and ministerial in carrying out the will of Congress. In a democracy laws made at second-hand are scarcely ever popular. Reform, therefore, of any abuse of this delegated power will be heartily accepted by the people.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I arise to advocate the conditions mentioned in this bill upon which the salaries of the Civil Service Commission are made available.

Section 2 of Article II of the Constitution disposes of the appointing power as follows:

> * * * but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

The appointing power conferred by Congress upon the heads of Departments in pursuance of this constitutional provision, I respectfully submit, can not be interfered with or abridged by legislative enactment. Yet Rule XVI of the amended civil-service rules provides that—

> Whenever an officer having the power of appointment or employment shall so request, there shall be certified to him by the commission or the proper examining board, four names for the vacancy specified, * * * and from the said four a selection shall be made for the vacancy.

The last clause read of this rule says, "and from the said four a selection shall be made for the vacancy." Does not this rule interfere with and abridge the exercise of the constitutional right of appointment by limiting the number from which a selection may be made? The appointing power is essentially a power of choice. Suppose, for the sake of illustration, that only one name be certified for appointment, is not the right of choice altogether destroyed? Does it not follow that when but four names are certified the right of choice is curtailed and the power of appointment abridged in a degree not contemplated by the constitutional provision from which the power is derived? Are not all qualifications and limitations upon this power by Congress a usurpation of authority?

It may be argued that the President in preparing and promulgating rules to make effective the civil-service act consented to such modifications of his constitutional power in the premises as the rules effected. But while his right to do so may be seriously questioned, no appointment of his falls within the scope of the act, and the argument does not apply to either of the heads of the several Departments of the Government in whom Congress, in pursuance of the constitutional provision, has vested the power to appoint.

But, in addition to the constitutional objection just mentioned, I am wholly unable to understand in what way the interest of the service is promoted by compelling a selection for appointment to be made from so small a number of names as is now certified for that purpose. If, as is conceded by the Civil Service Commission, "the head of the Department knows best the kind of excellence needed in a particular vacancy," the larger the number of those found duly qualified on examination from which a choice may be made the more likely is such excellence to be obtained.

It may be urged that to afford an opportunity to the appointing power to make a selection from the whole list of eligibles belonging to any one State will endanger the success of those graded highest upon the list. Although this be true, it is in no wise inconsistent with the civil-service law, for the commission does not rely upon the examination as an infallible test of merit, and has provided by its rules for a probationary service of six months before an appointment is made absolute

Under the law as it now exists it is not certain that the one graded highest upon the list will be first certified, for when a vacancy occurs the rules require that the selection to fill it shall be made from the State or Territory which has received the least proportional share of all the appointments then made under the act, regardless of the grading of applicants from any other State or Territory.

So we find that in making this demand for the names of all the eligibles from which to make a selection, we are only extending a principle already approved by the Civil Service Commission, and bringing the practice under the law nearer in accord with the constitutional power of appointment.

I will now pass to the consideration of the age limitation, which as at present prescribed by a civil-service rule I regard as an unjust and oppressive discrimination against more than seven millions of reputable American citizens, thus placing them in the same category with convicted felons and punishing men for growing old. Those who are convicted of certain high crimes and misdemeanors while holding office under the United States and a few who are adjudged guilty of certain infamous crimes in her courts of law are forever deprived of the right to hold office. Yet without trial and without the intervention of a jury a large class of our fellow-citizens are placed on a level in this one respect with the most degraded in the land.

The framers of our Constitution in their wisdom did not see proper to apply this test to the high office of President of the United States or Senator or Representative in Congress; but it was left for the Civil Service Commission to make age a cause of disqualification for him who aspires to be a night inspector in the customs service or a copyist in one of the Departments of the Government, in this way depriving a vast number of persons at once and forever of one of the privileges of American citizenship, and that, too, without relieving them of any of its burdens.

What will be the result, Mr. Chairman, if this odious discrimination be continued? Will it not render apathetic and indifferent a very large class of our people to the results of our elections and thereby put in jeopardy our republican institutions?

When we consider that this proscribed class is made up of those whose passions have been subdued by age, whose intellects have been matured by time, and whose judgments have been perfected by experience, is it wise to thus bar them from the public service?

This, Mr. Chairman, is, in my humble judgment, one of the very worst features of the civil-service law as at present administered. It is certainly not civil-service reform. Why shall we not then avail ourselves of the opportunity here offered to apply the proper corrective? It has been alleged here upon this floor that this is not a manly way in which to right the wrong complained of. In vindication of this course I now send to the Clerk's desk, to have read, a portion of the proceedings of the Senate upon the passage of the civil-service law:

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer one or two amendments in aid of the bill, as I suppose. There is one clause in the bill, the last clause of section 4, which I take it the committee will allow to be stricken out, because it will not be found in any other act, and it is a discrimination in favor of this service as against the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, members of Congress, and everybody else. The clause to which I refer reads:

"And the cost and expense thereof, and the several salaries, compensations, and necessary expenses hereinbefore mentioned, upon the same being stated in detail and verified by affidavit, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

That is a permanent appropriation for an ordinary branch of the service, and it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not hear my colleague.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that this is a provision that is not made as to any branch of the public service.

Mr. PENDLETON. What provision is that, if the Senator pleases?

Mr. SHERMAN. The last clause of the fourth section. It is the provision making a permanent appropriation for the expenses of the commission. We have got rid of all such permanent appropriations.

Mr. PENDLETON. Are there no other permanent appropriations?

Mr. SHERMAN. None that I know of for any branch of the civil service, or the Army or Navy. The judges of the Supreme Court are appropriated for annually, as is every branch of the service. As a matter of course Congress may discontinue the service when it chooses to do it, either by repealing the law or refusing appropriations.

Mr. PENDLETON. The purpose of putting it as a permanent appropriation was to obviate a difficulty that I am sure the Senator remembers to have occurred some years ago in Congress when General Grant was applying most earnestly and sincerely, at least apparently sincerely, I have no doubt actually sincerely, for an appropriation to carry out the seventeen hundred and fifty-third section of the Revised Statutes. The possibility of carrying that out, as the Senator will remember, lapsed by reason of the failure to make any appropriation. The clause was intended to obviate a difficulty of that sort by making this a permanent appropriation. If it will gain votes for the bill, if it will strengthen the idea of carrying out this service, I do not intend to insist upon that, so far as I have any power to accede to an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will only say that I do not want the bill to start with a weakness so palpable as that it claims for itself an exemption from that examination to which all branches of the public service are subjected every year by the necessity of an annual appropriation.

Mr. PENDLETON. Is there no permanent appropriation now on the statute-book?

Mr. SHERMAN. None except for the armament of the militia, the payment of the public debt, the interest on the public debt, and things of that kind, in which the credit of the Government is involved.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have no authority to assent on behalf of the committee to this amendment, but personally I should not be opposed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to strike out the last clause of section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

"As a matter of course," says Senator SHERMAN, "Congress may discontinue the service when it chooses to do it, either by repealing the law or refusing appropriations." Here we have authority for the course we are now pursuing, which ought to commend itself to our Republican friends upon the other side of the Chamber. But this is not an effort to repeal the law, rather to amend the regulations, so as to harmonize them, in a degree at least, with our republican form of government.

[Before Mr. SHAW had concluded his remarks his time expired.

Mr. SHAW. I would like to have a few minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SHAW resumed and concluded his remarks as above printed.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask general consent that any gentleman who desires may have leave to print in the RECORD remarks on this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand I have seventeen minutes left. Has the other side any time remaining?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to make a suggestion which I think will meet the approval of my friend from Pennsylvania. There are twelve minutes I understand which belong to this side, and I desire to yield them to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX], chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object to his proceeding now?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not. But if that arrangement is made the House will have to extend the time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think not. I yield those ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. COX. In the few moments allowed me I can not hope to treat this question in the manner it deserves. I will remark at the outset that the friends of civil-service reform have nothing to fear from the discussion which has taken place on this floor. They have passed through far more formidable opposition and came off victorious. Their effort to purify, elevate, and reform the public service is a most laudable one, and the people will see that they have a reasonable opportunity to try the experiment. Panoplied in the cause of right they will go forward.

The smooth stone in the sling of the youth was far more formidable than all the threats and boastings of the great Goliath of Gath. I am not here to speak of the violations of this law, for it is to be judged not by the action of its unfaithful guardians, but upon its own merits. The committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, after fully and carefully considering a bill for its repeal which was referred to it, submitted the following reasons among others for opposing its repeal:

(1) The principle of divorcing the subordinate offices of the Government from politics and elections and making the term of office depend, not upon party service, but upon merit and good behavior, is a good one. So far as this principle is sustained by the present law, the committee think there should be no change.

(2) The present law has not been on the statute-books long enough to have had a full and complete trial. If for no other reason than this, the committee will oppose any measure providing for an absolute repeal.

(3) No reason or information has been presented to this committee justifying an unconditional repeal of the present law. It may perhaps need improvement, but the remedy is amendment, not total repeal.

I stand to-day by the declarations and reasons of the committee. No human laws are perfect, and hence we see that legislative bodies are continually altering, amending, and changing those upon the statute-books. It is no argument against this law to say it has not been carried out in good faith; but on the contrary it presents forcible reasons why we should seek to amend and improve it. As faithful guardians of the public interest it behooves us first to inquire whether a law is in itself right, and if it is right we should throw such restrictions around it as would punish and dishonor those who willfully violate it.

That it does improve and elevate the public service when carried out in its purity and integrity there are none so bold as to deny. The Democratic committee of this House on Reform in the Civil Service in the Forty-eighth Congress gave it their unanimous indorsement. The President in his recent message to Congress said it was no longer an experiment but was accomplishing all its most partial friends claim for it.

The governor of New York, the ideal Democrat of the young Democracy, in his inaugural address spoke in the highest terms of the good it was accomplishing, and Governors Robinson, of Massachusetts, and Hoadly, of Ohio, strongly indorse this reform. Not only this, but the Legislative Assemby of South Carolina, both before and since the election of the President, has expressed its approval of the measure. I might go on and give citations from distinguished statesmen and writers in and out of public position who have added their testimony in behalf of civil-service reform.

Probably the most determined but theoretic spoilsman who ever occupied the White House was Andrew Johnson, but he was unable to carry his purposes into practice by reason of the impediments that were thrown in his way by the Congress of the United States. In 1846 he introduced a bill in Congress of a most demagogical character in regard to rotation in office. In 1861 he asserted it was the duty of Southern Senators to thwart every plan of the incoming administration by rejecting all Presidential nominations not advantageous to the South.

In 1866 he openly defied the power of Congress to check his course in regard to removals, and as he swung around the circle he declared in his speech at Saint Louis, in speaking of those then in office, "if you [the people] will stand by me I will kick them out as fast as I can." I do not wish to be understood as participating in this quarrel beeween the Republican party and their chosen Executive, but allude to the quarrel in order to show the bitter contests which have heretofore prevailed in regard to the appointments to office. Mr. Lincoln had declared that the pressure in his time was so great that he had not time to devote to the preservation of the Union; that he felt like a man who was letting apartments in the front part of his house, and had not time to turn around and put out the fire which was consuming the rear.

To present but an imperfect outline of the corruption and demoralization of the civil service of this Government I need but to call your attention to the remarks made by Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, on the trial of Belknap. He stated that in the brief period he had been in public life he had seen five judges of high courts of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment; he had seen in the State of this Union foremost in power and wealth four of her judges impeached for corruption; he had seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting youths to the United States Military Academy; he had heard in highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should be gained in the Republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used when gained, to be the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge; and he said:

"I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of trusted companions of the President. These things have passed into history." And he lived to see more. He lived to see a Vice-President of the United States driven in disgrace and humiliation from his exalted position in the other end of the Capitol. He lived to see a President exalted to high station by such questionable means that not all the honors heaped upon him could command the respect of even his own party, and who even while living is mentioned only to mark an epoch in our history which we would gladly forget. He lived to see the senators of the Empire State indignantly resign their seats in the Senate in consequence of the distribution of office. He lived to see what was worse than all this, the President of the United States assassinated, in consequence of the wrangle over spoils of office, while a wail of horror and sympathy swept over the whole civilized world. Under such circumstances good men everywhere should appreciate the indispensable necessity for a reform in the civil service.

In 1864 a bill was introduced looking to the appointment of applicants for office by a test of competitive examination and a reward of merit. Politicians opposed it because it deprived them of that great patronage which enabled them to pay their political debts by appointments to public offices. But, sir, that system which contemplated testing the qualifications of men and appointing them on the test of merit was not so easily disposed of. The struggle went on, for justice and necessity were its inspiring motives. And the reform will go on despite the opposition of grasping politicians.

Talk about it being aristocratic to appoint men on account of merit instead of political influence, why, sir, it is the very genius and essence of democracy. It brings the offices within the reach of the people, and says to the tenant of the humblest hamlet, qualify yourself to serve your country and if you have merit you shall be rewarded without respect to influence or power. There is in the Treasury Department today a chief of a division who but a short while ago was an obscure village boy. He was selected by a competitive examination, entered at the lowest grade, rose by his merit, was promoted to his present position without extraneous influence or patronage, for, indeed, neither of his Senators had ever heard of him.

In addition, it gives us a better and less expensive service. When fully understood it will be appreciated, and that great power behind, that voice which makes and unmakes the politician, will demand its continuance. It is that voice which has placed it in the national platforms of both parties for the last twelve years. It was that voice which caused the law of 1871, which provided for the appointment of a commission, to be enacted and put in operation. The chairman of this commission was George William Curtis. Despite his abilities and eminent qualifications for this position the Republican party failed to sustain him in his work. The politicians who were apparently so eager for reform when canvassing before the people had their patriotic ardor rapidly cooled so soon as the election was over.

For two Congresses this party failed to make provision for the support of the commission, but the law was on the statute-book and was but imperfectly enforced in some of the custom-houses and Departments. Hon. Dorman B. Eaton succeeded Mr. Curtis and gave his services without compensation to the promotion of this reform, and even traveled abroad to investigate its practical workings in the Old World.

In 1880 Mr. Pendleton introduced his bill in the Senate, which in 1883 was enacted into a law. So great was the pressure of public opinion that after a long, able, and protracted debate, when a vote was taken on the bill, but five Senators were found to record their votes against it, namely: Messrs. BROWN, CALL, Jonas, MCPHERSON, and MORGAN, while fifteen Democrats were found voting with the majority.

When the Senate bill was brought over to the House and put upon its passage, in the half-hour's debate which ensued there was no voice on either side of the House condemning the reform, and those who opposed the measure did so because they feared the provision in regard to political assessments was not sufficiently stringent, and the vote recorded was 155 yeas to 47 nays.

If this law means nothing, why was it suffered to pass with such unanimity? If a sham and a fraud, why hold out such false hopes to delude and mislead the people? If the reform means nothing, why incorporate it in our platforms; why select as our chosen leader in the Presidential contest its earnest, able, and fearless advocate? Such favor has this law met with, such power is its adherents presumed to possess, that during the discussion in this House gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber are apologizing for the failure to carry it out in good faith, and arraigning each other for a want of integrity in regard to the matter.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said yesterday he believed the present Chief Executive was now the most popular Democrat in this country. I accept the compliment, coming from an opponent, and supplement it with the opinion that he is not only the most popular Democrat but the most popular man of either party in this country. And why? Because he is recognized as an able, fearless, and honest public servant, a man of the highest integrity and the loftiest purposes; one who when he gives his pledge to the people will stand by that pledge even though he fall in the attempt to fulfill it [applause], a man who, while coveting popularity, runs not after it, but by worthy acts leaves it to come to him. When a man stands by his integrity, when an official gives to the public his best services, he may make mistakes—all are liable to do that—but the people will make all proper allowances for the errors he may commit.

The two most important planks in the platform upon which Mr. Cleveland was elected were honesty and economy in the administration of public affairs and reform in the civil service, and in his letter of acceptance he gave his hearty assent to these measures. He had seen the Congress of the United States pass this law in 1883; he had seen in the Senate and in the House the records of the votes for and against it, and that the efforts of all seemed directed toward the perfection and not the destruction of the law. Did all this mean nothing? Was all this a sham—a fraud? Will gentlemen make such declarations as these upon the floor of this House with all the facts staring them in the face?

My distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] voted for this measure; and after it had been so much discussed by the press, upon the hustings, and in Congress, familiar as he is with all great political issues, is it not strange that he should rise in his seat during this discussion and declare that he did not know what he was voting for when he gave his assent to this measure?

Mr. HOLMAN. I made no such statement.

Mr. COX. I understood you to say you did not understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made no statement approaching that.

Mr. COX. Did you understand the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I had heard it read repeatedly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood and voted for it and am for the law.

Mr. COX. And so did I before the President was nominated. Not only that, but my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who was absent at the time the vote was taken, after sleeping on the subject came in the House the next day and stated but for a mistake he would have been present and recorded his vote for the measure. Now we have an Executive who is endeavoring to faithfully execute a law which we placed upon the statute-book, and the question arises whether we will stand by him or embarrass him in fulfilling his and our own public pledges.

If Congress does not stand by him, the people will. ["Good!" "Good!"] Here we breathe a fetid political atmosphere. It is a point at which the offices are distributed. Jealousies and rivalries excite the imagination of the Representatives, and, I fear, stimulates more of a desire to secure the patronage of office than to bestow their thoughts and attention to the preparation and enactment of wholesome legislation for the benefit of the whole people.

Why was this rider forced upon an appropriation bill in violation of one of the most stringent rules of this House, which forbids all legislation on appropriation bills, which are simply to provide for the payment of our public obligations? Was it that gentlemen might air themselves on civil-service reform, preparatory to the nominating conventions, because this law is now unpopular with the managing politician? Do they hope for its passage through this House, even if it does not go off on a point of order? Rather let us deal justly by our constituents who have dealt so generously by us.

Why place this rider upon the bill, to prevent the President from making such rules and regulations as the law authorizes him to make? It is true you seemingly strike at the commission, but it is well known the commission can not change these rules except with the approbation of the President; in fact they must emanate from him, and only by his invitation can they make suggestions. Why not withhold from the President himself the salary that he receives until he changes the rule, instead of striking at his subordinates, who can not act except by his authorization? Why strike at the humble, defenseless servant, and permit the real offender to go free? Why withhold from the President the credit of changing the rules, and arrogate to ourselves this authority which the law confers upon him?

While I am in accord with the suggestion of striking down the limitation as to age, I am not willing to violate a rule of this House to accomplish that end, especially as I have every reason to believe that it is the purpose of the Civil Service Commission to make such amendments to their regulations as will place them more in accord with popular favor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman tell us when that commission proposes to change those rules?

Mr. COX. I do not say that they will change them; I say I have every reason to believe that they will change them at an early day, but whether they do or not I am not prepared to put a rider on an appropriation bill to accomplish this purpose by indirection when the manly way would be to deal with the law direct. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I really did have hope that this proposition from the Committee on Appropriations would be discussed entirely from a public standpoint. I do not need to tax my memory or to refresh the recollection of this House in regard to the utterances of gentlemen a few years ago when they were attempting (to use a familiar phrase) to starve to death the Civil Service Commission, or to compare it with their language and conduct within the last twenty-four hours as to this proposed amendment. If they can reconcile their speeches at that time with the language that they have used on yesterday and to-day, it is not incumbent on me to run any line of comparison or to call attention to their inconsistency and duplicity. I leave them to reconcile their conduct and their voices with their own self-respect.

It has been alleged that these amendments are for the purpose of destroying the civil-service law. I maintain that the two propositions which the amendment contains have no such object, and that when they come to be inserted in the law, or to be made a part of the regulations in any other way, they will operate upon both parties alike without any partisanship whatever. First as to age limitation, that is not a part of the law which gentlemen are here boasting they voted for, and I venture the assertion that if there had been a clause in the act of the 16th of January, 1883, which proposed to proscribe the American citizen after he had reached the age of thirty-five or forty-five from being eligible to public station, there is not a man here who will say that he would have voted for such a provision. How did that get in? It got in at the will of a single individual, and no man has had the courage to utter here, either yesterday or to-day, a sentiment in favor of that part of the regulations or against the committee's amendment which applies to it.

How does this matter operate? We may safely draw the conclusion that the language to which I have referred was inserted in the regulations for the purpose of excluding from examination members of one political party. Let me illustrate this: There is not a man who was connected with the administration of this Government in 1861 and removed because of his politics, or for other reasons, who is not by this regulation debarred at this time from examination, notwithstanding the fact that his experience in previous years and his subsequent culture and development might capacitate him for being a more efficient officer than any of those now in service. Nay, more; the very effect of this regulation is to exclude more than half of the people who vote for us as Representatives from the possibility of securing any position within the classified service of this Government.

Do you tell me we should not assail that rule? I say that now and in the future, here and everywhere, I will agitate the repeal of so monstrous, so unjust, so indefensible a proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Has not the President of the United States under the law the power by a stroke of his pen to wipe out that regulation?

Mr. RANDALL. I say that this civil-service law was made by Congress; that the power of legislation rests here; that the one man to whom I have referred has undertaken to legislate and to deprive Congress of that power which should be lodged only here. I speak with deliberation, and I want the Chief Executive of this Government to hear what I have to say on this subject. [Applause.] What I say in regard to this is no assault upon the President; but I affirm to-day that the representatives of the people, by the enactment of these regulations, have been deceived and cheated, have been deprived of rights which, standing here, they ought to have defended in behalf of the people who sent them here as their representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. Cleveland is not responsible for these regulations. More than that, it is but a brief time since Mr. Cleveland could possibly have had any influence upon this commission; and following the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cox], I will say that I hope a change will soon be made, and that he will give an administration of this civil-service act that will do justice in respect to the matters I complain of.

Mr. LONG. Are not these regulations subject to the approval of the President?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and they are subject to modification by Congress.

Mr. LONG. If they are subject to the approval of the President, he is responsible for them.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not by the committee's amendment interfere in any degree with the law itself; it is the undue regulations we seek to alter. We have only sought to say to those who should be the servants of this House and the Senate, with the executive approval, that they must not attempt to exclude from participation in the offices of the Government any American citizens who are mentally and physically capable of discharging with honor and efficiency the duties of official station.

A word as to the other amendment proposed. I say, as I have said of the first part of the amendment, that this also operates on both parties alike, for the clause with reference to age affects members of the Republican party as much as it does those of the Democratic party, a discrimination against all men alike.

While we do not desire any abridgment of the right of the Executive and those under him with reference to appointments, yet we do not think it proper to permit these three members of the Civil Service Commission to exercise the prerogative of sending to the appointing power only four names from which selections must be made. Remember that this regulation is no part of the law. We propose to say that every man who under the law is eligible, who upon examination secures an average above 65, may be selected for appointment, if the appointing power, in its wisdom, after such examination shall discover him to possess the mental and physical qualifications for the particular office which he seeks.

My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] said to-day with great candor that he would prefer this selection should be confined to three or two, or even one. That was my understanding of his declaration; and it was a strange sound from the "machine" politics of Pennsylvania in view of the history of his party in my State. [Laughter.]

Before I forget it, I wish to correct the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cox] as to Andrew Johnson. Andrew Johnson never possessed the power to be a spoilsman, for no sooner had he become President than the Republican party tied his hands in reference to the power of official appointments and removals by the tenure-of-office act. That was the act of the Republican party. Sir, I ask a comparison of the past course of that party with the self-righteousness of the Republican orators on this floor within the past twenty-four hours, and let that comparison show where "the cloven foot" is.

Mr. Chairman, I have not, nor has my honorable colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whom perhaps the public press has deprived of some of the credit incident to this proposition, ever designed to interfere with the civil-service act. That act was the result of a universal condemnation of the methods of the Republican party, and the united voice of this country cried out in behalf of the enactment of such a law as would stay these abuses of public trust. They were then trembling in apprehension that they would be deprived of the administration of this Government at the following fall election of 1884, and that I believe was as much the reason for their support of the measure, which they had in every shape and form theretofore condemned when it was likely to interfere with the patronage of their administration and which they had tried to starve to death.

I am willing for a civil-service reform. I would not have such a policy go backward, after the public condemnation of the system, to a condition of things which, at the end of every Presidential election, turns out the adherents of one party indiscriminately and puts in the adherents of the successful party. But I want to remind gentlemen that this law to be permanent must be fair, must be just; and that we who advocate these amendments are trying to strip the regulations under the law of injustice by one party when dominant against other in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed for general debate has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will now be read by sections for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORRISON. I make the point of order that the words "in full compensation for the service," &c., is new legislation changing existing law. I make this point now because in the bill there are certain salaries provided for, and the amount appropriated is sometimes less and sometimes more than the salary fixed by law, and therefore against the rules. I do not know whether the point of order is properly interposed here; but I desire to make it in time to save it. I want to insist and intend to insist on a compliance with the rules of the House, whether it takes in or leaves out civil-service changes or limitations which have just now been under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the point of order may be made now.

Mr. MORRISON. Then I make the point of order already indicated or stated.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Suppose you let the committee rise now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the question of order disposed of to-night if the gentleman will present it. I desire to be heard upon it for a moment.

Mr. MORRISON. I have made the point of order and do not care to discuss it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a few remarks upon the point of order after the gentleman has stated the ground of his objection.

Mr. MORRISON. The point as already made contains the ground of objection to the clause or the words which contain new legislation. There are, as I have tried to state, several annual salaries appropriated for in the bill, some below, others above the amount now required by law. If the words on which the point is made are allowed in the bill the amount appropriated will be in full, whether more or less than existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And some hundreds of them.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly; and that is what I object to. By way of illustration let me state one case. The salary of the surveyor-general of Arizona is cut down below what the law now gives him; and the object of the point I make is to require the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money for the salaries provided by law. And if in the opinion of that committee or any member of it, or of the House, any salary is too high or too low, let them introduce a bill for the purpose, and have the change made in the usual way (and in conformity with the rules) increasing or decreasing them. [Applause.] Let the appropriations be made in conformity with the law and the rules of the House.

There are numerous provisions in the bill of the character of the one already mentioned by way of illustration. There are in the bill some salaries and rates of compensation appropriated for at a higher rate than the law provides as well as some lower, and I repeat I want the bill to conform to the law under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Several MEMBERS. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 10, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of State, with an accompanying paper, in relation to the distribution of the fund appropriated by the act of April 20, 1882, for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the brig General Armstrong.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 9, 1886.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why was the bill placed on the Calendar? Why was it not referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because a similar bill has been reported from a Senate committee, and it has been requested that the House bill should be placed upon the Calendar. If there is objection it will not be placed on the Calendar, but will lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the better way until we see that it is precisely the same as the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] reported the corresponding Senate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we want to see that it is precisely the same as the Senate bill. The bill had better lie on the table, and then it can be taken up at the proper time. That is the better way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie upon the table for the present.

Mr. MAHONE presented a memorial of Local Assembly No. 4713, Knights of Labor, of Norfolk, Va., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Jeremiah Mason, Nathan McKusick, and other citizens of Saco, Me., praying for the better protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1340) for the relief of E. J. Northcutt & Brothers, for losses sustained by Indian depredations in Southern Oregon in 1855, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 282) for the relief of A. B. Norton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH. I am also directed by the Committee on Claims to report a separate amendment to the bill just reported by me, which I propose to offer when the bill comes up for consideration. It is in the character of general legislation, providing for the payment of all similar claims; and I have reported it separately in order that a separate vote may be had upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1197) for the relief of William H. Young, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1150) pranting a pension to Catherine E. Coffin;
A bill (S. 2569) granting a pension to Helen H. Harrell;
A bill (H. R. 4615) for the relief of Ann Leddy;
A bill (S. 1838) to increase the pension of George R. Hooper;
A bill (S. 2321) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson; and
A bill (H. R. 8651) increasing the pension of Alfred J. Hill.

CHILDREN OF SURGEON ALFRED M. OWEN.

Mr. BLAIR. The House of Representatives has returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of the children of the late Surg. Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill, the House bill on that subject having passed.

The motion was agreed to.

B. W. PERKINS'S CLAIM AGAINST RUSSIA.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 1st of February last, requesting the President of the United States to call the attention of the Russian Government to the claim of the legal representatives of Benjamin W. Perkins, deceased, against that government, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the resolution was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2633) to promote safer and quicker transportation of passengers and mails than ordinary; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2634) granting a pension to David H. Whitney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2635) granting a pension to Martha Hoover; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2636) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2637) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2638) to provide for the survey of the grant known as the Hanson Grant, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mary Morrisett, daughter of Peter K. Morgan, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2640) for the relief of the estate of Oswell P. Newly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 2641) for the relief of Harriet W. Shacklett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2642) for the relief of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter and St. Paul at Chattanooga, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2643) supplemental to an act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2644) to increase the naval establishment; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to have the reference of a bill changed which I introduced on the 3d day of this month. It is the bill (S. 2595) for the relief of Mrs. Adelaide H. Graton, which should have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but it was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I ask that the reference may be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reference of the bill will be changed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MAHONE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the pension case of Peter K. Morgan, pensioned under special act of the Forty-sixth Congress, 1879-'80, be withdrawn from the Senate files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Harriet W. Shacklett now on the files of the Senate be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Lewis D. Allen be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. EVARTS, it was Ordered, That Thomas A. Lawrence have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate upon leaving copies of the same with the Secretary.

READING OF HOUSE REPORTS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up the resolution I offered yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution which comes over under objection from yesterday.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate it is not out of order when a private bill is under consideration to read or refer to a report upon the same made to the House of Representatives during the present Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This resolution declares the opinion of the Senate upon a question of parliamentary law and practice of this body. In order that my position upon it may be made clear, I wish to state exactly what I think the parliamentary law is. I suggested to my friend from Massachusetts that we did not differ in respect of the practice in regard to reports that had been sent to us by the House of Representatives accompanying bills which they had passed, and with the papers, for a committee to take that report, with the papers to refer to, to save writing another, which I have never objected to; but the point I made was in respect of a report on a matter still pending in the other House, which, like all its other proceedings until they are sent to us, it has always been thought by parliamentary writers injurious to the independence of the two Houses and to their good understanding to refer to and comment upon, either favorably or unfavorably.

To save the time of going into a discussion of that precise point, which is all the point I make, I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts to let this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules, so that they may report a rule upon the subject.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to state my view first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. It is an old rule of parliamentary law undoubtedly that you may not refer to the proceedings in the other legislative body, or the debates there, or the particular votes or majorities there. That is for two reasons: first, that there may not be criticism of such action in the other House, disrespectful criticism, which might lead to ill-feeling between the two Houses; second, that an undue or improper influence may not be exerted upon the votes of members of one legislative body by referring to the opinions of the other.

But this is practically and entirely an obsolete rule. In Great Britain, from whence the rule came, in our State Legislatures, and here there is a phrase, "another place," or "I see it in a publication on our desks," that such an utterance has been made, and so on, so that it has become one of the merest and idlest parliamentary fictions in practice where the rule does prevail.

But I claim that the precedents of the Senate have determined from a very remote period that in this particular it is in order to refer to what has taken place in the House of Representatives, and it is of very great convenience to all the committees who have to deal with facts and to report facts to the Senate that our precedents should be obeyed and not displaced; that is, that we shall be permitted when we find on investigation that there has been a full report of the facts in a case before the Committee on Patents, the Committee on Claims, the Committee on Military Affairs, or a great many others, that a report should be adopted, and that whether the other House has passed the bill and sent the matter over or not. It never would happen that there would be a disagreeable or discourteous discussion arise out of it.

For that reason, as the intimation seemed to come from the Senator from Vermont that he proposed to invoke the old parliamentary rule with such a degree of strictness as to prevent this convenient practice, I thought the matter should be settled by the Senate. But I am perfectly willing to adopt the Senator's suggestion, and let the resolution go to the Committee on Rules if the chairman of that committee is of opinion that the Committee on Rules can deal with the subject pretty soon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the reference I wish to say one word. I moved the reference chiefly so as not to take up time in a discussion now over a matter which undoubtedly may be settled by the committee.

I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that there is any immemorial precedent or any precedent at all, except once or twice in this session, when a report of a House committee on a matter which had not been sent with the papers by the House here has been taken by a Senate committee and adopted for its report; and for the obvious reason (saying nothing about the proprieties between the two Houses) that until the report came here with the papers and evidence on which the House committee acted it could not be in the possession of our committee to see whether those papers and evidence supported the House report or not. On the other hand, when the House has sent a bill with the report and the papers accompanying it I have never objected to the propriety of the Senate committee, having the means of verifying the correctness of that report and finding it correct, adopting it rather than writing a new one.

That is the difference between the recollection of the Senator from Massachusetts and mine as to the history of these precedents. On the general subject I do not wish to take time to discuss it now, as my friend consents to a reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Committee on Rules in considering the resolution will give it a pretty wide scope. Many of the dangers which have been presented by the old writers upon parliamentary law, when Jefferson's Manual and Cushing's Manual were compiled, have, if they ever existed, entirely disappeared. There are no such circumstances surrounding legislative bodies now as there were then.

The proceedings of every legislative body in Christendom to-day are sent by the telegraph broad and wide to the whole world, and the impressions made upon the public by these swift and instantaneous communications come back at once to the body that has given rise to the communication, and also to the other co-ordinate body of legislation. There is nothing which takes place in the House of Representatives to-day that is of any importance which does not go to the farthest borders of the Republic before morning, and the comments, the views of the public through the press, come back to the House in twelve hours, and come back to the Senate.

The effect of one body upon the other is immensely increased from what it was in former days of comparative seclusion of the two Houses; and to set up here what to me is a superstition any longer is rather useless.

I have never been able to see, when I have been discussing matters upon this floor, or when other Senators have been discussing matters here which have been considered by the House of Representatives, what harm can be done, what dreadful mischief will ensue, what irretrievable calamity will fall upon us, if I should refer to a bill which is before the Senate as having been passed by an overwhelming majority in the House of Representatives. I have been interrupted time and again by the Senator from Vermont, in the exercise of his undoubted right under the existing law, in making such reference and prevented from going on in my reference by this iron rule being applied to my remarks; and other Senators have been in the same condition. For the life of me I have not been able to see any reason why the rule should be longer continued.

There is no danger of either House to-day being improperly influenced by any reference that shall be made to the other body, and I would let that rule disappear under the advancing light that rests upon us.

So far as the other reason, which has some force, is concerned, that allusions to the other House might run into improprieties and might create exasperation between the two bodies, all that is needed, it seems to me, is the same rule that applies here between one Senator and another. Certain allusions, certain characterizations, are not permissible here between the members of this body, and justly and rightly and properly so. But I do not see, in referring to the proceedings of the other House, why any more stringent rule should be needed than is applied between ourselves. That is a thing which the sense of propriety and fitness lying in the breast of each Senator will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred care for itself.

So I hope that the Committee on Rules, in considering this subject, will deal liberally with it, and will remove whatever is left of superstition merely, which has no foundation in actual danger, and give us a clean, clear-cut rule, which will apply to-day to the proceedings of the two Houses in their relations to each other and to the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. I gave notice on Monday that after the close of the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take a vote upon Senate bill 2578. I move to take it up for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MAHONE. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take up the agricultural appropriation bill at or before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BECK. The bill I have called up will take but a moment, I hope. I have not a word to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that bill ever been referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I think it had better be voted down than go there. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw that motion and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. A reference to any committee amounts to a defeat of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we will take it on the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Frye,	Miller,	Teller.
Chace,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Cullom	Hawley,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—24.

Beck,	Brown,	Call,	Coke,
Berry,	Butler,	Cockrell,	Colquitt,
Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Vest,
George,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Harris,	Maxey,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa,
Harrison,	Payne,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Vance,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Walthall.
Gibson,	Kenna,	Plumb,

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on political questions, but as I presume he would vote for this bill if here, I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I have just been asked to pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am quite sure my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON], if he were present, would vote "yea" on this question. So if the Senator from New York desires to vote, he can cast his vote.

Mr. MILLER. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I announce again that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is absent, paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] who is also absent, both under the orders of the Senate. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the city and is sick. If he were present, my impression is that he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. On that statement I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allison,	Cullom,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Mahone,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Hale,	Miller,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Harris,	Morrill,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Payne,
Coke,	Hawley,	Plumb,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

NAYS—11.

Bowen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Riddleberger,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Call,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Vance,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Walthall.

So the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. MAHONE. I now ask the Senate to take up the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I rose to move to take up the bill to forfeit the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad, but I understand the appropriation bill has preference. As soon as that is disposed of I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill I have indicated (S. 2172), a bill restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the agricultural appropriation bill will be taken up.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAHONE. As explanatory of the condition of the bill and the action of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit a statement for insertion in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Amount of estimates	$651,875 00
Amount of direct appropriations made by House bill	523,715 00
Amount reappropriated by House bill from unexpended balances of former appropriations	142,449 96
Total as passed the House	666,164 96
Net reduction made by Senate committee	2,949 96
Total as reported to Senate	663,215 00
Amount of act for 1886	580,790 00
The bill as reported exceeds the estimates	11,340 00
The bill as reported exceeds the act for 1886	82,425 00

Changes in amounts of House bill made by the Senate committee are as follows:

Increase:

Botanical division	$6,300 00
Pomological division	6,200 00
Entomological division	4,000 00
Silk-culture	8,000 00
Museum	1,000 00
Division of agricultural statistics	15,000 00
Total increase	40,500 00

Reduction:

Microscopical division	1,000 00
Bureau of Animal Industry	42,449 96
Total reduction	43,449 96
Net reduction	2,949 96

The increase made by the bill over the act for the current fiscal year is principally in the following items:

For investigating the diseases of fruits, grains, &c.	$5,000
For pomological investigations	8,200
For purchase of food samples and investigating adulteration of food	1,000
For sorghum and sugar-cane investigations	54,000
For investigation of habits, &c., of insects and promotion of economic ornithology	5,000
For repairs to buildings, walks, and fences	6,625
For purchase, cultivation, &c., of foreign medicinal plants	2,000
	81,825

The principal items of reduction from act for current year are:

For collecting, &c., agricultural statistics	5,000
For tea-plant culture	1,000

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as the reading of the bill proceeds, that being the usual order in regard to all general appropriation bills.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in the clause making appropriations for the "office of Commissioner of Agriculture," in line 20, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One pomologist, $2,000; one botanist, $2,000; one assistant botanist, $1,200.

Mr. MAHONE. It is proper to say that those items will appear in another place in the bill. The amendments are mere transpositions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, line 34, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the "office of Commissioner of Agriculture" from $69,180 to $65,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 36, to insert:

Botanical division:

For compensation of botanist, $2,000; for one assistant botanist, $1,500; for one clerk, $1,000; for investigating the nature of the diseases of fruits and fruit-trees, grains, and other useful plants due to parasitic fungi, and for experiments necessary to determine suitable remedies for these diseases, and for field investigation in the South and West with respect to the discovery and introduction into cultivation of forage plants and grasses suitable to increase the grazing capacity of the arid districts of the South and West, $5,000; in all, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 48, to insert:

Pomological division:

For compensation of pomologist, $2,000; one clerk of class 1, $1,200; and for the collection and dissemination of pomological information, $5,000; in all, $8,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for "microscopical division," in line 57, to strike out "one assistant microscopist, $1,000."

Mr. MILLER. Unless there is some special reason for this amendment, in my judgment it should not be agreed to. This division is now doing most valuable work in connection with the investigation of the adulteration of foods, particularly in connection with the manufacture of imitation butter. If I understand the condition of affairs there, this assistant microscopist is not only desired but is actually needed. I trust, unless there is some important reason, the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, line 61, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for microscopical division from $4,000 to $3,000.

Mr. MILLER. That ought to be disagreed to with the other.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for "chemical division," in line 68, after the word "chemist," to insert "and for necessary changes in and additions to the fixtures to the laboratory;" and in line 73, after the word "necessary," to insert "traveling and other;" so as to make the clause read:

Chemical division:

For compensation of chief chemist, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one assistant chemist, $1,400; employment of additional assistance, when necessary, in the chemical division, $6,000; chemicals and apparatus for the use of the chemist, and for necessary changes in and additions to the fixtures to the laboratory, and necessary expenses in conducting experiments, including purchase of samples, $6,000; for purchase, erection, transportation, and operation of machinery, and necessary traveling and other expenses in continuing and concluding experiments in the manufacture of sugar, by the diffusion and saturation processes, from sorghum and sugar-cane, so much thereof as may be necessary to be immediately available, $94,000; in all 111,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 78, to insert the following clause:

All machinery purchased under the provisions of this act shall be built in the United States, wholly of domestic material; and experiments in diffusion and carbonation herein provided for applied to sorghum and tropical sugar-cane shall be made during the approaching sugar-making season. No other sugar-making experiments shall be made under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause making appropriations for "entomological division," in line 88, to reduce the amount of the appropriation for compensation of "one assistant entomologist" from $1,800 to $1,400.

Mr. MILLER. I notice that the salaries of all the assistants in the entomological division have been reduced very materially by our Appropriations Committee from the figures put in the bill by the House of Representatives. Heretofore the principal assistants in this division have not had their salaries fixed in the bill. There was a lump appropriation of $4,000, out of which the two principal assistants were paid their compensation, as fixed by the Commissioner of Agriculture. For the last two or three years the salaries which have been paid to these assistants have been exactly the sums which appear in the bill as it originally passed the other House. I am very frank to say that I think these salaries are quite low enough. These officers are educated scientists; and certainly they ought to have as high a rate of compensation as the first class and are ordinary clerks who do nothing but bookkeeping and the preparation of letters and documents. I am told that the class of men now employed there can not in all probability be retained by the department if these reductions are made.

It seems to me that the reduction is unwarranted by all the facts in the case, and I trust that the scientific work of this department will not be curtailed by the provision of such low salaries that the department will not be able to command the best talent in the country, for certainly if any scientific work is to be done by this department it should be done by competent persons, by qualified experts, and not have to resort to ordinary clerks. These salaries here, as they come from the House, $1,800, $1,600, and $1,400, are not even as high as we pay to a great majority of the clerks in the various departments of this Government who have no scientific or technical knowledge whatever. These gentlemen have given years of study to their profession; and it seems a pitiable sum and an unusual reduction, I think, to cut down their salaries. I trust they may be allowed to remain just as they were in the original bill.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, what the Senator from New York says as to the possible insufficiency of the salaries provided in this particular case would be all very well, but I think it will occur to him that they are about the same grade as prevails throughout the department.

The Senator is in error as to the salaries previously paid under this division for these particular persons, because in the bill for the year now passing we find that the salary paid to the assistants was $1,400, and although the bill came from the House with this increase, the Senate Committee on Appropriations did not think there was sufficient reason for the increase which the House makes in these particulars.

Mr. MILLER. We are both substantially correct in our statements.

The bill of last year did provide for one assistant at the rate of $1,400, but in addition to that there was a lump sum of $4,000 appropriated, and out of that $4,000 the Commissioner did pay two assistants, one $1,800 and the other $1,600. These men are both of a higher grade than the one provided for in the bill of last year at $1,400, and I have no doubt that the provision of $1,400 of last year for one assistant is the cause of misleading the Senator from Virginia and the Committee on Appropriations in thus changing these salaries. I have here a statement from the department and from the assistant in charge of the entomological division fully carrying out all the statements I have made in regard to these salaries. If desired I will have it read.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be read.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Iowa desires it to be read. It was sent for my private information, but let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, but before concluding was interrupted by

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I care to have the entire letter read. The Senator states that the contents of it seem to be that this appropriation he seeks is the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to say, that these men receive precisely what is included in the bill as he proposes to amend it for the current year.

Mr. MILLER. Precisely, with a variation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The letter seems to be very short, and I should like to hear it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
DIVISION OF ENTOMOLOGY,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I send you herewith a written memorandum of the facts concerning the salaries of the assistants in the entomological division which I mentioned to you in conversation last evening.

For the past two years but one assistant entomologist has been designated in the appropriation bill, and his salary was placed at $1,400. An additional appropriation of $4,000 was made for assistants when needed, and from this sum two men of a higher grade have been paid, while five or six others, including clerks, artists, and messenger, have been remunerated from the lump sum for the investigation of injurious insects.

In the bill now under consideration the House has fixed the salaries of the assistant entomologists at the same sum at which they have been fixed the past two years by the Commissioner of Agriculture, namely, one at $1,800, one at $1,600, and one at $1,400, and has done away entirely with the lump sum of $4,000 for other assistants when needed. These salaries the Senate Committee on Appropriations has cut down to one at $1,400 and two at $1,200 each.

We have at present in the entomological division a most excellent working force, but it will be impossible to keep these men if the salaries are cut down to the sums mentioned in the bill as amended by the Senate. Their places can not be filled by others. They have served from two to seven years each in the division, and are thoroughly familiar with the class of work which is performed there. They are all men who have spent years in the study of entomology, and it seems unjust that their compensation should be reduced to the level with those of first and second class clerks.

Thanking you for your kind promise of assistance in this matter, I am,
Yours, most respectfully,

L. O. HOWARD, Assistant in Charge.

Hon. WARNER MILLER, United States Senator,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, Senate Chamber, City.

Mr. ALLISON. From that letter it would appear that the Committee on Appropriations have been in error in respect to the compensation paid to these people during the present year; but we were misled by the lump appropriation of $4,000, and I must say that I think it is very remarkable that appropriating a lump sum "for assistance in the entomological division, when necessary, $4,000," the Commissioner of Agriculture asking us to appropriate last year that additional sum in order to cover extraordinary and necessary expenses when we made a specific appropriation for one assistant, that $4,000 should have been used the current year by making two assistants receive more pay than the assistant specifically provided for. I think that is a most remarkable statement of facts.

Mr. MILLER. I have nothing to say as to that, but if I am correctly informed this has been the practice for a number of years.

Mr. ALLISON. Whether it has been the practice for one or more years, it is certainly a most extraordinary thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 5.

Mr. HARRIS. We may as well have the yeas and nays, or there will be no quorum voting.

Mr. MILLER. I shall not insist upon a count. Of course the question can go to the conference unless the Committee on Appropriations yields. I think if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would carefully examine this matter he would agree with my proposition; but I am satisfied to leave it to the conference committee and let it go without a call.

Mr. MAHONE. Let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to, the call for a division and for the yeas and nays having been withdrawn.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, line 90, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "one assistant entomologist or clerk" from $1,600 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 91, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "one assistant entomologist or clerk" from $1,400 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 97.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are not in order until the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are disposed of, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLER. I think it had better be attended to now.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no objection.

Mr. MILLER. The Committee on Agriculture unanimously reported an amendment to come in at this point, and I am at fault in not having gone before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to explain the matter to them. I had a conversation with the chairman of the subcommittee, and I understood him to concur in my proposed amendment, and therefore I neglected the matter. I desire now to offer the amendment, and I think it will commend itself to the judgment of the Senate.

In line 94, after the word "them," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "drawings," in line 98, as follows:

And for the promotion of economic ornithology, or the study of the interrelation of birds and agriculture, an investigation of the food, habits, and migration of birds in relation to both insects and plants, and publishing report thereon, for drawings.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy; an investigation of the food-habits, distribution, and migrations of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for publishing reports thereon; and for drawings and traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the division, $15,000.

A year ago at my suggestion this provision with regard to economic ornithology and the study of the migration of birds, together with their food-habits, &c., was placed in the agricultural appropriation bill. I then desired it to be made a distinct division, as it had no proper connection with the entomological division, and expected that it would have been so done, but in the final passage of the bill through the conference committee it was put in under the entomological division.

For several years the society called the American Ornothological Union has been in existence. It has its corresponding members in every State and Territory of the whole country. It has been doing a vast amount of work in studying the migration of birds and their habits, particularly their food-habits, and the question as to their benefit or injury to agriculture. It has been entirely a voluntary work. A vast amount of material and information has accumulated, and the society applied to Congress to have it put into the Agricultural Department as one of the divisions, and that all this voluntary work which had cost the Government nothing might be sent there and properly examined, collated, and reported upon. The Congress of the United States, upon the presentation which I made a year ago, put in this provision.

I now desire that it may be somewhat changed by making it a distinct division of itself, and this will not cost the Government any more than it does in its present position. I see that the committee has already done the same thing in regard to pomology and has made that a distinct division by itself.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New York to allow the committee amendments to be first considered, and this amendment, if it should be agreed to, wants to be inserted in a little different form from that in which it is presented. It wants to be a separate paragraph, to come in at a different point.

Mr. MILLER. I was wrong in my amendment in offering it to strike out and insert at that point. What I intended to do was to move to strike out that language and then at the end of line 102 to insert my amendment. It would come in properly there. I make that suggestion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it is not now in order.

Mr. MILLER. I prefer, if the Senator does not object, to go on with my statement rather than disconnect it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object if the Senator prefers to have it acted on now.

Mr. MAHONE. I understand that the Senator proposes to strike out now, in line 94, from the word "then" down to the word "drawings" in line 98, and then——

Mr. MILLER. And then to insert the other language as an independent paragraph after line 102.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no objection to having the question now put on striking out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the words proposed to be stricken out will be stricken out, and the reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. MILLER. Now, I shall be very brief in what I have to say in regard to this matter. I have some information here in relation to this subject, which instead of having read at the desk in full, unless the Senate shall so desire, I will ask may be printed in the RECORD, for I consider it very important. The investigation of this ornithological department has brought to light a great deal of very valuable and interesting information in regard to the ravages of the rice-bird upon the rice-fields of the South. It presents a statement going to show that the loss by the ravages of the rice-bird in the South is equal to about $7 per acre upon every acre of rice grown in the United States. This certainly is an astounding statement, but it is entirely borne out by the facts in the case. I have had prepared a short article in relation to it, describing it and showing its importance. I desire to submit this and have it printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks for the purpose of bringing the whole matter to the attention of the country, particularly of the southern portion of it. Unless Senators desire it read I will not ask for its reading. I think it is important to bring it before the country by publishing it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

RAVAGES OF RICE-BIRDS.

One of the most important industries of the Southern States, the cultivation of rice, is crippled and made precarious by the biannual attacks of birds. Innumerable hosts of rice-birds visit the rice-fields at the time of planting in spring, and again before harvest-time in the fall. They devour the seed grain before the "stretch flow" is let in; and when the maturing grain is "in the milk" they feed upon it to a ruinous extent.

To prevent total destruction of the crop during the periods of bird invasion thousands of men and boys, called "bird-minders," are employed, hundreds of thousands of pounds of gunpowder are burned, and millions of birds are killed. Still the number of birds invading the rice-fields each year seems in no way diminished, and the aggregate annual loss they occasion amounts to nearly $2,000,000.

The use of fire-arms has continued for more than a century and has proved an expensive and inefficient remedy. Hence it is clear that some other means consistent with reasonable economy must be devised for the relief of the enormous losses now sustained by rice-growers from the depredations of birds. Numerous letters from rice-growers have been received at the Department of Agriculture asking for assistance in the attempt to secure some practicable remedy. Evidence of the extent of the loss in South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana is contained in the following letters:

In reply to your favor of the 2d ultimo, requesting information concerning the depredations of the bobolink or rice-bird in the rice-fields of my neighborhood, I furnish such information as I have with pleasure, hoping that it may assist in the discovery of some effective and economical means of arresting the ravages of this chief bird-pest in the rice-fields.

The rice-bird is strictly migratory. It appears on the Savannah River commonly about the 10th or 15th of April, and remains, perhaps, until the 29th of May. During this incursion it is known as the "May-bird." It appears again about the 15th of August, when the early grain is hardened and is not so invitting to his appetite as when unripe and in the milk. The planter, observing these dates, seeks therefrom to seed the land and to have the young rice under what is known as the "stretch flow" before the spring flocks arrive, and to have the crop ripened before the autumn flocks return. If his planting is not finished before the spring flocks come it will be delayed until late in May or early in June, when the birds have departed for the season. He looks to the ripening and harvesting of such late crops when the fall ravages of the rice-bird have either ceased or are much diminished.

These data show how the destructiveness of the rice-bird is in some measure avoided, and in part by taking advantage of the periodicity of its migrations; but despite the precautions so taken its invasions are ruinous to fields on which its flocks may settle, especially if the grain is in palatable condition and is on fields adjacent to marshes convenient for ambush or retreat. Bird-minders, armed with muskets and shotguns, endeavor by discharges of blank cartridges to keep the birds alarmed and to drive them from the fields. Small shot are also fired among them, and incredible numbers are killed; but all such efforts will not prevent great waste of grain, amounting to a loss of large proportions of a field; sometimes, indeed, to its entire loss.

The rice-bird comes only in seed time and harvest to prey, so far as the rice-fields are concerned, on crops raised at more cost and peril than any other known in agriculture.

The preventives now in use against the ravages of the rice-bird have been already mentioned; but they are palliative only, applied at great expense, and without commensurate results. No vigilance on the part of the planter can do away with the wastefulness of powder and shot in the hands of careless and dishonest bird-minders. They only too often add the cost of wasted grain to the cost of their own faithless and ill-directed labor. In short, no effort yet tried, consistent with reasonable economy, will drive the rice-birds from the fields, or afford any well-founded promise of their reduction to harmless numbers.

Your favor of February 24, asking for information concerning the devastations of the bobolink or rice-bird in the Southern States has been duly received. The bobolinks make their appearance here during the latter part of April. At that season their plumage is white and black, and they sing merrily when at rest. Their flight is always at night. In the evening there are none. In the morning their appearance is heralded by the popping of whips and firing of musketry by the bird-minders in their efforts to keep the birds from pulling up the young rice. This warfare is kept up incessantly until about the 25th of May, when they suddenly disappear at night. Their next appearance is in a dark yellow plumage, as the rice-bird. There is no song at this time, but instead a chirp, which means ruin to any rice found in milk. My plantation record will show that for the past ten years, except when prevented by stormy south or southwest winds, the rice-birds have come punctually on the night of the 21st of August, apparently coming from seaward. All night their chirp can be heard passing over our summer homes on South Island, which island is situated 6 miles to the east of our rice plantations, in full view of the ocean. Curious to say, we have never seen this flight during the day; but always during the nights of August 21, 22, 23, and 24, millions of these birds make their appearance and settle in the rice-fields. From the 21st of August to the 25th of September our every effort is to save the crop. Men, boys, and women are posted with guns and ammunition to every 4 or 5 acres, and shoot daily an average of about 1 quart of powder to the gun. This firing commences at first dawn of day and is kept up till sunset.

After all this expense and trouble our loss of rice per acre seldom falls under 5 bushels; and if from any cause there is a check to the crop during its growth which prevents the grain from being hard, but in milky condition, the destruction of such fields is complete, it not paying to cut and bring the rice out of the field. We have tried every plan to keep these pests off our crops at less expense and manual labor than we now incur but have been unsuccessful. Our present mode is expensive, imperfect, and thoroughly unsatisfactory, yet it is the best we can do. I regard these birds as destructive in the rice region as the caterpillar is to cotton, with this difference, that these rice-birds never fail to come. If the Government could devise some means to aid us in keeping off these birds it would render us great assistance. The loss by birds and the expense of minding them off in order to make anything renders the cultivation of rice a dangerous speculation. During the bird season we employ about one hundred bird-minders, who shoot from 3 to 5 kegs of powder daily, of 25 pounds each; add to this shot and caps, and you will have some idea of what these birds cost one planter.

Estimate based on the foregoing letter.

One hundred pounds powder per day for thirty-five days = 3,500 pounds powder:
Thirty-five hundred pounds powder, at 25 cents per pound	$875
Thirty-five hundred boxes caps, at 10 cents per box	350
Proportional amount of shot, at 5 cents	1,000
Hire and board of one hundred bird-minders for thirty-five days, at 35 cents	1,225
Total cost of fighting rice-birds for thirty-five days	3,450
Loss of 5 bushels per acre for 1,200 acres = 6,000 bushels, which, at 80 cents per bushel, is worth	4,800
Add to this the above	3,450
Expended in keeping the rice-birds from devouring the entire crop, and the total annual loss on this single plantation will be found to be	8,250

Which is equal to a loss of $6.87 per acre.

The rice crop of Louisiana, from the time the rice is in the milk till harvest time and during harvesting, is much damaged by birds, principally by the red-shouldered blackbird. Shooting is the only remedy thus far resorted to which is at all effective, and it is only partially so. I have known rice crops to be destroyed to the extent of over 50 per cent., which is a loss of, say, $13 per acre. While this is an extreme case, a damage and expense of from $5 to $10 per acre is very common.

The average yield per acre is about 30 bushels, worth now (March 12, 1886) about 80 cents per bushel. (Theodore S. Wilkinson, Myrtle Grove plantation, lower coast, Louisiana.)

RICE IMPORTS.

Owing to the depredations of birds we are not able to raise enough rice for our own consumption, as the following table shows:

Year.	Duty paid.	Value.	Duty free.	Value.
	Pounds.		Pounds.
1879–'80	51,943,609	$1,316,132	5,062,646	$294,186
1880–'81	61,755,003	1,413,543	6,984,406	389,017
1881–'82	69,277,163	1,526,430	10,135,678	499,825
1882–'83	83,746,129	1,729,627	12,926,951	610,324

Hence it appears that in 1883–'84 the amount of rice imported was 106,630,523 pounds, on which a duty of $1,442,223.63 was paid.

Mr. MILLER. The Ornithological Union has also made a most careful examination of the habits of the English sparrow in the United States, and the ravages and destruction caused by this bird are far greater than those caused by the rice-bird. The bird is rapidly upon the increase, and the loss from this one bird to the cereal crops of this country and to the grain crop already amounts to many millions of dollars per annum. No greater harm has ever come upon the agriculture of the country than the introduction of the English sparrow into the United States. It is believed by the Ornithological Union that steps can be taken and should be taken for the destruction of this bird.

I have here a carefully prepared statement regarding its ravages and regarding its spread over the United States. It is now found in thirty-one of the States and in several of the Territories, and is rapidly migrating to other portions of the Union. I present this paper and ask that it also may be printed in the RECORD for the purpose of calling the attention of the whole country to this matter, and I believe it will lead within a year or two to the passage of legislation by all the State Legislatures looking to the extirpation of this pest.

This would undoubtedly to a very large extent be secured, for the bird is a continuous inhabitant of the same place during the entire year; and during the winter months in the North the bird could be easily destroyed if proper precautions were taken. In those parts of the country which it now mostly inhabits it has almost entirely driven out the song birds, and its destruction of the cereal crops, of the fruit crops, and of the grain crop, as I have before said, amounts to many millions of dollars. I simply present this paper and ask that it may also be printed in the RECORD, in order that it may be brought before the whole country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The paper is as follows:

THE ENGLISH SPARROW IN THE UNITED STATES.

The English sparrow was introduced into the United States in 1858, but it was not until 1870 that it had become permanently established in a number of our Eastern cities and began in earnest its destructive march over the country. Its fertility is astonishing, and the rapidity and extent of its spread is unprecedented. Its average rate of increase may be stated to be eightfold, or sixteen young to each pair of adult birds per annum, and a single female has been known to lay over thirty eggs in a season.

Reports concerning the sparrow's presence and ravages have already come to hand from almost the whole of the United States excepting the great plains, the Rocky Mountain region, and portions of the Southern States, over which he is now spreading with ominous swiftness. At present he is known to occupy thirty-one States and three Territories.

The method of his diffusion is peculiar. He at first invades the larger cities; then the smaller cities and towns; then the villages and hamlets; and finally the populous farming districts. He seems to sweep over the country at repeated intervals, each time filling in the gaps left vacant in former raids. In this way he has spread during the past fifteen years, so far as the cities and larger towns are concerned, at the almost incredible rate of about 130,000 square miles a year.

The indications are that if the English sparrow is allowed to go unchecked it will not be long before the annual loss of grain and fruit products due to his ravages will be in amount sufficient to pay the interest on our national debt, if not in fact the debt itself. Few persons have any conception of the scourge he has proved wherever he has been naturalized in foreign lands, and he threatens to become a greater pest to the American farmer and horticulturist than the grasshopper, caterpillar, and Colorado beetle.

The fact is well attested that in early spring the English sparrow destroys large numbers of buds. It devours the germ from the fruit buds of trees, bushes, and vines in the blossoming season, thus destroying entire crops of would-be fruit, and damages great quantities of vegetables and flowering plants. Lettuce, peas, beans, radishes, cabbages, and cauliflowers are attacked as soon as they show their heads above the ground, and in many cases the seed is taken out of the earth before it has germinated. So extensive is the injury thus done that in many localities it has been found necessary to cover the garden beds with netting. The yield from pear, peach, plum, apricot, apple, and cherry trees is often much diminished from the same cause.

Wherever the buds are so fortunate as to escape the sparrow's consumption the ripening fruit appeals strongly to his appetite, and the different varieties are attacked, injured, or destroyed in turn as they mature.

The following extracts from numerous returns received at the Department of Agriculture are not without striking interest and significance in connection with the foregoing statement:

"He attacks and feeds upon cherries, strawberries, raspberries, and blackberries, probably injuring as many as he eats. His destruction of vegetable and flower seeds is enormous. It is begun before they are ripe, almost as soon as they are formed, and continues throughout the season. Often it is impossible to save the seeds from this bird unless the plants are secured by netting."—Elisha Slade, Somerset, Mass.

"Lettuce, peas, and beets are his favorite food in spring. Frequently the entire bed is destroyed by his depredations. Before the early vegetables are above ground he devours the fruit-buds of trees, often doing extensive damage."—W. D. Doan, Atglen, Pa.

"I was shown by a gardener last summer one hundred tuberose plants all the flower-buds of which had been eaten out by the sparrow."—Dr. E. Sterling, Cleveland, Ohio.

"When the first three or four sparrows came here I observed one of the birds to be very busy on the branch of a plum-bush. After about a minute's time I examined the branch and found that all except two or three buds had been stripped off, there being upward of fifty buds gone and apparently just picked off."—C. P. Blachly, Manhattan, Kans.

THE SPARROW AS A DESTROYER OF GRAPES.

It is highly probable that, next after the phylloxera and certain fungus growths, the greatest enemy to grape culture in the United States is the English sparrow. He eats the fruit buds in spring, and when the grapes begin to ripen he feasts upon them to the extent of his capacity, never devouring an entire cluster, but taking a bite here and there until a perfect bunch can scarcely be found in the vineyard.

In this connection it is not reassuring to read, in the evidence collected and published by the Australian Government in 1881, that "in the short space of ten days the sparrows took a ton and a half of grapes" from the vineyard of John Chambers, of South Richmond.

Following are a few extracts from the numerous returns received at this Department relating to the destruction of grapes by the English sparrow:

"Since answering your circular I have seen a row of choice grapes of various kinds entirely ruined by the English sparrow, and find that they commit depredations on all the vines in this neighborhood."—E. R. Newell, Plantsville, Conn.

"Last year when I had a large crop of very fine grapes I found that the sparrows were destroying nearly all of them. I watched these birds and found that they would pick out a fine bunch of fruit and pick a hole in nearly every grape. This hole would be so very small that at first it would not be noticed, but very soon the place would begin to decay and then the grapes would be ruined. In some parts of the country people bag their grapes to protect them from the sparrows. The sparrows also pick small holes into pears and peaches and spoil them in the same manner that they do the grapes. I tried the experiment of shooting the pests, but came to the conclusion that I might just as well try to stop up the harbor with peanuts."—F. S. Platt, seedsman and florist, New Haven, Conn.

"In New Haven the sparrows used to spoil our grapes by the bushel, picking the ripest ones and sucking the juice."—Dr. Fred. Sumner Smith, West Hartford, Conn.

"They injure grapes to the extent of their capacity to do so."—Manly Hardy, Brewer, Me.

"For two seasons these pests have almost stripped our grape vines of their fruit, first by eating the fruit buds in the early spring and later by destroying whatever blossoms may have been so fortunate as to put forth after the former raid upon the vines."—B. S. Gault, Chicago, Ill.

"They attack and devour grapes greedily; when fully ripe they do great damage by biting through the skin; they seem to hunt up all the largest and best clusters. My crop was damaged this year 10 per cent. In the spring they pick the germs from the buds of fruit trees at the time of blossoming."—David C. Voorhees, Blawenburg, N. J.

"The English sparrow destroys everything he comes in contact with. He is very destructive in the fruit orchards in the early spring, eating fruit buds from the plum and cherry trees. He will pick every pea from the pod if he once gets a taste of them. He destroys grapes when they get sweet and ripe, gashing them but never eating them. He takes them all unless you fight him."—H. J. Gaylord, Binghamton, N. Y.

THE SPARROW A DESTROYER OF CEREALS AND OF GARDEN AND OTHER SEEDS.

Annoying and injurious as the sparrow is to the horticulturist and the vegetable gardener, the losses sustained by the producer of cereals is probably much greater. His consumption and waste of corn, wheat, rye, oats, and barley in many sections of the country is enormous. He feeds upon the kernel when it is in the soft milky state as well as when it has matured and hardened. In fields of ripe grain he scatters upon the ground even more than he consumes.

Though preferring for his permanent residence populous localities and places of abundant traffic and commotion, at the time and in anticipation of the harvest season he gathers in countless thousands and, leaving the cities in enormous flocks, moves off to the adjoining country for the express and premeditated purpose of depredating the results of the farmer's labor. He frequently sends out spies, on tours of inspection, previous to commencing his work of pillage. Instances are reported where, in place of a full or fair crop of grain, the straw only remained to be gathered.

The following testimonials may serve to convey some idea of the extent of the loss which our farmers sustain in the ravages of this bird:

"They eat grain in the fields in this town whether green or ripe. I can speak from observation on their raids on corn, some ears being completely stripped of kernels; the little pests husking and shelling as they went along so that not a shock in the field escaped them."—Dr. Fred. Sumner Smith, West Hartford, Conn.

"I have known them to leave the city by hundreds to feed in an adjoining wheat-field. The estimated damage was one-fourth the crop."—J. L. Davison, Lockport, N. Y.

"He destroys buckwheat while it is standing in the field—thousands are on my field to-day. When I raise wheat, he is equally destructive to that. He will take all there is if one does not fight for its protection."—H. Fosdick, Binghamton, N. Y.

"Have seen him repeatedly in great numbers on fields of wheat and oats eating the grain out of the ear. A few years ago he destroyed my entire crop of Egyptian rice."—H. F. Barrell, New Providence, N. J.

"He works on the wheat-fields in great flocks about two weeks before harvest time, and also in the barn after the crop has been harvested and until it is thrashed. It is impossible to keep him out and difficult to estimate the extent of the damage done. A farmer told me that he had noticed the sparrows going in and out of his mow, and, on examination, he found the top sheaves of grain entirely sucked."—Frank L. Barnes, Berwyn, Pa.

"He greatly damages the corn crop, tearing open the husk, devouring the tender part of the ear, and exposing the remainder to the ravages of insects and to atmospheric changes. He alights on fields of wheat, oats, and barley, consumes a great quantity of it, and by resting on the slender stalks will by his weight, swaying to and fro, and the flapping of his wings, shower the remainder on the ground."—Dr. B. Harry Warren, West Chester, Pa.

"The sparrows stripped my entire crop of pearl millet, not leaving a kernel on the ear."—S. M. Clark, Washington, D. C.

"The present season they have greatly damaged wheat and oats in the stack and rick, coming to the fields in such large flocks as to destroy and eat up all the grain in sight."—W. B. Hall, Wakewan, Ohio.

THE SPARROW A DESTROYER OF RICE.

The English sparrow has already invaded the rice-fields of certain parts of the South, and promises to rival the rice-bird in the extent of its ravages. Indeed, one rice-planter writes from Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana, that the English sparrow is now more destructive than the rice-bird or blackbird.

RAVAGES OF THE SPARROW IN FOREIGN LANDS.

The destructive habits and ruinous proclivities of this bird in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, India, Cuba, Egypt, and Australia are too well known to require more than passing observation. In England alone the loss accruing from the depredations of the sparrow has been carefully calculated and is estimated at not less than £770,000 per annum, and this loss is on the increase.

TESTIMONY FROM AUSTRALIA.

In Australia his power is such that he has already become a factor in politics. The following specimens of testimony were submitted to the "commission appointed to inquire into and report upon the alleged injuries caused by sparrows to fruit-growers, gardeners, farmers, and others," and are contained in their "report to the governor, commander-in-chief in and over the province of South Australia and the dependencies thereof, printed by order of the house of assembly, September 13, 1881." These testimonials are prefaced by the remark, "that the responses of sufferers within the foregoing area cry for relief from sparrow depredations as if from a pest;" and with what reason the following statements, as examples, may show:

From Mr. John Chambers, of South Richmond: "In the short space of ten days the sparrows took a ton and a half of grapes. They stripped all the figs off five trees. They kept low 15 acres of lucerne during summer."

From Mr. Finden, of Salisbury: "This season they (the sparrows) took £30 worth of fruit."

Mr. George Wilcox, of Lower Mitcham, stated: "Have three times this season sown peas, and they have each time been destroyed by sparrows. They made sad havoc among my apricots, loquats, and peaches. Then they stripped every cherry, and the grapes were fairly demolished. On a trellis measuring 300 feet long by 10 feet high and 10 feet wide I had a splendid crop of grapes, but did not secure one presentable bunch."

Hon. John Crozick: "There is no doubt that if allowed to go unchecked they will not only destroy vineyards and orchards, but most of the grain in the fields as well. Two boys employed to search the property for sparrows' nests and eggs obtained 1,900 eggs in one day, so enormous is the sparrow's fecundity."

Thomas Fairbrother: "Sparrows are in my neighborhood by thousands, and they destroy tons of fruit."

W. H. Harrold: "Last year they destroyed in turn fully one-half of my cherries, plums, apricots, peas, and apples; what was saved had to be gathered unripe. Had a nice patch of wheat completely destroyed by them when ripening."

S. R. James: "Sparrows are established in great numbers in my locality, and oranges are literally whitened with their droppings. Figs, loquats, apricots, plums, peaches, cherries, nectarines, and grapes are in turn attacked by them as they ripen. Last year from a crop from 200 trees I dare not let any of the fruit ripen for fear of being picked and destroyed by these birds. Although I had a large crop of figs, it was with difficulty a few were saved for market."

Mr. J. B. Scarce: "Sparrows have destroyed bushels of pears, plums, and grapes in my garden. Have a trellis of vines 80 feet in length, besides other vines, and was not able to cut a bunch of grapes."

Mr. MILLER. I have also had prepared a statement in regard to the destructive effects of many mammals on agriculture and forestry. It is very important that this investigation in that regard should go on and be made more complete. It is well known that in certain portions of the West, particularly in California, great ravages and destruction to many of the crops of the farmer are produced by many of the mammals which inhabit that country; and this investigation is being carried on by this same association at this time. I ask also that that statement may be printed in the RECORD for the same purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

EFFECTS OF MAMMALS UPON AGRICULTURE.

The effect of small mammals upon agriculture, horticulture, and forestry is a matter of great practical interest, and one upon which much has been written, particularly in Europe, where a knowledge of the subject is one of the qualifications of admission to the Government position of forester.

Our native mammals affect the interests of mankind in a variety of ways, and may be classified as beneficial or injurious. Many kinds are both beneficial and injurious, and careful study of their habits is necessary to ascertain whether the sum of their beneficial qualities exceeds the sum of their prejudicial, or vice versa. Others are so markedly injurious that the question becomes one merely of the best means of keeping them in check.

It is impossible to estimate in dollars and cents the damage done by our small mammals, particularly by mice and gophers, but in the aggregate it must amount to several millions of dollars per annum.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and from the Mexican border to Canada innumerable hordes of mice are constantly preying upon the result of man's toil. They gnaw his buildings, deplete his granaries, make their homes in his barns and hay-mows, and even infest his private dwellings to share the dainties of the pantry. In the meadow and pasture they feed upon the roots of the best grasses; in the garden upon the roots, fruit, and seed of vegetables; and in the fields upon grain both standing and in the shock. In winter they destroy fruit and forest trees and ornamental shrubs by eating the bark from the roots and trunk. The number of meadow mice present over a given area is subject to periodical fluctuations, and they sometimes become enormously abundant. At such times their runways through the meadows and grain-fields result in the loss of at least one-fifth of the crop.

The depredations of ground-squirrels and gophers in the prairie regions of the Mississippi Valley and in the far West are well known, and yet the extent of the damage they do is not generally recognized. In a fertile part of the Sacramento Valley in California a few years ago the sudden increase in a species of ground-squirrel which fed upon the grain caused the land to depreciate one-half in value. To be more explicit, land which previously brought $100 per acre could not be sold for $50, and the depreciation was due solely to the abundance and ravages of the squirrels.

Many instances might be cited of the intimate interrelation of ornithology and mammalogy in connection with practical agriculture. One will suffice: Meadow and field mice have multiplied enormously since the settlement and cultivation of the country, and the damage they do is increasing from year to year. Mice have many enemies, the most prominent of which are hawks, owls, weasles, and skunks, which, when not interfered with by man, serve to hold their numbers in check. But some of these same hawks, owls, weasles, and skunks occasionally vary their diet by taking a hen from the poultry-yard, thus exciting the wrathful indignation of the farmer who wages ceaseless warfare upon them collectively.

As a matter of fact but few kinds of hawks and owls, and exceptional individuals only of weasles and skunks, ever touch poultry, their principal and ordinary food consisting of mice and insects. And it may be safely asserted of the various species of these groups collectively that for every loss of $1 which they cost the farmer they do him a service worth at least $50.

The late Robert Kennicott wrote as follows of the pocket-gopher in the Mississippi Valley:

"No animal is more complained of by our prairie farmers. Scarcely a crop escapes their ravages. They are said to desert the wild prairie to inhabit cultivated hay-fields, and they particularly delight in clover and timothy meadows. Here they not only do mischief by devouring the roots of the plants, but impede the moving and raking of the hay by inequalities of surface caused by their mounds. Grain-fields are much injured by them while the plants are growing; and, when the stacks are left standing after harvest, the gophers burrow from below, and frequently cut up and drag into their holes or otherwise completely destroy entire sheaves. All root crops suffer severely from them. In passing below the surface they gnaw off the bottoms of carrots, beets, turnips, and other tap-rooted vegetables without disturbing the tops or coming above ground. In fields of common or sweet potatoes they work under the hills and remove the tubers, and thus sometimes destroy half or more of the crop before the dying vines give evidence of the mischief.

"Instances are related in which potato heaps covered with earth and left out during winter have been entered by the gophers and the tubers carried off. They sometimes enter melons, pumpkins, and squashes through holes at the bottom and eat out all the fleshy part and then fill the hollow rind with earth, leaving it in a condition to create much astonishment when harvested. They also feed upon the bark of the roots of trees, as well as upon the fleshy roots of herbaceous plants. Some of our prairie farmers are greatly injured by their destruction of osage orange hedges. No small item of their injury is the gnawing and cutting off the roots of fruit trees. A considerable portion of all the trees has been killed annually in some young orchards in Iowa and Illinois, and several fruit-growers inform me that they have seen as many as a dozen large bearing apple trees killed by them in a single orchard. Forest trees 6 or 8 inches in diameter have died in consequence of their roots being cut."

A prominent farmer, fruit-grower, and vineyardist in Southern California has written the Department of Agriculture as follows:

"When the Government of the United States undertakes to do something for the farmers of California to mitigate the ravages of birds and mammals upon vineyards, orchards, and crops of small grain it will receive the heartfelt thanks of every one engaged in the business.

"The fruit-grower in particular has a constant fight from the time a tree is first planted or a cutting set out to get the same to a bearing condition.

"I have seen every head of grain for a distance of 100 yards back from the edge of a field lying along a road or next to a bushy hill, for a mile, eaten or destroyed by quails and squirrels.

"My vineyard of thirty-odd acres lies for 100 rods along the edge of a bushy hill, and every year the quails and other birds levy a tribute on the fruit equal to the entire product of 5 acres.

"A quail or bird of any kind takes but one bite from the same grape, when the bees rush in and suck out the pulp, leaving nothing but the skin. It is only in the large valleys away from the mountains that raisin-making can succeed without the constant expense of employing herders of birds. It costs me 30 cents a box to pick over loose muscatel raisins for labor alone, not counting the loss of those thrown out, one-half or one-fourth eaten by birds or bees. Coyotes, skunks, foxes, squirrels, mice, and gophers are passionately fond of ripe raisin-grapes, and also in all stages of drying. Coyotes live on grapes from the time they get sweet until the last raisin is taken off the trays and put into boxes.

"Isolated farmers are required to put up rabbit-proof fences before they can plant any grape-vines.

"This trouble with vermin of all kinds is not confined to this end of the State, but extends in one form or another from San Diego to Shasta—700 to 800 miles."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, all this work is being carried on by voluntary laborers throughout the Union. They receive no pay whatever from the Government. They are amateur scientists, I may say in every department of life. They have organized this Ornithological Union, and there have been similar associations organized in European countries who are laboring in co-operation with our own union. It only costs the Government of the United States the necessary expense of collecting the facts which are sent in, and deducing from those facts some proper conclusions and making a report to Congress. The intention is also of course to make some experiments and some study in regard to the destruction of the rice-bird and of the sparrow, in order that the facts may be presented to the whole country and that through these means these pests may be somewhat abated, if not entirely destroyed.

The person in charge of this department here was chiefly instrumental in the organization of the American Ornithological Union. He is a young man of high scientific attainments. He did not desire this position. He only came to it a year ago upon the earnest solicitation of the Commissioner of Agriculture; and as he seemed to be the proper and in fact the only proper person in the country to take charge of it. He has given all his time to this work for many years, and is here now engaged in preparing reports upon this question.

It seems to me that we can not do less than simply make it a separate department, as it will cost no more, and give to that department a sufficient sum of money to carry on this collation of facts as they come in and the proper publication of reports. I do not think that there is any one step to-day in connection with matters of this kind which is of greater importance to the agricultural interests of this country than this very matter, and it will not materially increase the cost to do what is proposed.

I will suggest that if my amendment is adopted by placing in the language I have had read after line 102, it may then be necessary to reduce the $30,000 provided for in line 101 to either $20,000 or $25,000—I do not know which would be the proper sum, and let the ornithological department carry its own appropriation which is placed in my amendment at $15,000.

I am not certain as to what ought to be the proper figures, but if the Senator in charge of this bill will consent to make the sum appropriated in line 101 either $20,000 or $25,000, and let $15,000 go as I propose, then if it shall be found upon investigation that these sums are not quite right the matter can be arranged in the conference committee.

I hope that my amendment will be accepted.

Mr. PLUMB. Has that amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not yet offered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. There are two amendments. The first was to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to strike out has been adopted. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 98, after the word "drawings," to insert "and illustrations;" and in line 101, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

For investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture, arboriculture, and horticulture, experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them, and for the promotion of economic ornithology, or the study of the interrelation of birds and agriculture, for drawings and illustrations, and for chemicals and traveling within the United States, and other expenses on the practical work of the entomological division, $30,000.

Mr. MAHONE. In line 101, I propose to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert "fifteen thousand."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, line 101, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "entomological division" from $32,300 to $36,300.

Mr. MAHONE. Make the amount $21,300. I move to so amend the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 102 it is proposed to insert the following clause:

Division of economic ornithology and mammalogy:

For the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy; an investigation of the food-habits, distribution, and migrations of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for publishing reports thereon; and for drawings and traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the division, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 104 and 105, as follows:

For the encouragement and development of the culture and raising of raw silk, $7,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture, for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting, at some point in the District of Columbia, experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, $12,000. And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to sell, in open market, any and all reeled silk and silk waste produced in these experiments, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the payment of the legitimate expenses incurred therein.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there should be an amendment added there, requiring the Commissioner of Agriculture to make full report of his doings under this paragraph. I will offer that amendment in a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it in order now to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to strike out "twelve," in line 110, and insert "ten;" and to strike out "three," in line 116, and insert "five." I make these motions together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last amendment would not now be in order, the paragraph to which it refers not having been reached.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want one adopted without the other, because they both go to the same point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator in charge of the bill does not object both clauses may be considered as one amendment.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the clause from line 115 to line 119 will be read as part of the pending amendment.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no objection. They all relate to one subject.

The Secretary read as part of the words to be inserted by the pending amendment the following clause:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $3,000, to be expended under the direction of the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association.

Mr. GEORGE. According to the two items on silk-culture as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, $12,000 are to be expended under the Agricultural Department and $3,000 under the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia. The object of my amendment is to redistribute the division of that fund, not to increase in any way the total appropriation recommended by the committee, but to redistribute it so as to allow the Department $10,000 and the Women's Silk-Culture Association $5,000.

It will be noticed that the House bill as it passed the House only allowed the sum of $7,000 for this silk business. The Committee on Agriculture, after considering the matter fully, recommended an amendment to the House bill appropriating the sum of $5,000 to the Women's Silk-Culture Association. The object of my motion is to carry out the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture upon that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say a word or two more in favor of the amendment which I have proposed, by way of calling the attention of the Senate to the association under whose direction we propose to have so much of this money expended, an association of very intelligent and very cultured ladies organized in the city of Philadelphia several years ago. I have a list of the names of those ladies and am assured by those who know them that they hold the highest social position. I see also in the advisory board that the names of ex-Governor James Pollock and Hon. W. D. KELLEY are included as members. I have paid some attention for four or five years to the operations of this association. I have taken some interest in its operations. It is an association not at all for the purpose of making money. It is a philanthropic association, organized by women and managed by women, for the purpose of aiding their sisters in the United States in gaining a healthy and pleasant, agreeable and profitable employment. It is especially designed to aid the women of the country as contradistinguished from those who live in the towns, to aid them, to educate them, to assist them in embarking in the raising of raw silk.

This association has raised a great deal of money by its own efforts and disseminated throughout the Union information concerning the proper mode of raising or making raw silk and also distributing silk eggs. I think the stimulus that has been given to silk-culture in the United States in the last half dozen years has been largely attributable to the energy and intelligence with which the operations of this association have been conducted. I will read a sentence or two from its last report, just published, to show the substance, the extent, and benefit of its operations. It says:

We may record the increase of numbers in those engaging in the culture of silk cocoons in the agriculture districts; an improvement in the quantity and quality of product; a better system of turning the agriculture product into commercial raw silk; an open market for reeled silk (bearing a value second only to the best silks of Italy), also for waste and cocoons; a gradual increase in the number of silk-mills, 90 of the 380 now running in our country being in the State of Pennsylvania; a gradual and, it is hoped, permanent, advance in the raw materials of the silk industry from the extremely low prices that have marked the past few years, which has the tendency, apparently, of giving a new impulse to the manufacture—all of which point to a hopeful condition in the present and a progressive industry in the future.

I desire to add my most earnest wish for the success of this association of intelligent and philanthropic women, whose object is to assist their poorer sisters throughout the Union in the agricultural and rural districts to embark in a new and untried business, but yet one which is suitable to female strength and which in the main will be profitable. I hope the association will be recognized by granting the appropriation asked for by the Committee on Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 110, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" and in line 116, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five."

Mr. MAHONE. I would prefer that those amendments be offered separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can ask for a division.

Mr. GEORGE. My object in offering both together was to leave the total amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to be appropriated to silk-culture as it stands, and to make a redistribution of it. If it is preferred to have it the other way, I have no objection.

Mr. MAHONE. It was stated by the Commissioner that the allowance made by the House of $7,000 was ample to conduct the usual offices intrusted to him under this head; but it was represented by the Commissioner that with the additional sum of $5,000 he would be enabled to experiment with a new reel for the purpose of reeling the silk, wherein is mainly the cost—an automatic reel—and that the experiment can be conducted under more favorable circumstances at the industrial school in Georgetown than elsewhere, and that the sum of $5,000 would enable him to make that experiment successful. Therefore it is that the Committee on Appropriations has recommended an appropriation of $12,000 on that specific account. That is, $7,000 for the expenses of the Department proper, and $5,000 in order that this experiment may be carried to perfection at Georgetown. I should hope that there would be no alteration made in that amount.

In respect to the amendment in the second paragraph, it is to be observed that this is a direct appropriation in aid of the Women's Silk-Culture Association, in the city of Philadelphia, to which heretofore there have been contributions from the Department, varying, I believe, from $3,000 to $5,000. The committee thought, in this connection, that $3,000 would be a sufficient contribution at this time. I will, however, submit that to the will of the Senate, not desiring any alteration made in the first paragraph as to the $12,000.

Mr. GEORGE. With a view of meeting the opinion and judgment of the Senator from Virginia, I will withdraw temporarily the first amendment and ask for a vote on the second.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten" is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment in line 116 to strike out "three" and insert "five." The clause will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. At the end of line 114, after the word "therein," I move to insert:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture shall make full report to Congress of the experiment herein provided for, and also of all sales and purchases made under this paragraph.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. In line 117 the word "Women's" should be changed to "Women's;" so as to read "Women's Silk-Culture Association."

In this connection I would ask that a very interesting letter on the subject of silk-culture, from the Commissioner of Agriculture, may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD in connection with the Senator's remarks. The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, Washington, D. C., April 17, 1886.

SIR: Permit me to call your attention to a clause in the appropriation bill for this Department as passed on Wednesday last by the House of Representatives. This clause appropriates $7,000 "for the encouragement and development of the culture and raising of raw silk." A like clause in the bills for the present and last fiscal years appropriated $15,000 annually for this purpose. Seven thousand dollars is amply sufficient to meet the expenses of this office in conducting the ever-increasing correspondence relating to silk-culture, in distributing silk-worm eggs, and in making certain important scientific investigations into the diseases of silk-worms. During past years, having at my disposition a larger sum of money, I have also carried on experiments in reeling silk from the cocoon. This is a most important matter, and in my estimation the whole question as to whether silk-culture can be made to pay in the United States rests upon the question of whether or no silk cocoons can be commercially converted into reeled silk with profit. To this matter I shall revert later in this communication. At present I beg to call your attention to the wording of the clause and to recommend such an alteration that it may limit and prescribe the work that I shall thereby be authorized to prosecute. I wish especially to avoid any liability to continue the silk-reeling experiments on such a line as that already followed, for, though I have been hitherto allowed full discretion in the expenditure of this fund, I feel satisfied that I could work to better advantage if the objects of the appropriation were specified in greater detail. I would therefore suggest that the clause be so altered as to read: "For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture and for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs."

At the same time I do not desire to abandon entirely the experiments in reeling silk, for though the results of those already prosecuted have hardly been such as we have desired, yet I have been able to draw from them the hope that under better circumstances I may be able to show that silk can be reeled profitably in this country. The history of the experiments already tried is given on pages 216 to 219 of the last report of the entomologist, of which I send you advance sheets. When these two experimental filatures were opened it was impossible for me to obtain in this country any improved silk-reeling machinery, and while I could have purchased better apparatus abroad, it would still have been of a non-automatic type. It was therefore deemed more advisable to utilize such machinery as was easily attainable and which was found at New Orleans and Philadelphia. As stated in the entomologist's report (pages 298, 299), we are of the opinion that the new automatic silk-reel invented by Mr. Serrell, of New York, will, if successful, go far toward solving the problem which we have before us. As Mr. Serrell's patents were only issued in January, he has until now been unwilling to permit the public to inspect his apparatus, and I have therefore been unable to obtain a set of his machines. I have now informal assurances that they may be obtained, and I consider it of great importance that experiments with them should be prosecuted as nearly as possible upon a commercial scale. The present moment is especially opportune, as I have been unofficially approached by the officers of the Industrial Home School of the District of Columbia with the request that I should establish at their institution in Georgetown a small reeling school, where their pupils may be instructed in the new industry. If this plan can be carried out I shall accomplish the triple work of assisting this industrial institution, which Congress has already fostered, in preparing its pupils to earn a livelihood, of training a small corps of skilled operatives, and determining for the benefit of the country at large whether or not they have anything to hope from the industry under consideration. By utilizing the labor which is thus offered me I shall, moreover, be able to prosecute the experiments with less expense to the Government.

Through the efforts of private individuals and associations the interest in silk-culture in this country has become widespread, and has been greatly stimulated by the assistance already granted by Congress. The correspondence of this department shows very conclusively that the people are in general well satisfied with the new work, but that they have experienced much dissatisfaction from the want of a ready cash market for their product. The experiments which I have already prosecuted have created a market for several thousand pounds of cocoons, although I was unable to secure the purchase of the whole of last year's crops. Under the existing laws I could not buy the cocoons required, and, after selling the manufactured product, apply the proceeds of such sales to the expenses of the experiments. As my capital did not permit me to make such purchase and cover the receipts back into the Treasury, I was obliged to arrange with my agents that they should purchase the raw material and receive their pay therefor in manufactured product. As they were persons of small capital they were unable in many instances to make prompt payments for the stock purchased from silk-growers, and there was consequently a certain amount of dissatisfaction caused by this mode of proceeding. For this, then, among other reasons, I desire to abandon such a method of experimenting, and in future to keep the work under the personal observation of my immediate assistants. This can be achieved if I am permitted to establish the proposed station at Georgetown.

It is true that I shall not be furnishing so extensive a market for cocoons as was furnished last year, but I am convinced that I shall in this manner be working more satisfactorily toward the establishment of a stable and permanent demand for cocoons of home production. Silk-culturists are at present somewhat undecided as to whether it will ultimately pay them to continue in the work. If all experiments toward a solution of this main problem are abandoned by the Government it will go far toward discouraging the masses who are most interested in the industry. I, therefore, feel it my duty to ask your committee to recommend the passage of such an amendment to the House bill as will enable me to prosecute the experiments mentioned in this communication. I think that this can be done without much ultimate expense to the Government, especially if I am permitted to utilize the proceeds from the sales of reeled silk. It is estimated that the expenses of this experiment will not surpass $5,500 and that the receipts from the sales of reeled silk and silk-waste will be in the neighborhood of $4,900. This latter estimate is, for the sake of safety, based upon an extremely low price for reeled silk. While the ultimate cost to the Government will be small, it is, for reasons which I have already stated, important that I should be able to meet the demands of silk-growers for a prompt cash payment for their product. That product must be purchased during the coming fall, before I shall have been able to convert much of it into reeled silk. It is, therefore, important that I should have the sum of $5,000 at my disposal for this purpose.

If your committee should not deem it advisable to add this sum to the amount appropriated by the House, an alteration in the wording of the appropriation clause, such as I have already suggested, would greatly facilitate and simplify the work which I shall be called upon to do. If you should decide to act upon the recommendation contained in this letter, I would suggest that the appropriating clause be reconstructed so that it may read:

"For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture, for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, $12,000. And the Commissioner is hereby authorized to sell in open market any and all reeled silk and silk-waste produced in these experiments and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the payment of the legitimate expenses incurred therein."

Begging you to inform me if you should require any more detailed explanations upon this matter,

I am, yours, respectfully,

NORMAN J. COLMAN, Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "experimental gardens and grounds," in line 124, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $1,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

For labor in experimental garden and grounds, $11,000, of which sum $1,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for the "museum," in line 143, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant, $1,000;" in line 146, after the words "fruits and," to strike out "vegitables" and insert "vegetables;" and in line 159, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Museum:

For compensation of curator of museum, $1,400; one assistant, $1,000; one night watchman for museum building, who shall also act as night watchman for seed building, $720; collecting and modeling specimens of fruits and vegetables, and collecting and preparing specimens for the museum and herbarium, $1,000; in all $4,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for "division of agricultural statistics," in line 197, after the word "reports," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

For collecting foreign and domestic agricultural statistics, and compiling, writing, and illustrating matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 198, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "division of agricultural statistics" from $89,300 to $104,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, after the word "dollars," in line 199, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the entire force employed in this division at the city of Washington shall not at any time exceed forty-one persons, and that the salary or compensation paid to a State agent under this paragraph shall not exceed $600 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Animal Industry," to strike out the clause from line 218 to line 235, inculsive, as follows:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, there is hereby reappropriated the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated under section 10 of said act of May 29, 1884; also the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated under the paragraph "investigating the diseases of animals," in the act of June 5, 1884, making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; and also the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated under the paragraph "Bureau of Animal Industry," in the act of March 3, 1885, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, $100,000; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, not to conflict with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to line 256.

Mr. MILLER. I had an amendment to propose to this paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. Wait until we get through with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Very well; I shall wait.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded. The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That no part of the money herein or hereafter appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person, as additional salary or compensation, receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employé of the Government; and in addition to the proper vouchers and accounts for the sums appropriated for the said Department to be furnished to the accounting officer of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Agriculture shall, at the commencement of each regular session, present to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditure of all appropriations for said Department for the last preceding fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I had an amendment prepared to the clause in regard to forestry, but have mislaid it. It was simply a provision permitting the Commissioner to purchase books or works upon the subject of forestry. I am told that the First Comptroller of the Treasury has refused to audit any bills for the purchase of the necessary literaature pertaining to this department, upon the ground that no such item was distinctly stated in the appropriation bill. Therefore I desire to insert in line 253, after the word "forestry," the words "purchase of books and other publications relating to forestry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 253, after the word "forestry," it is proposed to insert "purchase of books and other publications relating to forestry;" so as to read:

Division of forestry:

For compensation of chief of forestry division, $2,000; for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to experiment and to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, purchase of books and other publications relating to forestry, and the collection and distribution of valuable economic forest-tree seeds and plants, $8,000; in all, $10,000.

Mr. PLUMB. If that is a proper amendment, as I presume it may be, it ought to come in under the head of "library." The inevitable tendency of all this multiplication of functions is to get up little nuclei of libraries, and working apparatus, and rooms, and chiefs of bureaus, and attendants, and so on, which is expensive and generally harmless, so far as securing results is concerned. One library in a department of this kind is enough; but if this item is put in here we shall have a forestry library, and probably we shall have a microscopical library and a botanical library, and so on, of course with the accompaniment of librarians and library rooms, &c.—not to the unification or benefit of the service, but to the delectation of more or less people, of course.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to this item going into the library clause. I think the criticism of the Senator from Kansas is quite correct. However, if it is put in there now, the sum appropriated for the library by the bill, $1,500, may not be quite sufficient. If it goes into the library clause it must come out of the appropriation for the library, whereas if put in the forestry clause it comes out of the $8,000 appropriation for forestry. It is entirely immaterial to me and, I suppose, to the department, but the Comptroller of the Treasury has refused to audit any account for works on forestry because they were not mentioned in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it would be well to put it in the other place. In regard to the amount, I do not know of course how much may be expended upon literature on this particular subject, but certainly that which is material to this country can not be very large in extent or very expensive. I know of course that we get more or less a book-worm faculty and desire to get quantity as well as quality; but in these days of condensation and modern reproduction of publications I think it is possible to get all that is really necessary without any very great expense. Still I shall not object to a reasonable increase of the library appropriation, but I want all the books to come under one heading.

Mr. MILLER. Then let the amendment, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, go into line 215, after the word "periodicals."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What words?

Mr. MILLER. The same words that I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as now modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 215, after the word "periodicals," it is proposed to insert:

The purchase of books and other publications relating to forestry—

So as to read:

Library:

For entomological and botanical works of reference, works on chemistry and mineralogy, charts, current agricultural works for library, miscellaneous agricultural periodicals, the puchase of books and other publications relating to forestry, and the completion of imperfect series, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Now, if it meets the views of the Senator from Kansas, I would suggest to transfer $1,000 of the appropriation for forestry over to the library account, and make that $2,500, and the amount for forestry $7,000.

Mr. PLUMB. Will as much as $1,000 be necessary for this?

Mr. MILLER. I think so. I am not able to state positively, but I understand there are no scientific works upon this question of forestry now in the department of any value. It is a very important division, and it is a department of science which has been followed for a great many years in Europe, and there are very valuable publications in Europe on this subject which have been the study of scientific men for years, and the sum of $1,000 would not be too much, but at all events I think we can trust the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture, as my amendment will not increase the total appropriation, but transfer $1,000 there. I think it had better be transferred.

Mr. PLUMB. The money will certainly be spent if appropriated. One thousand dollars ought to buy a couple of hundred volumes. While I have no doubt there may be a great many things interesting to people who have time and inclination to pore over tomes of the past, at the same time I believe that everything which is really of value is in print in this country to a very large extent, and I do not care so far as I am concerned to patronize foreign publications except to a necessary degree. I shall not object, however, to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I think on a question of protection to home industry the Senator from Kansas will not distance me at all, but still I am not so hidebound in that direction but that I am willing to go abroad for any information which I can obtain.

The subject of forestry is a great and important department in the German Empire and in the French Republic, and in I think nearly every European government. It is so important that they not only maintain an independent department of the government for it, but they maintain at the government expense very important and large schools in different parts of the Empire of Germany, and they spend a vast sum of money upon it, and they have so far perfected the system that they receive also a large income. The income from the forestry department in the German Government very much exceeds the expense of the government in that direction. It has become a profitable industry for the government, and I should be glad to have our country avail itself of all that has been published and of all that is of any value upon that subject.

It seems to me that a thousand dollars is not an extravagant sum; it does not increase the total of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. My general observation and I think that of everybody else is that too many of our people go too much abroad for literature and for matters to imitate. Some of our people go across the water to pick up the droppings from the other side, to get decorations, &c., overlooking the presence of the same information at home in a very large measure.

The parallel between our Government and France and Germany on forestry is just like a parallel between ours and theirs on public lands, they having no public lands at all. We do not carry on our public lands to derive a revenue from them. The Governments of France and Germany own the forests and levy a tax upon the poor people of those countries practically for everything they take from them. Our public land system is carried on in an entirely different way, not with the idea of profit, but with the idea that the Government is a trustee for the benefit of all the people of the United States.

But I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 215, it is proposed to strike out the word "one," before "thousand," and insert "two," so as to make the appropriation for the library of the Agricultural Department $2,500, and in line 255, to strike out "ten," before "thousand," and insert "nine," so as to make the total amount of the appropriation for the division of forestry $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. It is necessary also to strike out the word "eight" and insert "seven" before "thousand," in line 255, so as to make the appropriation for the division of forestry, exclusive of the appropriation for the compensation of the chief, $7,000 instead of $8,000. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to insert at the end of line 256 the amendment which I send to the Chair and ask to have read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 256 it is proposed to insert:

Reclamation of arid and waste lands:

To aid in sinking an artesian well in Eastern Oregon or Eastern Washington Territory, with a view to reclaim arid and waste public lands, such well to be located and money expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, in conjunction with the expenditure of any appropriation made or which may be made by said State or Territory and contributions by individuals for such purpose, $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. There is in the United States a vast arid region——

Mr. BECK. I desire to reserve any questions of order it may be proper to make. I do not object to the Senator speaking, but if a point of order can be made against the amendment I desire to reserve it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky raise a question of order?

Mr. BECK. I do; but not until the Senator from Oregon concludes. I reserve the right to raise it.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment is not subject to a point of order. The amendment is reported by direction of a committee of the Senate, and therefore is directly within the rules. It is reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

As I was about to say, there is west of the Rocky Mountains a vast arid region estimated to contain 700,000,000 acres, and it contains a water supply sufficient to irrigate only 30,000,000 acres.

On June 30, 1883, it was estimated that within Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Southern California, Eastern Oregon, a portion of the eastern portion of Idaho, and Eastern Washington Territory there were more than 500,000,000 acres of land in what was known as the arid region. The available water supply has been mainly taken up by pre-emption and homestead claims, and the only hope for the practical reclamation of these lands is by artesian wells.

I introduced some time since a memorial from Mr. Philip Ritz, of Washington Territory, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and which was the cause of having this amendment reported. That memorial states—and I now have the statute before me—that the Territory of Washington made an appropriation of $6,000 by a law passed at the last session of the Territorial Legislature for the purpose of sinking artesian wells in Adams and Franklin Counties in order to ascertain if artesian water can be found in the desert-land district of Eastern Washington. The amount appropriated by the Washington Territorial Legislature for this purpose is inadequate. The whole amount will be inadequate for one well. What is proposed by the Committee on Public Lands is that the United States, being the largest land-owner and having the greatest interest in this question, shall contribute to the sinking of at least one well in this region—try the experiment and see if water can be obtained.

The appropriation asked for is only $5,000, to be used in conjunction with the appropriation by the Territory of Washington as already made, and any which may be made by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, and contributions which may be made by individuals, the well to be located and the money expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture. This is a very moderate sum. It is a very important question. The United States is only asked to do its part, and I think there can be no objection to the amendment. There was no objection in the committee when the amendment was directed to be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BECK. Is it in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that there is a point of order made on the amendment. As the present occupant understands (and he is so informed by the regular presiding officer), it is in order, having been reported regularly by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I have not charge of this bill; but we spent money for artesian wells in the Far West in years gone by without success, and we determined we would cease the experiment. I believe it is bad policy to renew it again. There may be portions of Washington Territory and elsewhere where artesian wells may be of use to some who have ranches so as to get the benefit of water; but in a Territory as large as that, which is capable of great agricultural resources in places where the people can take care of themselves or tax themselves for their own benefit, it seems to me we are going to unnecessary expense now after all the experiments we have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAWLEY. I confess for one that I was not paying close attention. Will some one be so kind as to explain the motion?

Mr. DOLPH. If the Chair will permit me, I will state that the Territorial Legislature of Washington Territory has made an appropriation of $6,000; the people there have agreed to tax themselves to that amount to try this experiment. The experiment is to see if water can be obtained by an artesian well in Eastern Washington Territory where there is a very large tract of desert land. The Territory has also authorized the counties in which wells are proposed to be sunk to make further appropriations. But the Territorial appropriation is inadequate, and a memorial from citizens there was presented here and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the committee thought it would be but just for the United States, being the largest land-owner there, to contribute toward sinking a well and trying this experiment.

It is true, as I understand, that not much benefit has been obtained from appropriations which have been heretofore made for a similar purpose; but there never has been any experiment in this region, which is the basin of the Columbia, surrounded by high mountains, and where, if water could be obtained, it would be a very important matter.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. I should like to know what will be the result on that country if the artesian wells should prove a success. Would it bring much of that country into settlement and cultivation?

Mr. DOLPH. As was said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in his speech on the admission of Washington Territory, all this vast region known as the arid region is as fertile as the Delta of the Nile if water can be got upon it.

Mr. GEORGE. All it needs, then, is water?

Mr. DOLPH. All it needs is water to make it fruitful and productive; and if this well should be a successful experiment and water obtained, large portions of that region would be reclaimed and fitted for homes for settlers.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I should be inclined to vote for the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Kentucky stated correctly that the experiments heretofore made by the United States in this direction had not been very successful. I think that Congress appropriated somewhere in the neighborhood of $60,000——

Mr. BECK. Seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. TELLER. For experiments in Colorado. The money was all spent without getting any water. Different sections of the country were prospected, as we would say in that region, and water was not found. Subsequently individuals——

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question? Under whose direction and supervision was that money spent?

Mr. TELLER. Under the direction, I think, of the Commissioner of Agriculture. Perhaps the first appropriation was under the Secretary of War. After that it was under the Commissioner of Agriculture. That was not a fruitful experiment, and yet it has not been without its benefits. It has given us notice where wells can not be put. We know at least that in certain sections it is useless for the citizen to put down a well unless he is going beyond a certain depth, because that is what the Government has shown. In other sections of Colorado, by a mere accident, in sinking a shaft for coal it was discovered that artesian water could be had, and to-day I do not exaggerate when I say that there are a hundred flowing, or, properly speaking, artesian, wells in the State of Colorado. And yet the Government did not get any water, while if the experiment had been tried in the first instance at these places they would have had it with very little expense.

It seems to me that the Government, owning this vast area of arid land, utterly useless unless water can be had, can afford to try the experiment here and there in different sections. There is a great region in Nevada, in California, in Utah, and other sections of that country, as well as Washington Territory, in which the Government ought to try these experiments—determine in the first instance where there is water. It will save citizens a vast outlay of money. If the Government finds water it will settle a section of country that otherwise never will be settled. This is $5,000 to go with the $6,000 of the people of Washington Territory. The Committee on Public Lands had this under consideration, and thought it was just what a proprietor of a great tract of land would be very glad to do. If somebody puts down half he will put down the other half. It seems to me that $5,000 is a very small thing for the United States to give for this purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, but simply to express the hope that the amendment may be adopted. I can not imagine a case where so small an appropriation might be so fruitful of good results. I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is recommended unanimously, I understand, by the Committee on Public Lands, and is in order, and it seems to me that it ought to be adopted.

Mr. BECK. The objection I made grew out of what has happened. We have spent, as the Senator from Colorado said, $70,000 in trying to sink artesian wells, and we have done no good by that expenditure. All the lands in the region of country where it was proposed we should do good by these wells were open to private entry and settlement, and were taken up. If the wells had been a success they would have inured to the benefit of a few private men. I have no doubt that the points now spoken of in which to make these experiments and locate the wells, where an appropriation was made by the Territorial Legislature, are either occupied or will be occupied at once under the homestead, pre-emption, or some other law by private people, who will get the benefit of the wells.

The United States does not sell any of our lands; she gives them to actual settlers, or to people who call themselves actual settlers, and wherever the wells are sunk and the land is made more valuable it is not made more valuable in the interest of the United States; it is in the interest of private people who get hold of particular lands which are thus made more valuable.

In a great region of country like that, where there is plenty of land yet and will be for years to come, as all our best experience shows, no good will result to the United States by interfering. It was for a long time said that the great staked plain of Texas, the Llano Estacado, had no water upon it; but the very moment that the lands were found to be valuable railroad companies and stock-owners sunk wells and they are utilizing them all. So it will be over these places. Whenever there is any necessity for water to be had it can be found, and men will benefit by it.

It is enough for the United States to allow people to go and take up the lands, and if the State Legislatures want to tax all the people for the benefit of somebody who will get the land all around, they will get enough benefit without our throwing in, or throwing away rather, any more money than we have already done.

Does anybody say we are going to get any money from this land after we develop it? Is it going to be sold at a higher price? No; somebody who has control over matters in that Legislature, or somebody who is smarter than somebody else, will get it and the United States will get nothing.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from Kentucky that not much of this land will ever be sold. It is absolutely worthless unless water can be put upon it. There will not very much of it even raise grass.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator from Kentucky misses the point of the amendment. I do not understand the purpose of the amendment to be to furnish somebody with a well, but to test by an experiment at the expense of the Government, conjointly with the Territory of Washington, whether wells of that sort can be had in that country, so that we may know whether it is to remain a desert in all time to come or whether it can be reclaimed by the boring of these wells.

In order to test that question and to know whether the country is adapted geologically to artesian wells, I am willing to vote for the amendment.

Mr. CHACE. It seems to me that the very point which the Senator from Mississippi has attempted to make, if we construe the amendment carefully, would be made against it.

I must confess that as a general thing I am in favor of Government aid, liberal aid, in all proper directions toward developing the natural resources of the country and toward building up all the industries of the country, and especially the agricultural interests. But a little examination of this amendment shows it to be, it seems to me, a most extraordinary one. It is nothing more nor less than an offer to give to some private individuals $5,000 to help them out in a private speculation. We say, "Go and select some point to sink an artesian well, spend your own money for it, and we will put $5,000 in with you to help you out."

There is no provision in the amendment as to who is to own the well when completed and to whose benefit it is to inure. In fact, it is a loose, careless, and a very improvident and improper amendment, in my judgment.

Mr. GEORGE. Let it be amended, then, so as to require the well to be built on the public land, and reserve the land from sale.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator from Mississippi has an amendment of that kind to offer I shall be very glad to see it made, but I certainly think that as the pending amendment is before the Senate at present it is a very crude and a very improper provision. If the Government of the United States want to experiment more, as they have done a great deal in the past, let them do so; but here is an amendment which provides that $5,000 shall be put into somebody's hands to experiment with. And for whose benefit is it? Who is to profit by it? It seems to me that it is a private speculation with Government funds.

Mr. MAXEY. Does not the amendment practically make the United States a party to a joint-stock company to sink a well?

Mr. CHACE. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. And a few individuals will get the benefit of it.

Mr. CHACE. I was going to make that point. It is undoubtedly a joint-stock operation, the United States to furnish $5,000 of money, and all the benefit, if any benefit accrues, to go to private individuals. Further, if I am correctly informed, that has been the history of the previous experiments that the Government has made in boring artesian wells. While undoubtedly some benefit has accrued to agriculture, it is infinitesimal compared to the profits which have been made by private individuals through the West. In Dakota there are artesian wells. What are they used for? To furnish water for towns, very little for agricultural purposes. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado can compare this to those other enterprises.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if the Government has ever bored any wells in Dakota?

Mr. CHACE. No; but the experiments which the Government made have served as indications by which geologists have traced out where wells could be bored, and that is the object of this movement.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is there any objection to that? What is the objection to it?

Mr. CHACE. I am willing, if the rest of the Senate want to go into it, to pay this money out and let individuals speculate in it.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the strictures of the Senator from Rhode Island are entirely unnecessary. The provision does not justify what he has said.

Mr. CHACE. The question of necessity is one of judgment as to who are going to have the benefit.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator having spoken will give me an opportunity to say a few words in regard to the amendment, that is all I ask, and then the Senator can answer me if he chooses.

I said, not desiring to take the time of the Senate, that it was not the intention that the United States should bore a well entirely at its own expense. The only object was that the United States should contribute to an enterprise which had already been undertaken by the Territory of Washington. To be sure, Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington are named in the amendment, because I did not like to limit and curtail the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture; but the well is to be located by the Commissioner of Agriculture and the money proposed to be appropriated by the amendment is to be expended under his direction and in conjunction with any appropriation which may have been made by the State of Oregon or the Territory of Washington, and with contributions which may be made by individuals, because there are individuals who propose to contribute to the well in order to test the experiment; that is, to bore a single well to ascertain if it is practicable in that region to obtain water by an artesian well.

That being the case, you ought no more to ask that the well should be put on Government land and should belong to the Government because the Government contributes $5,000 to it, than the Territory of Washington would have to claim that it should be put on land which belongs to the territory in the two counties which are mentioned in the act which I shall presently read. I think that when the amendment provides that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall select a site, and the sum shall be expended under his direction, the interests of the United States are amply protected. But I desire to refer to an appropriation which has been already made for this purpose, and I shall call attention to the act itself.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what facility the Commissioner of Agriculture has as an engineer officer to select sites. Why ought it not to be done under the Secretary of War, so that the engineer officers of the Army may do something in the way of selecting a place where there will be a reasonable show of success? What individual in the Department of Agriculture can know anything as to where the well should be located?

Mr. DOLPH. They have the same facility that they had for selecting sites for wells when they made the experiment before. This matter will be laid before the Commissioner of Agriculture. The commissioners appointed by the Territorial Legislature will, I presume, present the matter to him, and if, in his judgment, the money ought not to be expended in conjunction with the appropriation already made it will not be expended.

I call attention to an act passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, and approved January 30, 1886—that is, the 30th of last January. The first section of the act provides:

That the sum of $6,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated out of the general fund of the Territory for the purpose of sinking artesian wells in Adams and Franklin Counties, in order to ascertain if artesian water can be obtained in the desert-land district of Eastern Washington.

Of necessity, if this money is expended at all the Commissioner must locate the well in one of these two counties, either in Adams or Franklin County, in Washington Territory. So far it is limited. If the Commissioner does not think that a suitable location can be obtained in one of those counties the money will not be expended, because the appropriation made by the Territorial Legislature can not be expended in any other county.

Section 2 of the act provides for a commission, who shall serve without compensation, to look after the sinking of the wells:

That N. H. Green, T. W. Martin, of Adams County, and J. W. O'Keefe, of Franklin County, shall constitute a board of commissioners to act without salary or other compensation.

Then it is provided that if any of the commissioners shall fail to serve the governor shall appoint a successor. Then it is provided——

Mr. ALLISON. At that point I desire to ask the Senator if any estimate has been made in reference to the probable cost of the well?

Mr. DOLPH. I think that $10,000 will sink it. I think that $3,000 of the appropriation made by the Territorial Legislature will be available, $5,000 by the United States, and $2,000 contributed by individuals, so that the United States will bear one-half of the cost of one of the wells.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that $6,000 ought to be enough.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That depends on how deep they will have to go.

Mr. DOLPH. If the money is not necessary it will not be used. I want an adequate sum to try the experiment. As was said by the Senator from Mississippi, I think this great Government ought to contribute this amount and work in harmony with the act passed by the Territorial Legislature.

As the amendment is drawn as it is, leaving everything to the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and allowing him to cooperate with these local authorities, I hope the Senator from Rhode Island is satisfied that the amendment is in a proper shape to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to expend the money to the best advantage in connection with the appropriation already made by the Territory, which the Senator will see is guarded, and provides that all the services to be performed in connection with the well shall be gratuitous. I can not think that there is any objection to the form of the amendment.

Mr. CHACE. I had not expected to say anything more about this matter, but the Senator from Oregon seems to call upon me and to render it necessary for me to say that I am not any better satisfied, indeed I am not as well satisfied, as I was before. I think the title of the amendment should be changed, and that it should be characterized as an amendment to bore into the Treasury of the United States.

I have not a word to say in disparagement of the Commissioner of Agriculture. I believe him to be a gentleman eminent in these departments and well qualified for the position he holds. But it does seem to me that the boring of artesian wells is a little out of the line of agriculture; that this amendment is put on the wrong bill; and that if these wells are to be bored it should be done under the supervision of the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States. That corps contains men eminently qualified by their scientific attainments and by their experience.

I think the amendment should be changed in a great many respects. The Senator from Oregon has opened up a little glimpse of what I supposed was the actual fact in the case. Here is an act that has been passed by the Territorial Legislature of Washington providing that the wells shall be bored in a certain place. The amendment would carry the impression that they were to be bored under the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator give way to me for a moment?

Mr. CHACE. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. They ought to be bored in either one of the counties named, which are many times larger than the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. CHACE. The State of Rhode Island is very small, but perhaps its value would show up pretty well compared with Oregon, after all.

I was going to say that the two counties in Washington Territory may prove to be very far from the flow of the great subterranean current, about which we know very little yet, about which the most careful examination of the very best scientist still has revealed but little absolute knowledge. The idea of limiting the point at which you bore these two wells to two little counties in Washington Territory is a simple absurdity. In other words, it is asking the United States Government to toss money into the hands of some private individuals to bore in those counties to see if they can not make some money. That is the long and the short of it.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has intimated that we have no estimates of what this thing is going to cost. We have no proper provision as to how the money shall be spent, nor for whose benefit it is to be done in the end.

Mr. MAXEY. This amendment is practically the organization of a joint-stock company, of which the State of Oregon, the Territory of Washington, the United States, and private individuals may become stockholders. If the experiment is a worthy one, one that ought to be made by the Government, let the Government of the United States make it on its own account and be the absolute controller of the whole movement. If private individuals are to be permitted to go into it, it gives to them an equity over the wells which are sunk, and thus you bore the wells for the benefit of a few private individuals at the expense of the United States Government.

The whole theory of the amendment in my judgment is practically and radically wrong. If the Government wants to go into this business, if it is a reasonable and a feasible measure for the reclamation of arid land, let the Government do it on its own account and control the whole movement. I think the amendment is radically wrong, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. GEORGE. I am a good deal struck with the objections made by the Senator from Kentucky and also by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment so far as the appropriation hereby given may be made the subject of a private speculation, and in order to obviate any objection of that sort I shall offer an amendment which I shall send to the desk directly.

I wish to say in favor of the amendment that the object so far as I am concerned, and I think the only object which will justify us in making the appropriation, is to test the question whether artesian wells can be successfully sunk in order to reclaim that country. The United States have lands there, plenty of them, and in order to make the experiment the lands of the United States are just as suitable as any other lands. Therefore, in order to prevent any implication growing out of the amendment that it is intended to benefit any private party, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in sinking any well except the same be located on land owned by the United States, and the 160 acres of land on which the same may be sunk shall be reserved from sale until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator insert the words "if successful?"

Mr. GEORGE. "Until otherwise provided by law" will do. It can be changed at any time if the experiment should not be successful. The land is not very valuable anyway.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi two or three questions. Suppose that this money is spent in connection with the money furnished by private individuals, and suppose that the well is a success, to whom would belong the flow of the water; to the United States Government or to the individuals?

Mr. GEORGE. It would belong to the Government, of course, as long as it staid on the land of the United States, but if it made a great stream which flowed off the land of the United States it would be owned by others.

Mr. CHACE. Does the Senator from Mississippi suppose that any individuals in Washington Territory are going to put their money in with the United States money to bore such a well with a positive certainty that all their rights would be lost, or that they would have no rights?

Mr. GEORGE. The Government has some rights I presume, and if parties there are willing to contribute to this experiment they do it upon the same idea upon which I vote for the amendment, that they desire to know whether artesian wells can be made a success there. They are owners of land probably, and want to know by actual experiment whether artesian wells can be sunk in that region. At any rate, I think it is our duty to prevent the implication suggested by the Senator from Kentucky and also by the Senator from Rhode Island, that this money may be used for the purpose of advancing the private fortunes of any one individual.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. So far as I am concerned, I hope that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted. I think it is exactly right.

Mr. DOLPH. Will my colleague give way for a moment?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I omitted to state something that appears in the act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory appropriating the $6,000. The following appears in the second section of the act:

It shall be the duty of such commissioners on or before April 1, 1886, to locate the place for sinking said well or wells, and they are hereby authorized to accept a donation to the county in which said well is to be bored of at least one acre of land bordering on a highway, and shall notify the governor as soon as said place has been selected and said land obtained, and shall forward to him the deed of said land, with a plat thereof showing its location.

So it will appear that by this act of the Territorial Legislature the county was to enter the land, and it was to be adjacent to a highway where the experiment was to be tried. As I said before, if the amendment had been adopted as I offered it the Commissioner would simply determine himself whether it was a suitable location, whether he would have located the well there; and if we modify the amendment it may prevent the use of that discretion.

Mr. GEORGE. The Territorial Assembly may make a change in the law.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has the floor.

Mr. BECK. I only want to ask where the well has been located. They were required to locate it by the 1st day of April, 1886. That time has passed over six weeks ago. Where have they located it?

Mr. DOLPH. I am not able to state that.

Mr. BECK. But it is located?

Mr. DOLPH. If so, the Commissioner of Agriculture is not bound to accept their location. As was said a moment ago by the Senator from Mississippi, they can change their law, and if they get the benefit of this appropriation they will have to do it. If the amendment to the amendment is adopted they will have to locate it on public land. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] seem to have gotten the impression in some way that this is a job; that the purpose is to enable some particular persons to take advantage of this appropriation for their own personal benefit. Now, there is nothing of the kind. There is simply but one purpose here, and that is to make a test. That being the purpose, I see, for one, no objection whatever to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], so that the interests of the Government may be fully protected.

The object is simply to make a test upon these arid lands to ascertain whether it is possible to reclaim them, and if the test should be successful the Government of the United States will be very largely the gainer in the end. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended. The yeas and nays have been called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but I learn from his colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] that he does not care to be paired on this question, I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] on all questions.

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], but as this is not a political question I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is unwell and is absent. He would vote "yea" if he were present. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. WHITTHORNE'S name was called). Upon this question my colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If my colleague were here he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bowen,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Frye,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Call,	George,	Miller,	Spooner,
Camden,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Eustis,	Logan,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—13.

Allison,	Cockrell,	Harris,	Wilson of Md.
Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Maxey,
Brown,	Hale,	Pugh,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Stanford,

Conger,	Ingalls,	Payne,	Vest,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Whitthorne.
Fair,	Kenna,	Sabin,

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Shall they be concurred in in gross?

Mr. BECK. I desire a separate vote on the amendment inserting lines 79 to 85, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved.

The question is on concurring in the other amendments as made in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reserved at the request of the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted after line 78 the following paragraph:

All machinery purchased under the provisions of this act shall be built in the United States wholly of domestic material; and experiments in diffusion and carbonation herein provided for applied to sorghum and tropical sugar-cane shall be made during the approaching sugar-making season. No other sugar-making experiments shall be made under the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I differed with the majority of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to that amendment, because I doubted whether the proper machinery to conduct these experiments and to bring them to a close could be obtained here. It will be observed in lines 73 and 74 that the money is not only for the continuing but for the concluding of the experiments, and in lines 83, 84, and 85 in the amendment it is provided that these experiments shall be made during the approaching sugar-making season, and that "no other sugar-making experiments shall be made under the provisions of this act."

I believed that if we were going to give $94,000 more money merely as an experiment we ought to obtain machinery wherever we could, and get the benefit of all the judgment that other people could furnish us. Such experiments have been made in Italy, Germany, France, and other continental countries, and machinery has been gotten up in great part for the purpose of conducting those experiments, while we have not, up to this time, made it a success in this country, as I understand.

We have been making appropriations for experiments with sorghum, beets, and other sugar-producing plants for a good while. I have before me a list furnished by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations showing that we have up to this time appropriated $173,500 for that purpose, and after deducting the expenses of the laboratory for three years, $18,000, a net total of $155,500 is left, and adding the amount in the pending bill it makes a total of $249,500.

The committee was in possession of a letter from Mr. H. W. Wiley, dated May 29, 1886, directed to the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. PLUMB], which reads thus:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
DIVISION OF CHEMISTRY,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1886.

SIR: The Commissioner informed me, before leaving for the West yesterday, that he had had a long conference with you and Senator CALL in respect of the proposed restriction to be introduced as an amendment to the appropriation bill to prevent the department purchasing any part of the machinery to be used in the proposed experiments outside of the United States.

As the Commissioner has already assured you, it is the purpose of the Department to purchase every portion of the machinery that can possibly be manufactured in this country, here. I write this note to call your earnest attention, however, to the fact that such an amendment as mentioned above might possibly cause the total failure of the experiment, and thus prove of incalculable injury not only to the sugar interests of the country but also of great disadvantage to our manufacturers themselves. I am perfectly aware that many American manufacturers will not hesitate to promise that every form of machinery required can be easily made at home, and any one who has made a careful study of the subject knows perfectly well that the manufacture of new forms of machinery, where it is impossible to have access to the plans of the skilled manufacturers of identical forms, must necessarily involve chances of failure.

I need only call your attention to the fact that such pieces of apparatus as carbonic acid pumps, filter-presses, monte-jus, sulphur-furnaces, doors for diffusion batteries, &c., have only reached the perfection which they have now attained by long years of practical experience of the manufacturers. The plans and specifications of such pieces of apparatus are kept with great care by such manufacturers, and it would be idle to suppose that our own machinists, although skillful and intelligent, could hope in the first attempt to produce such machinery of the same excellence as has been reached by the long experience of other manufacturers. When it is remembered that the machinery which we wish to get is solely for the purpose of experiment, and that if successful it could be at once copied and made with equal excellence by our own manufacturers, it certainly seems to me to be unwise to prevent the introduction of such machinery when its use would be productive of so much benefit to all parties concerned. Of course our sole desire is for the complete success of the experiment; and it seems to me the wishes of those who are to conduct the experiment should be consulted in this matter rather than that of the persons whose sole object is to secure contracts for the manufacture of machinery.

I therefore urge upon you the importance of fully considering this aspect of the case before deciding upon any form of restriction which, if adopted, might jeopardize the success of the undertaking.

Very respectfully,

H. W. WILEY, Chemist.

Hon. PRESTON B. PLUMB,
United States Senator, United States Senate Chamber.

I thought every word of that letter was careful, prudent, well taken as an objection to limiting the right of the department to select for experimental purposes machinery wherever they could find it, and that the provision as made by the other House giving to the department $94,000 in addition to the $173,500 given before, being simply for experimental purposes, ought to leave all the avenues of information, all the doors open whereby they could avail themselves at the promptest, earliest possible moment of the best machinery, no matter where made, especially as they were limited by a provision, both in the bill as it passed the House and in the amendment, simply to the next sugar-making season, and this was to conclude and finish all experiments in that direction.

The committee submitted that letter to manufacturers at Wilmington, Del., and they denied that there was any reason for going abroad for any purpose, saying that they could make the machinery. The chemist of the department said, "Of course they will promise that, but what assurance have we that they will comply with it?" However, I hold their letter in my hand which presents the other side, and it is more for the purpose of placing those letters on the record than for any particular interest in the matter that I desire a special consideration of this subject, believing as I do that the views of the men who are to conduct the experiment ought to be considered, and that the views of the chemist of the Agricultural Department ought to prevail rather than the views of manufacturers, who, as he says, are interested only in obtaining the contract.

You will observe that the word "wholly" is used in the amendment—"wholly of domestic material." If the people who seem to make these machines, or whatever is necessary, should fail in any one particular the whole experiment fails, simply by what I regard as a needless limitation, especially when the department has assured the committee (and I desire to put the letter on record to show the country) that it proposes to purchase in this country every portion of the machinery which can possibly be manufactured here. All its officers ask is that they may be allowed to buy elsewhere, from Italians, Spaniards, French, or any other nationality who have brought machinery to perfection, and we have not yet brought it to that state here, because they have been carrying on experiments much longer than we have; and the desire is to obtain from them such portions of machinery as can not be satisfactorily procured here.

It is just to the manufacturers that this letter should be read. It is addressed to Hon. PRESTON B. PLUMB, United States Senate, who was chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill. May 29, 1886, is the date of the letter of Professor Wiley, the chemist. The letter of the gentlemen from Delaware, the Pusey and Jones Company of Wilmington, is dated June 1, two days intervening. Of course Professor Wiley's letter was handed to them. The letter from the Pusey and Jones Company is as follows:

WILMINGTON, DEL., June 1, 1886.

DEAR SIR: We have your favor of yesterday covering a letter from Professor Wiley, chemist of the Bureau of Agriculture, which we have read and now return herewith.

The anxiety which the Professor exhibits that the machinery which the Department of Agriculture intends supplying for the purpose of settling the question as to whether or not sugar can be profitably produced by the diffusion process from sorghum cane is very commendable and shows the earnest interest which he takes in the subject.

Unfortunately for him and for the interests under his charge he is not practical as to machinery or competent to judge with exactness of the value of different mechanical appliances intended to produce a given result.

So far as the particular apparatus to which he refers is concerned, say carbonic-acid pumps, filter presses, monte-jus, sulphur furnaces, and doors for diffusion batteries, we have only to say that in none of these is there any mystery whatever, but the details of all are well known in this country, and the details of the best practice in Europe are not only known here, but have been improved upon in many important particulars.

This company does not have any doubt whatever of its ability to make the pioneer trial of diffusion, now under way at Fort Scott, a complete success, and already has at its command all the information needed to attain that end. To Professor Wiley's suggestion that it would be wise to consult the wishes of those who are to conduct the experiment rather than those whose sole object is to secure contracts for the manufacture of machinery, we have to reply that if the former were only supplied with the requisite practical knowledge to enable them to successfully operate the machinery spoken of there would be no reason for declining to consult their wishes, but when, in the light of the experience of the past four years, the result of such consultation is only to stagnate operation and procrastinate successful experimental trial, the reasons warranting it are not clear.

We wish to say in conclusion that the practical experimental trial as to whether diffusion can be depended upon for practicable and profitable work will be made the present season on a large scale, whether it receives the aid of the Government or not, and while its friends will gladly accept assistance from the Department of Agriculture, they would regard the surrender of the control of the enterprise to the department as the most serious misfortune that could befall it.

Knowing full well what the proposed German and French machinery is, they decidedly prefer to get along without it.

We hope in the interest of the success of diffusion that you will decide to adhere to the amendment.

Very truly yours,

THE PUSEY AND JONES COMPANY,
By WILLIAM G. GIBBONS, President.

Hon. PRESTON B. PLUMB,
United States Senate, Washington.

There is a letter which strikes me in many regards as remarkable. After the assurance that everything which can be made in this country will be made by the manufacturers, and after we have determined in this bill under the head of "chemical division" to put all this matter in charge of the Agricultural Department, here come manufacturers who insist that the Department is not competent to carry on the work, that it must be done by them and their people at Fort Scott, Kans., and they wish to say that they intend to go on whether with Government aid or not; that they will gladly accept assistance from the Department of Agriculture, but they would regard a surrender of the control of the enterprises to the department as the most serious misfortune that could befall them; and "knowing full well what the proposed German and French machinery is, they decidedly prefer to get along without it." In other words, private parties conducting operations at a particular point say that they are going on with this thing whether we help them or not; that they want to go on in their own way; that our chemists do not understand their business; and that they are going to have it done with such machinery as they themselves approve; and they would rather do without Government aid than to be forced to take such machinery as the department might determine in its wisdom was necessary to absolute success.

All I mean to say is that it is not good legislation, in the face of a statement like that from the Agricultural Department, to limit the provision which has been inserted by the other House giving $94,000 for the purpose, but that no matter what the manufacturers of machinery may say, no matter what private parties who may have interests in particular experiments now going on may think, we should give the liberty to our own department officers to whom we intrust the money, and to whom alone we intrust it, to obtain the machinery wherever they can get it the best and cheapest, so as to make the experiment in the best possible way. The amendment limits it to machinery made in the United States, but wholly of domestic material, and unless that is done no experiment shall be made.

That is about all I care to say. I prefer the bill as it came from the House. The limitation imposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations can by no possibility do any good if the word of our own officials can be trusted. It may possibly do harm if the manufacturer whose letters I have read and others similarly situated should not be able to make everything that may be needed to try the experiment. If they can, they ought to be allowed, and they will be allowed, to make it all; but I deny that it is wise legislation to cripple the bill as it came from the House by imposing upon it such limitations as in the opinion of the department officers may result in absolute failure because our own manufacturers may not be able wholly to make these things to suit them in this country.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator from Kentucky that if there is any machinery needed for agricultural experiments which can not be procured in this country the Department ought to have the privilege of procuring abroad those thing which are necessary to the business which it has in hand.

I know very well the gentleman who wrote the last letter read by the Senator from Kentucky, and I do not hesitate to say that as to the capacity of the mechanics of this country to make the machinery necessary for these experiments he knows five times as much as Professor Wiley or the Commissioner of Agriculture or any man connected with the Agricultural Department. He has spent his life in practical work as a machinist, and there is no gentleman in this country whose judgment upon a question of that kind is entitled to higher consideration than Mr. Gibbons.

So far as the profits of the work are concerned, the Pusey and Jones Company of Wilmington, Del., do not care a fig, but they do protest against any legislation here at the dictation of Professor Wiley or anybody else which shall put a stigma upon the mechanics of this country and advertise to the world that the machinery which is required to carry on these experiments can not be made in this country, but that we must go abroad and seek it. The very proposition of Professor Wiley itself conveys an imputation against the machinists of this country that they are incapable of making the machinery required for these experiments by the Agricultural Department.

Sir, it is that which the machinists of this country protest against; not because they care a fig about the profits from making this experimental machinery, but they do not want a proclamation issued by the Congress of the United States that our own machinists are wholly incapable, and that if private parties as well as the Agricultural Department want machinery of this character they must necessarily go abroad to get it.

As a member of the Senate, while I would not restrict Congress to procuring machinery anywhere, but would allow it to be procured wherever it could be got on the best terms, I do protest against a public proclamation, upon the dictation or suggestion of a professor of chemistry who knows nothing at all about machinery, that our machinists in this country are not capable of meeting the requirements of the Agricultural Department in this regard.

It is that consideration which prompted Mr. Gibbons to write, not because he desires to make any profit himself from the manufacture of the machinery, for I know the character of that firm in Wilmington. They are men who stand among the very head machinists of the country, and who have plenty of business outside of preparing this mere experimental work for the Agricultural Department. It is not because of any supposed profits they are going to lose, but it is because they do not want the machinists of this country branded in the Halls of Congress by a proclamation carrying out the suggestion of Professor Wiley that they are incompetent to perform this duty.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, as the bill came from the other House it contained no stigma upon anybody. Since the reading of the letters presented by the Senator from Kentucky I have been unable to determine which is the most audacious in his criticism, the chemist in saying that the machinist did not understand his business, or the machinist in alleging that the chemist was ignorant of his duty. It seems to me that the chemist has the best of the thing, inasmuch as he is required to produce the results.

It appears to me that if we were as private citizens going to start an enterprise of this kind for the purpose of manipulating sugar out of the sugar-cane, we would never restrict our agent for any purpose whatsoever, unless it might be in the amount of money that he was to expend. I venture to say that there is not a sensible firm in the United States of America or in the world who would prescribe to their agent the duty of producing certain results and at the same time tell him that he should not have an unlimited choice of means to produce the results.

Now, what is the object of this legislation? Is it not for the purpose of encouraging the manufacture of sugar in this country from the sugar-cane, from beet-root, &c.? If so, and we require the Department of Agriculture to undertake these experiments for the public benefit, is it not common sense to permit the Commissioner of Agriculture to attain the object by any means possible, within his reach?

But it seems that in reality the object is not for the purpose of obtaining the results that appear upon the face of the paper, but for the purpose of benefiting some American manufacturer. If that is the object, I think it is sufficiently accomplished (I know it is for all my purposes and desires) by the tariff act which now stands upon the statute-book of the country. If after paying taxes upon the article we can not do anything in this country for our own benefit, or for the benefit of the communities in which we live, unless it be saddled with a benefit to be given to some manufacturer, then I think it is high time we should abandon the whole Agricultural Department.

The bill is full of instances of articles which are to be required and used for experimental purposes by the Agricultural Department to be obtained from all other countries of the world. Why not impose restrictions upon those? Why not compel the Agricultural Department to buy no seeds except those which are produced in this country? Why allow the Commissioner of Agriculture to send to Europe to get the seeds grown by the pauper labor of Europe when there is an abundance of American seeds just as good and a great deal better than the pauper-grown seeds of the Old World? Why not confine the bill in every particular, where articles are to be purchased, to purchasing in the home market and nowhere else?

Do we desire any improvement in this country? Are we already better than all the rest of the world? Can mankind dispersed around this planet anywhere outside of the boundaries of the United States of America produce anything that is fit for any person's use? If we have come to that state of beatitude, then we do not need an agricultural department; we have already attained the highest good that finite man is capable of attaining, and we had better stop and save our money and enjoy it at home.

The idea of restricting the department in experiments in this way is one of the most absurd and preposterous ever yet advanced by the advocates of a high protective tariff. I think we ought in common sense and in common decency, if we require the Agricultural Department to expend this money for the public benefit, to allow them the fullest liberty to purchase the means of doing so wherever they are to be found. If the Commissioner of Agriculture and the chief chemist in charge of that department are not judges of the best machinery and the best means for producing these results, then in Heaven's name let us have them examined by the civil-service board and discharged for incapacity.

I think that this whole amendment ought to be stricken out. If there is one particular firm that is interested, that is already partially engaged in this scheme on its own account, and desires the aid of the Government and would lose money perhaps if the Government did not aid it, if the Senator from Delaware will introduce such a bill I will agree to pay the damages before they are incurred in order that the Government of the United States may be free to pursue its own business in its own way and on the best terms that can possibly be obtained.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I fully concur with the views presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. This is not a question of protecting American industry. It is not a question of free trade. By the terms of this bill it is a question whether an experiment to be tried justifies the appropriation. The bill requires that the experiment shall continue and be concluded. Therefore it is only during the next grinding season that the experiment can be tested. It places upon those who are charged with this experiment a very great responsibility. The mere loss of the money appropriated is one consideration; but the more important consideration is whether the diffusion process can be shown to be a success in this country.

Mr. GEORGE. Has it been shown to be a success anywhere else?

Mr. EUSTIS. I am going to come to that in a moment.

That I understand to be the object of this appropriation. It is not to determine whether American or German or French mechanics are superior. It is not to determine whether we should encourage anything else but the sugar industry. The proposition does not involve any encouragement of mechanical skill. The question is not whether we shall encourage competition between American laborers and foreign artisans with reference to this particular and peculiar kind of machinery. The question is whether, under this appropriation and the terms of the bill, you can secure that machinery which, when secured, will enable you to determine whether the experiment is a failure or is a success.

Inasmuch as the experiment has to be tested during the next grinding season, you can not indulge in any other experiments to ascertain whether the constituents of my friend from Delaware are sufficiently skillful to furnish this particular machinery. The fact is that you must have the machinery within a given period of time, and when you get the machinery you put it in operation and test the question whether the machinery can be adapted to the diffusion process of making sugar in this country. I know that if you place this limitation upon the Department charged with the success or failure of this experiment, unless you get that machinery where it has already been made for years, which is machinery in all its details of an exceedingly peculiar and delicate character, unless at the time you begin your experiment in sugar making the machinery is complete, scientifically as well as mechanically complete, and unless the machinery does perform the duty which it must perform within a limited and a given time, in my humble judgment you are throwing away money and not advancing the interests of either the mechanics of the country or the sugar planters of Louisiana.

Now, a word in reference to the diffusion process. In Europe, where of course they do not cultivate the cane, but make their sugar from beet-root, they have used the diffusion process for a great many years. They have made improvements upon the diffusion process. They have by study and experiments brought the diffusion process to such a point of perfection that to-day the sugar planters of Cuba, Jamaica, and Louisiana can not compete with the beet-planters of Germany, Austria, and France; and by reason of the very success of the experiments which have been conducted in those countries for years they have placed the cane-sugar growers of this and other countries almost at their mercy. Therefore, the idea, as I understand it, is to try to adapt the diffusion process, which has been successfully applied to the beet producing sugar, to the peculiar structure of the cane.

It is self-evident that the officers charged with this experiment, inasmuch as they are obliged to have that machinery in perfect order, say by the 20th of October next, must, if you want this to be a serious experiment, have the right to purchase the machinery wherever the machinery can be made and can be obtained.

I repeat, considering that these experiments must be made within a certain time, considering that the experiments must be concluded, and that by the declaration of the bill the success or failure of the experiments will be a test of future appropriations by Congress, one of the essential conditions of the experiments is that the parties who are charged with the responsibility of conducting them should have the privilege of securing the machinery where the machinery is made and has been for years, and not be held responsible for any mechanical experiments in this country in trying to encourage American manufactures or to vindicate American mechanics.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, it is admitted, I believe, on all hands that the agricultural appropriation bill is not a tariff bill. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who is always very watchful over the legislation of this body in order that he may detect the wily practices of the protectionists and prevent them from getting protectionist measures even into agricultural appropriation bills, tells us that this is a very shrewd device on the part of the protectionists of this body to turn the bill into a protectionist or tariff bill to benefit thereby the manufacturers of this country.

I wish the Senator were right upon that proposition, for then we should have much hope of his own side, for instead of the amendment, which we find here in the bill, coming from this side of the Chamber and from protectionists it comes from the other side. This amendment was introduced into this body by the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and by that committee reported back favorably and sent to the Committee on Appropriations, by which committee it was put into this bill.

I have been delighted in listening to the eloquence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], as he has told this body of the ability, the skill, and the genius of the mechanics of the North and particularly of his own State. Those who are at all acquainted with the manufacturing of machinery in this country know that in the city of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, there are some of the most skillful machinists to be found in this country, and that the machinery sent out from that city is not surpassed by any machinery constructed in any other city in this Union or any other city in the world.

I have no doubt that the reason for the offering of the amendment by the junior Senator from Delaware, and the able advocacy of it by the senior Senator from Delaware, arose from the fact that both those gentlemen knew very well that their own party was only too ready and anxious to give orders for machinery to foreigners rather than to American manufacturers, and from their own personal knowledge of the ability of the manufacturers in Wilmington to produce the best sugar machinery ever constructed in the world, they thought it necessary to prevent this Democratic administration from sending this money abroad, to put this provision in the bill so that it might not be done.

Therefore this little trick and device of the protectionist to benefit the American manufacturers turns out to be an honest effort on the part of leading Democrats of this body to prevent the Democratic party from going abroad for this machinery and paying out American money for it.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. From what committee did this amendment come?

Mr. MILLER. I have just stated. The amendment was introduced into this body on the 14th day of May by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator from Delaware who introduced it called my attention to it. I presented it to the members of the committee and secured a favorable report, and brought it in here and had it sent to the Committee on Appropriations for their action under the rules of this body.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator be kind enough to inform me who is chairman of that committee, and whether the majority of the committee is Republican or Democratic?

Mr. MILLER. I am the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and of course the majority is Republican; but it had never occurred to the chairman of the committee or to any of the Republican members of it to suggest any such legislation as this. It was necessary for gentlemen who know the tendencies of this administration better than we do, who know the danger of leaving such a proposition open, to present this limitation, or it would never have been here at all.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has told us, and told us truly, that the sugar manufactured in Europe is extracted from beet-roots, and that the processes and machinery used in that manufacture are not suitable fully or in any great extent to the manufacture of sugar from cane. When the machinery constructed in Europe for the manufacture of sugar by the diffusion process has been tried in this country upon the cane it has been found to be a lamentable failure. The constituents of the Senators from Delaware have produced, I believe, according to statements which are public and can not be denied, the best machinery of the kind in the world, and in its operations already it has given results producing 98 per cent. of all the sugar to be found in the cane.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator yield to me to correct a statement?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I made no allusions whatever to past experiments of the diffusion process.

Mr. MILLER. So far as that is concerned then I stand corrected, if any correction is needed; but by what right or by what knowledge does the Senator from Louisiana or the Senator from Kentucky tell us that Europe, which is engaged in manufacturing sugar out of beet-roots, is therefore better able than we here in America, who manufacture it out of cane, to produce the machinery which we want for manufacturing sugar from cane? Is there any probability that they can produce better machinery than our mechanics and engineers who have been engaged in it for a century? Not at all. The foreign machinery which has been tried, which was made for beet-sugar, has produced only a result of 90 per cent. of the saccharine matter found in the cane, whereas the American machinery has brought about a result of 98 per cent. of saccharine matter.

Upon this question I send to the desk and will ask the Secretary to read an article upon the experiments which have been made with these two kinds of machinery; and I leave my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] to hunt out some other delicate trick of the protectionists to take care of the manufacturers of this country!

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AMERICA STILL AHEAD.

Professor Wiley, chief of the chemist's division of the Department of Agriculture, who is now making a tour in Europe, makes an interesting report upon the manufacture of sugar at Almeria, in Southern Spain, by the diffusion and carbonatation process, which is exciting so much interest in sugar-producing countries, and particularly in this country, where Congress has appropriated about a quarter of a million of dollars for experiments, while our sugar manufacturers have expended fully four times as much for the same purpose.

Professor Wiley reports that he is encouraged to find that the satisfactory results obtained by the experiments under the direction of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, Kans., are fully confirmed by the experiments at Almeria, Spain, and both together give the greatest assurance that, with proper chemical and mechanical appliances and skill, the diffusion process, as applied to sugar-cane, is certain to supplant all other methods.

It appears, moreover, from his report that, as between the European-built diffusion machinery used in Spain and the American-built machines used in the Kansas experiments, the latter worked the better by far. Both machines were set up and operated by inexperienced machinists, such as could be found in the immediate neighborhood of the experimental stations, and who had never seen a diffusion battery before.

The Kansas battery of ten cells worked at the preliminary trial at the rate of 84 tons of sugar-cane in twenty-four hours, "extracting 98 per cent. of the total sugar present."

The European battery used in Spain had fourteen cells, all of them larger than those in its American competitor—and should have twice the daily capacity—yet it only worked, at the first trial, at the rate of 75 tons of sugar-cane in twenty-four hours, though its builders claim a capacity of 100 tons.

An American-built battery of the same size as the one used in Spain would work, with anything like good management, at least 200 tons in that time, or twice as fast as the European machine.

The sugar-cane cutters used in Spain were copies from an obsolete American cutter that was rejected by the builder in 1884, but the owner is now having another built after the plans of the one that was invented and built here for the United States Government experimental sugar-works in Louisiana, but which has not yet been set up.

In the Kansas experiments the sugar-cane cutter, which, by the way, is the most important part of the entire apparatus, was a success from the start, cutting about 50 tons per day in excess of its maximum contract capacity. In his report Professor Wiley says:

"I reached Ottawa on Wednesday, September 9, and the work of erection was pushed with all possible dispatch. On Sunday, September 27, the rest of the machinery arrived. During the following week, one cutter having been completed, preliminary trials were made with the apparatus. The cutter was found to give good satisfaction; with a capacity of 6 tons per hour, giving a nicely grooved chip well suited for diffusion."

The German Government spent upward of $100,000 in experimenting upon sugar-beet cutters before it obtained one that "gave good satisfaction and a beet-chip well suited to diffusion," and when the cutter was at length obtained, at such cost, it was no use whatever for cutting sugar-cane. The long-sought-for cane-cutter has at length been produced by a successful manufacturer of wood-paper machinery, and without any cost to the Government for experimenting.

Professor Wiley has been in correspondence with the builders of sugar machinery in Europe for some time, and last season sent his assistant, Mr. Spencer, on a tour among them, and has, without doubt, taught them something about diffusion as applied to sugar-cane, and more particularly about sugar-cane cutters, the last named being a new American invention that European builders as yet know very little of.

At all events it is gratifying to learn from his report that our American machinists are so much in advance of their European competitors in building diffusion machinery for working sugar-cane. Our friends over the water have copied our monitors, torpedo-boats, steam and sail yachts, and other triumphs of American inventors almost without end, and now they are quite at liberty to pattern after our mills for working all kinds of sugar-cane. They are at home in the manufacture of beet sugar, but when it comes to the manufacture of sugar from tropical sugar-cane our machinists are far ahead.

Chemical Bulletin No. 2, issued by the Department of Agriculture in 1884, is a record of eighteen years' dismal failure of all efforts to use European-built diffusion machinery in extracting saccharine matter from sugar-cane, though tried again and again in British India, Louisiana, and other sugar-cane growing countries. The success of American engineers and machinists in this work is certainly gratifying.

Mr. MILLER. I simply desire to say in conclusion that there is no possible doubt with people who are well informed on the building of machinery of this kind that American-built machinery for sugar-making is far better than any which has been produced in Europe or elsewhere, and that it is perfectly safe to leave this amendment in the bill.

Of course, as leading Democrats on the other side, fearing their own administration of public affairs, find it necessary to put this check on the administration to prevent their sinking this money, I do not think the protectionists on this side ought to object.

Mr. VANCE. If, as was asserted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], the machinery for the manufacture of sugar made in this country is the best in the world, I should like to know why it is that it can not commend itself to those who purchase that kind of machinery without the benefit and the aid of a positive law to that effect. If the persons in charge of the department are not in possession of the information which the Senator from New York and the Senator from Delaware are in possession of, that this really is the best machinery in the world made on the banks of the Delaware, but, on the contrary, seem to be possessed of the opposite idea that it is not the best and that the experiments will be a failure probably if that machinery be adopted, then it is prima facie proof that the gentleman who is in charge of the Agricultural Department is unfit for his place, which I am slow to believe. I believe simply the contrary, and I do not think that it is the best machinery in the world, or else it would commend itself to public favor without the aid of legal force.

The Senator from New York suggests that probably the friends of that manufactory in Delaware were aware that under this Democratic and free-trade administration—this is the first time I believe I have ever heard it so denominated—it was necessary to appeal to the law to protect American manufacturers. There would be something more than a little grim humor in that suggestion if it were not for the fact that every bill we have passed for the last five years, certainly since I have been acquainted with our legislation under Republican administrations, for the construction of ships has contained similar provisions, that the material used should be of American manufacture. I believe so far back as the granting of lands to aid in the construction of railways across this continent every one of those grants contained a provision that the iron laid down should be of American manufacture. So that I suppose the reference of the Senator to the supposed necessity of obtaining this kind of protection from a free-trade administration was a piece of grim humor, for which he is sometimes celebrated.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this amendment was first introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and afterward by myself, at the instance of a representative of the Southern planting interest, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. The committee did not consider the question of tariff or the question of protection as in any way involved in this amendment.

The facts of the case do not relate to any of these economic questions. They are very plain. There have been experiments for a number of years, as stated in the very intelligent and forcible letter of the gentleman from Wilmington, and as confirmed by the representatives of the sugar-cane interest who appeared before the committee, a statement from whom I have in my hand. These experiments have been made for several years, and have been made largely with foreign machinery. The question is no longer an open question as to which is the best kind of machinery, whether that made abroad or that made at home.

As stated in the letter of the gentleman from Wilmington, which has been read here, Mr. Gibbons, it consists of things which are well known to machinists, about which there is no kind of mystery. They have been experimented upon, and the machinery for making the beet sugar in Europe has been a total failure and no comparison with the American machinery. It is no longer a question of doubt, according to the reports made to the committee, as to which kind of machinery, the American manufactured or the foreign manufactured, is the most certain to give success, and the experiments in Kansas last year attained a higher degree of success than any that have ever been made, and those were with machinery manufactured in Delaware and at the establishment of Mr. Gibbons.

With these facts before the committee, with the statement in the report of the Agricultural Department, in Bulletin No. 2, of the number of failures with foreign machinery for the last eighteen years, and in view of the success of the experiment made in Kansas, with the confirmation of that statement by the representatives of the sugar interests in Louisiana and other Southern States, the question was a settled one as to whether the machinery ought to be bought abroad or bought in the United States. A statement was submitted to me for the purpose of being laid before the committee. The committee had no interest in the question as to whether the machinery should be bought abroad or bought in the United States. It was a simple question whether it was clear beyond any doubt of the fact that the American machinery or the foreign machinery was the better. The statement is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, May 27, 1886.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, United States Senator,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR SIR: I send herewith the facts, as promised, in relation to the proposed Government experiments in the application of the process of diffusion in the manufacture of cane sugar, which must interest you, since Florida is destined to become in the near future a great sugar-producing State.

It is conceded now everywhere that the ordinary roller-crushing machinery applied to the extraction of juice from the tropical sugar-cane of Florida, Louisiana, and Texas, or the sorghum of the Western States, does not ordinarily result in the extraction of more than about 60 per cent. of the juice contained in the cane. Something like 40 per cent. of the sugar in the cane is wasted in the process of extraction.

On the other hand, the beet-root sugar manufacturers of France and Germany have succeeded by government aid in perfecting the process of diffusion so as to extract about 98 per cent. of sugar contained in the beets.

Unfortunately for our sugar industry, the European diffusion machinery that is built expressly for beet-root sugar manufacture will not work when applied to sugar-cane, as many of our planters have learned to their cost, something like half a million dollars of private capital having been expended by our planters in the vain endeavor to adapt European beet-root sugar-diffusion machinery to the extraction of juice from tropical sugar-cane. Four full sets of this expensive European diffusion machinery have been abandoned and are now lying idle in Louisiana.

Our sugar-planters have had enough of it; but Professor Wiley, now and for years past chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture and in sole charge of the Government sugar-making experiments, persists in recommending the importation of more foreign beet-root sugar machinery, in face of the fact that the only success thus far achieved was by the use of a set of American diffusion machinery, built expressly for cane-sugar manufacture, and tried for a couple of days last year in Kansas, a full account of which is accurately given in the annexed article from one of the Washington papers.

Then follows the article from the National Republican which has been read at the request of the Senator from New York.

The letter then continues:

I am fully sustained in the position I take in this matter by the Louisiana Sugar Planters' Association, as is shown by a unanimous vote of thanks tendered me at its regular monthly meeting on the 13th instant, indorsing the stand taken by me on the subject.

I therefore most sincerely hope your amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill will be adopted. I fully intended to offer a similar amendment in the House, but when the bill passed I did not have important facts that have since come into my possession, and which now convince me of the necessity of its adoption.

I have conversed with the chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the House, Mr. HATCH, who assures that he will sustain me in this matter.

Very truly, yours,

J. FLOYD KING.

That was the authority upon which the Committee on Appropriations acted. It is upon evidence that the planters of Louisiana have tried the foreign machinery, have expended a half-million dollars, that the machinery is now thrown away useless and the money wasted in the attempt, and because in the experiments made in Kansas with American machinery a distinguished success was attained, but not such as to make it a matter beyond doubt——

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question. I ask him whether if this amendment is disagreed to the Commissioner of Agriculture has not the right and privilege to buy the machinery from American manufacturers?

Mr. CALL. Certainly he has, but the committee thought from the evidence in the case that it was conclusively proved that the foreign machinery was utterly impracticable, as stated by Mr. Gibbons in his letter, and that the American machinery had upon its fair test developed a very great certainty of success, and therefore they wanted to confine the Commissioner, whatever might be his predilection, to the American machinery.

Mr. EUSTIS. I merely wish to state that if the amendment is disagreed to the Commissioner of Agriculture is left perfectly free to purchase the machinery from American manufacturers; and I wish in addition to state that the view which I presented was from the firm impression I have that there are certain articles of that machinery which have been perfected in Europe, and which have not been perfected in this country.

Mr. CALL. I only wish to say that this is at the request of the Louisiana planters, as represented by this paper; and furthermore, that it was done in view of an ascertained probability that the information of Mr. Wiley and his judgment upon the subject was prejudiced in favor of the foreign machinery instead of the American.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that if the Commissioner of Agriculture had the option to make purchase of the American or the European machinery it does not appear that he would absolutely adopt the American. Perhaps if there had been no previous opinion formed and expressed by the chemist of that department in reference to the question, an amendment of this kind would not have been necessary, but the chemist of that department, who will have the entire control and determination of what machinery shall be purchased, has already come to a conclusion, as announced by a letter which has been read by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to-day, and therefore, in order that he might not commit the blunder of going to Europe and purchasing machinery which was not as well adapted to these experiments, it becomes absolutely and essentially necessary to put in an amendment that will preclude him from it.

If the department had expressed no opinion on the subject; if it had come here uncommitted on this entire question, then perhaps this amendment would not have been necessary. But how are you to prevent the chemist who has charge of this matter from going to Europe and purchasing machinery there when he avows that he prefers its use and when by his familiarity with foreign countries it may become advisable for him to make another visit there? Under these circumstances I think it becomes especially necessary to put in an inhibition against the importation of this machinery for experimental purposes from abroad.

In reference to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] that the amendment was offered by my colleague and advocated by myself because we had some idea that the Democratic administration would naturally seek foreign markets to make purchases, I want to say to that Senator that it is to restrain a Republican, perhaps, that this becomes necessary. Mr. Wiley, I understand, is a Republican. He is the gentleman who suggested going abroad, and it is not the suggestion of a Democrat to prevent persons from going abroad, except to prevent a Republican who has avowed his purpose to go abroad to buy this machinery.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] stated some time ago that he had presented this amendment to the Committee on Agriculture and that the committee authorized him to report it favorably. I desire to call his attention to the fact that when the question of the amendment arose the Senator from Mississippi now addressing the Chair, who is a member of that committee, was not advised of it.

Mr. MILLER. I feel bound to say, as I recall the facts now, that I attempted to find the Senator from Mississippi in order to submit this amendment to him, but I failed to do so; and having secured a large majority of the committee for it, I reported it favorably to the Senate and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations. I exonerate the Senator from Mississippi from any fault.

Mr. GEORGE. From any complicity in it.

Mr. PLUMB. This proposition was a very simple one before the Committe on Appropriations and did not involve any question of protection or free trade. The committee believed on the testimony submitted by the Senator from Florida and other testimony before the committee, including the letters read by the Senator from Kentucky, that the only way to make perfectly sure of having a proper experiment made was to have it made with machinery which was constructed wholly by American mechanics. They do not yield in any degree to this talk about the superior excellence of the specialties in machinery that have been built by French mechanics or German mechanics for the purpose of the manufacture of sugar; but they believe with Mr. Gibbons, and there is no mistake about the fact. They believe that the experiment will be better conducted in every respect and more satisfactory with American machinery, and they desired simply to restrain a kind of mania that seems to exist on the part of some persons in the Agricultural Department to make purchases abroad. It is a part and parcel of that general feeling, I think, which characterizes too many of our American people who think everything that is foreign is a great deal better than the things made or produced at home—even the foreign fashions and habits and manners of speech and habits of thought, and things of that kind. Such things we want to keep, as far as possible, out of the official life of this Republic.

We believe that there are things which are unique in this experiment, which are entirely pertinent to the production of cane on American soil, which do not at all pertain to the production of the cane or of the beet abroad. The machinery which has been made so far in this country has accomplished a great deal better purpose than any made abroad. We believe that it will enable the Department of Agriculture to have under its hand all features and parts of this experiment, the getting of the machinery more certainly, the repairing of it in case of an emergency, the putting it together under the eye and under the hand of the skilled operatives who made it; and we do not believe than American mechanics are not perfectly competent for this work. We believe the Mr. Gibbons who has been named in this debate is a man who is perfectly competent to do all this work, and that his responsibility in the eye of the Senator from Delaware is better than any foreign responsibility can be in reference to all things which are to be determined in this case.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him if the intent and purpose of the committee was to make this experiment with the machine of Mr. Gibbons and no other, why not make the amendment specific and require the purchase of the machinery from Gibbons? Or, in other words, did the committee believe that the purchasing agent to be put in charge of this experiment was incompetent to judge of the character of the machinery to be used? It seems to me it is implied that he is incompetent or unworthy to be intrusted with the authority. If he is to be limited in the exercise of his judgment as to the character of the machinery to be purchased I would suggest that the amendment ought to be amended to carry out what I understand to be the views of the committee, so that the purchase of the machinery should be required to be made of the manufacturer indicated.

Mr. PLUMB. That remark or insinuation, if I may so call it, would apply to the Senators from Delaware, who offered this amendment and sent it to the committee. But in using Mr. Gibbons's name I did not use it by way of example. Mr. Gibbons is not the only manufacturer of machinery of this kind on American soil, but he is a person who has been vouched for by the Senators from Delaware, who has had some experience, as we know, and is at the head of a highly respectable and responsible manufacturing firm, and I will take his word as quickly as that of anybody else on this most important subject. If the Senator from Tennessee desires to specially decorate Mr. Gibbons in the way he suggests I do not know that I should have objection, though I think it would be wise to have the Commissioner of Agriculture have the discretion to purchase from any American manufacturer.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Commissioner is competent to decide what machinery he shall buy and from whom, why limit him to this or any other country? Why not allow him to look the world over for the machinery best adapted to the experiment to be made?

Mr. PLUMB. Because we believe that Congress has a will about this that is just as well informed and just as liable to be right as that of the Commissioner of Agriculture. We propose to have the will of Congress observed in this case rather than the will of the Commissioner of Agriculture, just as we limit in all the laws we pass the exercise of discretion on the part of the Executive.

For these reasons the committee believe this amendment should be adopted, and we believe that with this responsibility of the American manufacturers, with the entire machine made at one place, it will be more uniform, more liable to be adapted each part to the other parts and answer the general purpose better than it would otherwise be.

This is not in any special way a reflection on the Commissioner of Agriculture. At all events, I desire to say that I believe he is specially anxious that this experiment should be made, and that it should be successful, and that he will do his best to carry out the law of Congress; but unfortunately he is required to operate through subordinates, and we believe that one of those subordinates at least has an undue preference for foreign machinery, and that, as we think, without any solid foundation.

As far as I am concerned, speaking now as one who has been in a measure instrumental in having this appropriation made heretofore, and as one who has a perfect right to complain therefore of the manner in which the money has heretofore been spent and these experiments carried out, or rather not carried out, I am perfectly willing that this, which I hope will be the last experiment Congress will authorize at the public expense, will be carried out, and the result obtained will be better and more nearly what we desire than it will be if we go to buying the second-hand machinery of Germany or of France.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when the name of Mr. ALDRICH was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MAXEY (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], but as this amendment is of Democratic origin and it is not political at all, I will vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but according to an understanding I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am informed that this amendment was offered originally by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). I discover from the list of yeas and nays as taken that the question is somewhat of a party one, and as I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on party questions, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blair,	Dolph,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Call,	Frye,	Miller,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Chace,	Harrison,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—12.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Eustis,	Pugh,
Berry,	Coke,	Harris,	Walthall,
Butler,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Whitthorne.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Camden,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Vance,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
George,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,	Vest,
Gibson,	Kenna,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Gorman,	McPherson,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road;

A bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York;

A bill (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins;

A bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley;

A bill (H. R. 1678) for the relief of Henry N. Huggins;

A bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Fraser;

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to take up for consideration Senate bill 2172.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Oregon having this bill in charge if he is willing that it shall be informally laid aside until I can secure action on Order of Business 999, being the bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes. A similar bill has passed the House, as the Senator well remembers. At the last session a bill of this kind passed the House and one also passed the Senate, but they failed between the two Houses. It is important that before we adjourn the bill should be passed or some bill on the subject. As it is a bill of considerable length and will involve some controversy between the two Houses, I ask the Senator if he will not consent that it shall be taken up now in order that it may be disposed of at an early day?

Mr. DOLPH. If the bill taken up on my motion will remain the unfinished business and be by common consent laid aside informally while the other bill is considered, if it is not likely to take much time, as I reported both bills, I will consent.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yesterday Order of Business 641 was asked to be taken up here, and was passed over on an objection interposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I understood the President to say that after Senate bill 371 was disposed of this resolution would be properly before the Senate, and I think the RECORD will bear me out in the statement I now submit.

This is a resolution which provides for the consideration of executive business, so called, in open session, excepting only that which relates to treaties. The objection made could only pass this resolution over for one day, and I ask if it does not have priority to-day? If not, I shall then make my motion, as no other is pending as I understand, the Senator from Oregon having yielded to the Senator from Kansas, to take up Order of Business 641, the resolution in relation to the consideration of business in open session.

In making this motion I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that five months of time have passed since we began the consideration of a measure to decide whether this is a house of lords or a Senate of the United States republican in form. In five months there has been continual dodging of this question by men who are willing themselves even to toady to what they would call radicalism. I think that we ought to consider this question——

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire what is the motion before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Northern Pacific Railroad bill is before the Senate. The Senator from Virginia is in order. He has a right to submit his motion.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator is talking about another matter.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have not talked about this all the session. I will undertake to talk to it to this extent, that I am tired of hearing talk in the Senate on nothing but railroads. If there be no interests here but those that we call the Northern, Union, and Central Pacific Railroads' interests, then it is about time that the people of this country should understand that the United States Senate has nothing else to give its attention to.

I ask the Senate to do but one thing, and that is to vote on this proposition. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote, and I undertake to say here that it has never been denied on this floor before, and it is not denied now by Senators who are willing to vote on one side or the other, and let their votes go to the country.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but I mean to press it every day if I can do it, and every time I get an opportunity I intend to press this resolution in opposition to the Northern Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, or anything else, because it is the requirement of high duty to dispose of it.

It has been urged here that gentlemen want to speak. I understand that the gentlemen who want to speak upon the question are prepared to do so to-day. Let us have what they want to say on it addressed to the judgment of the Senate, and then let us vote. And why not? I may be permitted to say that I think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is ready to speak on this proposition to-day. If he is not, then I do not press it. If he is, I do.

Mr. MORRILL. In response to the Senator I will state that I have been ready ever since, or soon after, the speech of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on this subject. I think it is, however, too late to take up the question this evening, for the reason, as I understand, that there will be two or three other speeches at least, and perhaps half a dozen; and the matter can not be disposed of to-day.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator agree with me then to take it up to-morrow at 2 o'clock?

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I am concerned, I await the pleasure of the Senate. Whenever they take up the question, I shall be ready to meet it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me a moment?

This question concerning executive sessions has already been discussed in the Senate at considerable length in connection with the resolution offered by my colleague [Mr. PLATT]. At any rate he made the opening speech, one of ability and length, on the subject. He is absent and will be back in a few days. I know it is one of the things he had in mind when he went away, and he hoped it would not be taken up until he returned. I think the pending resolution on the subject is in his charge.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That puts me in a position which no Senator here would want to occupy. I offered this resolution, and when the colleague of the Senator from Connecticut offered his I deferred to him. I deferred also to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who offered a similar resolution. But I am obliged to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to this fact, that in five months neither of those resolutions has received anything but debate, and therefore I am almost obliged further to conclude that it is all that they will receive unless some one tries to press them upon the attention of the Senate.

I am ready again to defer; I am ready again to say to the Senator from Connecticut that if he knows his colleague will press this resolution within the next three days I will not insist upon my motion to take it up now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think nobody doubts the sincerity of my colleague in this matter after the able speech he delivered and with his well-known character, but as for promising in his behalf that he will reopen the debate in three days I can not do it. He is absent from town, and I do not know that he will be back in three days; he perhaps will be in five. I can promise nothing for him, except that he is entirely in earnest in this matter.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not doubt the sincerity of the Senator's colleague, I never have doubted it, but I do mean to say again that when a resolution is offered, and you hear nothing upon it but debate in three, four, or five months, it does not testify to the country that you are in earnest. That is what I mean to say. I think that it is proper for the Senate to pass on this resolution and let it be known whether we are going to have open executive sessions or whether we are not.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not press it this evening. There is no sort of doubt that the question will come up and be discussed and voted upon, and that at a very early day. It stands, as I understand by mutual agreement of both sides of the Chamber, that it will come up immediately after the railroad bills get through.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, "mutual" is a curious word in that connection. Where does the "mutual" come in? "Mutual agreement" between two political conferences—is that it? Shall I conjecture that three Senators representing a Republican party and three representing a Democratic party have made a mutual agreement that binds anybody but themselves. "A caucus" of each party, I hear some one say. I stand corrected. Instead of "conference" I ought to use the word "caucus;" but caucus has gotten to be a word that does not smell well in the public nostrils.

That is the situation, sir; and if it devolves upon me to tell it, I have told it, that two committees, one representing the Republican party and the other representing the Democratic party, have resolved that this resolution shall be taken up at their will and pleasure, mutually, as I understand it. I am insisting upon it as a resolution depending before the United States Senate and not before two committees of private conference or caucuses when those committees themselves have no regard for the obligation which they seem to have entered into, and I am obliged every day to notice that. Why, sir, I have been around the Capitol and heard as many as a quorum of a political organization here resolve upon pursuing a certain line of policy, and when I have come to the seat I occupy here I find one of them violated it himself and others voted with him until the majority of the party that made the obligation among themselves had to say that the man who violated the arrangement had a right to do so. I recognize no obligation to gentlemen who do not reciprocate.

I ask now, Mr. President, for the yeas and nays on this resolution. Take it up. If it be voted down, I will say to the Senate that I will not make another motion nor offer another word in respect to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves, pending the present bill, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 641, being the resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER April 12, 1886, in relation to the consideration of executive business in open session.

Mr. DOLPH. Is that motion in order as made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. After the Senate has voted to take up the Northern Pacific bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The yeas and nays are asked for on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], but as this is not a political question, I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the vote is announced I move, in accordance with what I understand to be parliamentary law, to have all Senators present and not voting recorded in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion is in order until the vote is announced.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It will be too late afterward. I ask that it be done now before the vote is announced.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Blair,	Coke,	George,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Frye,	Logan,	Van Wyck.

NAYS—34.

Allison,	Berry,	Cameron,	Colquitt,
Beck,	Brown,	Cockrell,	Cullom,

Dawes,	Hoar,	Payne,	Teller,
Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,	Vest,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Eustis,	Mahone,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Harris,	Miller,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Harrison,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sawyer,
Hawley,	Morrill,	Spooner,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Sabin.
Blackburn,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Call,	Hale,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vance,
Chace,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Oregon is willing to do so, I ask him to yield, having the Northern Pacific bill laid aside informally, that the bill to which I before alluded may be laid before the Senate for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to lay aside informally the pending bill with a view to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. HOAR. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 2299) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to go on with the bill which has been laid over so many times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate will be stated, which is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10 of the first section, after the word "main," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, except such of said lands as appertain to and are conterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

And to insert in lieu theorof:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished on the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. I called the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, when this bill was up before, to this question. I do not know whether he has considered it. I understand that a part of the Cascade branch has been built. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to say that he did not intend his amendment to reach any lands that were appurtenant to any part of the road that had been built, but he intended to limit it to that part of the branch road that had not been constructed. I do not know whether the amendment has been modified; but it seems to me that it is doubtful whether it does not cover the whole branch.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "on the date of the passage of this act," and inserting "the time required by the laws of incorporation and their amendments."

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire first, in view of the suggestion I acceded to a few days ago, to modify my amendment. The Senator from Indiana suggested a modification which I agreed to have incorporated in the amendment. I will modify my amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana, and then it will be open to amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What is the modification?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will prepare it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Nebraska desires to modify his amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir. The Senator from Indiana suggested that the amendment proposed by myself contemplated the absolute forfeiture of all lands from Wallula to Portland and then upon the Cascade branch of any lands adjoining a portion of the branch which was not finished. That was all I intended by the amendment. Though the amendment did not accomplish all that I wanted, yet that was all I proposed by it.

Now, in line 12, section 1, after the word Oregon, I propose to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

That leaves it an absolute forfeiture of all the lands of the Wallula branch and within the Cascade branch of all lands adjoining and conterminous with that part of the branch lines not finished at the time of the passage of the act. I propose to modify the amendment as I have suggested.

Mr. COCKRELL. I could not hear any of the suggestions. There was a parley over there which we could not hear in my neighborhood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to modify his amendment. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in line 12 of section 1, after the word "Oregon"——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Before that is read will the Chair be so kind as to state what print it is, because there is confusion here on account of different prints, some having one print and some having another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only say it is the last reprint of the bill which is being read by the Chief Clerk.

The amendment will be read, and in connection with it the words of the text.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in line 12 of the first section, after the word "Oregon," to insert the following words:

And also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. DOLPH. Now let the text of the bill be read as it would stand with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read as follows:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, and also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending this amendment, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed after the word "finished" to strike out the words "on the date of the passage of this act" and to insert in lieu thereof "at the time required in said act;" so as to read:

Constructed and completely finished at the time required in said act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to one point. Does not his amendment as now modified leave out these words which are to be found in the bill as reported from the committee commencing after the word "Oregon" in line 12, "except such of said lands as appertain to and are conterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains," and whether or not it is the intention of the Senator from Nebraska to leave out those words?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That clause is left out; but the same language is substantially inserted in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon desire that the amendment be read again?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to have the section read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Nebraska has modified his amendment, and it will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 12, section 1, after the word "Oregon," to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

So as to read:

Which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, and also all lands which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall have to get a copy of the amendment so that I can see whether my amendment will fit that kind of amendment, as the Senator has changed his entirely.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the language of his amendment. It would not apply to the whole road as the amendment now is.

Mr. COCKRELL. My amendment would have worked a forfeiture of all the lands along the entire route where the road had not been completed within the time prescribed in the act. That was the effect of the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. At what date was that?

Mr. COCKRELL. Some time in 1879.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senator, now that I am inquiring, whether that would not attempt to forfeit and resume possession of a large body of lands which have been at least allotted to the railroad company after inspection and acceptance of that road.

Mr. COCKRELL. That may have been; yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It would include a large amount that has been patented.

Mr. HAWLEY. Also an amount that has been patented.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. And sold to other parties.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to make the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska mean what I supposed he wanted, for he first offered what was called in the House the "Henley bill" as his amendment, and that amendment proposed just what I aim to make in this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. GEORGE. It is now nearly 5 o'clock and I would like to have the bill and amendments printed, and I wish to submit some remarks in favor of the proposition to forfeit all the land grants to this company that were not earned in July, 1879, the time fixed by its charter for the completion of the road. I move that the bill and amendments be printed and that then we go into executive session.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the printing ordered.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the bill as amended and as proposed to be amended be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the bill as amended, if it has been amended at all, has been printed.

Mr. GEORGE. And as proposed to be amended.

Mr. HARRISON. All that can be done as to that, I should think, would be to print the pending amendment separately.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. How we could print the bill with amendments incorporated that have not been adopted, I can not see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made if there is no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. As that means that we are not to vote on this amendment to-night, I appeal to the Senate to allow me to call up for passage a bill relative to the public building at Des Moines, in which case it is important that early action be had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has submitted a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment that I may secure the passage of House bill 5251?

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to know what is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senate to come to order. There is so much confusion that it is very difficult to hear. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] moved that the bill be printed with the amendments proposed. That order has been made without objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not object to it because I did not suppose that disposed of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not dispose of the bill. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] now moves to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. That he has a right to do.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Florida yielded to me.

Mr. CALL. I am willing to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa was about to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of another bill.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Northern Pacific bill is left as the unfinished business, being simply informally laid aside, I do not object.

Mr. ALLISON. If this bill takes five minutes I will not ask the further attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. DOLPH. I only desire that the unfinished business shall not be crowded out.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DES MOINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5251) making an appropriation for the repairs and enlargement of the post-office and court-house at Des Moines, Iowa, and fixing a limit therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. BUSH AND JAMES GRIGSBY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill No. 2953, for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] desires that the bill be printed and take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought that bill was laid on the table this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was, but it is on the desk of the presiding officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought it was laid on the table of the Senate. I do not object. I am told it is exactly like the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been compared. It will take its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I voted this afternoon for a bill that had never been referred to a committee; I voted with a large majority of the Senate; but I have since then been examining the bill and I wish now to enter a motion to reconsider. It is Senate bill 2578.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be read.

The SECRETARY. "A bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RANKIN.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to give notice that, if it be the pleasure of the Senate, I will call up to-morrow afternoon at half past 4 o'clock the message from the House advising the Senate of the death of Hon. JOSEPH RANKIN, late a member from Wisconsin.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill No. 68 as amended by the Senate and non-concurred in by the House, for the purpose of asking that the Senate insist on its amendment and appoint a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. COCKRELL.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CALL. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill in reference to the Northern Pacific Railroad lands being pending, the Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After sixteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 11, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate June 3, 1886.

ASSAYER OF MINT.

Posey S. Wilson, of Colorado, nominated to be assayer of the mint of the United States at Denver, in the State of Colorado.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 10, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. W. HADDAWAY, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of State, with an accompanying paper, in relation to the distribution of the fund appropriated by the act of April 20, 1882, for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the brig General Armstrong.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1886.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting correspondence and recommending legislation in the sundry civil appropriation bill excepting the War Department library from the distribution now imposed; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ANNIE M. COGSWELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact in the case of Annie M. Cogswell vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELLEN P. MALLOY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact in the case of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELLEN CORCORAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 1815) for the relief of Ellen Corcoran.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3, strike out "Fiftieth" and insert "Sixtieth."

The SPEAKER. This is a mere formal amendment correcting the number of the regiment. If there be no objection the amendment will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate; which were severally referred, as follows:

A bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1417) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1527) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1591) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward," approved February 14, 1885, so that the same shall apply to the United States Navy, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1664) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 1730) providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever, and of a method of preventing that disease by inoculation, and to obtain all information possible as to the cause and prevention of that disease—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1793) to confirm the homestead entry of John Waishkey, jr.—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 1813) to amend the laws relating to patents, trade-marks, and copyrights—to the Committee on Patents.

A bill (S. 1829) for the relief of the Greensburg Limestone Company and others—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 330) to remit the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning, and to refund the proceeds of the sale thereof to her owners, Edward D. Morris and C. Morris—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 457) for the repair of Fort Marion at Saint Augustine, Fla., and the inclosure of the grounds attached to said fort—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CASWELL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up at this time the question of order arising upon the objection made by the Delegate from the Territory of Utah to the report which I proposed to make upon Senate bill No. 10. The question is as to the competency of that gentleman, being a Delegate, to make the objection.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned day before yesterday there was pending a request made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] for leave on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report, to which the gentleman from Utah [Mr. CAINE] objected. The gentleman is not now in his seat, but he has advised the Chair that under the circumstances he would not insist upon his objection; and the Chair supposes he is authorized, therefore, to entertain the request, if there be no further objection, without deciding the question of order at this time.

There being no further objection,

Mr. OATES (on behalf of Mr. TUCKER) from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to polygamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BENNETT, on behalf of the minority of the committee, was granted leave to file the views of the minority on said bill.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUK. On the 30th day of March last I had occasion to make some remarks on the then pending appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department. In the course of those remarks, or at the conclusion, I used this language, after commenting on certain alleged abuses against the people of my district, while criticising the action of the First Assistant Postmaster-General. I said:

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I want to say in conclusion is that I do not know how this comes about, unless it be under the influence of a man who paid himself his salary as governor out of the children's school fund of the State two years after his term had expired and when he was a refugee in the swamps of the South.

After using these words, Mr. Speaker, and giving expression to this sentiment I was interrupted by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who became somewhat excited, as some members present at the time well remember, and several unpleasant, or at least uncomplimentary, remarks passed between us. I have been here nearly eight years and never had an unpleasant word with any member on the other side of the House, and I very much regretted this circumstance at the time.

It is not my purpose now to recall this affair for any other reason than to show that the implication of my remarks was founded upon substantial and uncontradictable truth.

In reply to my remarks my colleague [Mr. MCMILLIN] came forward and asked the question:

To whom does the gentleman refer?

Misunderstanding or misconstruing the rules of the House at that time, I declined to answer the question.

If I had understood the rule then as I do now, after conversing with parliamentarians around me, I should unhesitatingly have answered by giving him the name of ex-Governor Harris, the man who was governor of Tennessee when the war broke out. In reply to my colleague's interrogatory touching the person to whom I referred I answered:

You know just as well as anybody on earth who did it. I have the record, and if you will come around privately I will show it to you.

I then had the facts in my possession——

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee states a matter of privilege.

Mr. HOUK. If the gentleman will wait until I reach the point to which I wish to call attention, I think he will admit that it is a question of high privilege. I do not wish to be considered as an assassin of character, as it seems I have been characterized.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Tennessee has not as yet stated his whole case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that up to the present time the gentleman has not stated a matter of privilege.

Mr. HOUK. I was just coming to the point, Mr. Speaker.

Now, in reply to my implication against ex-Governor Harris, my colleague, Mr. MCMILLIN, as I have said, asked to whom I referred. I replied that I had the record, and if he would come around I would show it to him. I agree that so far it is not a matter of privilege. But my colleague responded:

I only insist that when a man goes to assassinate character—and this is unmitigated assassination—he should have the boldness to do it like a man.

Now, when a man's character is assailed by implication, or in any other manner, and I bring the record here, have I not a right to have it presented before the country in justification of my statement? But again I replied to my colleague in the following language:

I have the boldness to tell you and show you the facts if you will come to me privately, and the boldness to meet it in any other way.

I saw my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] on the floor, but did not hear his statement in reply. It seems he used this language:

Mr. RICHARDSON. As a Representative of the State of Tennessee I denounce the statement as false.

That is the ground on which I predicate my question of privilege. Now I remark again that anybody at all familiar with the history of Tennessee knows that I had reference to ex-Governor Harris in my remarks, who was governor of Tennessee when the war commenced.

Mr. HAMMOND. I insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Simply that the matter of controversy between the gentlemen, as to the truth of history, or as to certain transactions in that State, and the remarks made by each of them, were matters proper at the time, but which have long since passed. It seems to me that the gentleman does not seek now to protect himself, but simply to prove that his understanding of the history of that period was the correct one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in some doubt about this question. A few days ago the Chair had occasion to make a ruling upon a somewhat similar question; in fact very similar in some respects although quite different, the Chair thinks, in others. In this case it appears a statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, not a quotation or the repetition of some statement made by somebody else, adduced as evidence, but a personal statement of his own, was denounced as false upon the floor of the House.

In the case which was before the House a few mornings since a gentleman had cited certain evidence in support of a charge he had made, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] denounced that as a slander, but without imputing to the gentleman who had cited the evidence any personal misstatement. Here, as the Chair has already stated, it appears from what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] has just stated that the statement made by him on his own responsibility as a Representative on the floor was denounced as false, which the Chair is inclined to think, unless the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] can show some reason to the contrary——

Mr. HAMMOND. I will state what is the point I make. The Chair may have heard better than I did what was said. If the gentleman from Tennessee was charged with corruptly stating a falsehood I would waive the question of order; but if it was a mere statement that what he said was not true, that is a different proposition entirely. I could not hear precisely what the statement was; but if it was a remark that the statement was false, without charging the gentleman from Tennessee with any improper conduct as a Representative or as a gentleman, I do not think a question of privilege is presented although he made a statement which in itself was false. But I do not understand it goes beyond that.

The SPEAKER. There is so much noise on the floor that it is impossible to hear distinctly all that is said. But the Chair understood the remark read from the RECORD by the gentleman from Tennessee to be that the statement which he made was false. Will the gentleman read that again?

Mr. HOUK. I will again read it:

Mr. RICHARDSON. As a Representative of the State of Tennessee I denounce the statement as false.

The SPEAKER. If it was a statement the gentleman from Tennessee had made on his own authority——

Mr. HOUK. Yes; I made it upon my own responsibility, knowing that I was backed by the record.

The SPEAKER. And not a statement he had reported from somebody else, then it would appear a question of privilege is presented.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will not insist further.

Mr. HOUK. The implication of my remarks was that Mr. Harris had assumed to be governor, and paid himself, or caused himself to be paid, his salary out of the school fund of the children of the State two years after his term of office had expired and while he was a refugee in the South, "away down in Georgia." That was what was denounced by my colleague as false.

Now I hope the House will indulge me to state a few facts to show what the Bank of Tennessee was and what the school fund was; and I want clearly to show by subsequent receipts of Governor Harris that he did draw his salary two years after his term of office had expired, three years after he left the capital of the State, and two years after he had left the soil of Tennessee; and that not only was my statement true by implication, but I might have made it much stronger, and would have made it much stronger if I had understood the rules of the House at the time, or had not misconstrued them at the time.

Let us see how the facts stand and whether I am an assassin of character or guilty of making false statements before the House, as was charged by my colleague. In order to present the case just as it is, it will be necessary for me to submit some dates and figures, which I shall take occasion to do in a moment.

What are the known, notorious, and recorded facts in relation to the school fund of Tennessee? I ask gentlemen to give me their attention on this subject, because I do not want to go to the world branded as a liar among my friends in the House of Representatives.

On the 1st of January, 1862, the assets of the Bank of Tennessee, as shown by official reports of that date, amounted to $11,632,037.23. In February following, or six weeks after this last showing was made, these assets were all taken and carried away by Isham G. Harris, then governor of Tennessee, and his portable State government. They were transported by rail, by boat, by dray, by cart, and in every other conceivable way. The coin, books, papers, bonds, bank notes were all placed in strong boxes. The coin, amounting to $720,000, as the figures here show, was placed in kegs.

In April, 1865, these assets, or what was left of them, were captured by a detachment of Federal troops under General Upton near Buzzard Roost, in Georgia. This remnant of the school fund thus captured by the Federal Army—I have the official statement here to show it—was taken to Augusta, Ga., by the Federal troops. Soon afterward it was taken to the State of Tennessee under a military escort and turned over to Governor Brownlow, then governor of the State, and the Legislature appointed a committee to examine it and it was counted. Out of all the assets, the $11,000,000, taken away there were about $4,000,000 of one character and another of assets found left in these boxes; and out of $720,000 in coin taken away there was found left about $400,000 in coin in these boxes.

Mark you, when they took these funds from Nashville they were put in boxes and kegs and sealed up. The committee, whose report I hold in my hand but will not take time to read, when it came to count the boxes and kegs found they had been indiscriminately broken open. In these boxes and kegs were found documents which, when I read some of them, will, I think, clearly show all that my implication implied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask what became of this money—the difference between $720,000 in coin and $400,000 in coin? Where is it? I only made reference to two receipts; but there were a number of receipts from different gentlemen who occupy various high positions in this country to-day and who participated in dissipating and carrying away the difference between $400,000 and $720,000 in coin.

I ask gentlemen to give me their attention, for I will not occupy the floor very long, and they will see whether I have assassinated anybody's character or not. They will see whether I have made any false statement or not. They will see whether I have confined myself to the limits of the record or drawn upon my imagination and gone outside of the record.

I wish to say right here frankly that while I saw the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], with his rainbow form, on his feet gesticulating I did not hear and never knew what he said until I read it next morning in the RECORD, or I would have replied to it at once. But it is easy for the unskillful, the inexperienced, and especially the young to fall into mistakes about historical facts. I spoke advisedly. I spoke from the record. I knew what I was talking about. I now read this receipt from the senate journal of the State of Tennessee. The Legislature that investigated this whole school fund question placed the reponsibility where it belonged and showed what became of this money. I read from the journal of the Legislature this receipt, and I call particular attention to it:

GREENSBORO', Ga., April 21, 1865.

Mark you, Governor Harris had been elected governor on the first Thursday of August, 1861. Old Bob Caruthers had been elected governor on the first Thursday of August, 1863, as the rebel successor of Harris. Andrew Johnson had been appointed military governor. He had reconstructed the State. Brownlow had been elected. A loyal Legislature was in session, recognized by everybody everywhere as the government of the State. Yet away down South in Georgia on the 21st of April, 1865, twenty-one days after Brownlow had been inaugurated and after this loyal Legislature was in session, Isham G. Harris says:

Received of Bank of Tennessee $750 in gold—

He did not take the sort of money which was paid to the "boys" who marched in the mud—

Seven hundred and fifty dollars in gold, in full of one quarter's salary as governor of Tennessee.

[Laughter.]

Who has lied about this matter? Whose name is attached to this receipt? Brownlow's? He was the only governor. No; not Brownlow. Well, Andrew Johnson's? His time was just out as military governor. No; the receipt does not bear the name of Andrew Johnson. Well, there is Bob Caruthers. Has he crept in and been inaugurated? Is he drawing this salary? No; he is at home. Whose name is attached to this receipt?

I. G. Harris, governor, &c.—

[Laughter.]

Now, I do not want to do any injustice—

Per Leon Trousdale, colonel and aid-de-camp.
This receipt to be canceled by Governor Harris's own receipt in the hands of Mr. T. D. Flippin for same amount.

Now, do you not think he drew his salary for the time he was out of office? It seems to me he did; and it seems to me I did not lie when I said so.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is only for information, as I want to get at the facts. What period of time does that receipt cover? For what quarter is it?

Mr. HOUK. Presumably the quarter ending May 1, 1865, as will be shown by a receipt I shall read in a moment.

Mr. TAULBEE. Have you any evidence except the simple presumption?

Mr. HOUK. Yes; the evidence of this record. You can have it to read it through if you wish. Here is the entire history of the whole transaction, from A to Z, showing what became of all this money. [Exhibiting the journal of the senate of the adjourned session of the Legislature of Tennessee for the year 1865.] Several gentlemen had a finger in the pie.

Mr. TAULBEE. I only wanted to get at the facts.

Mr. HOUK. Now, Mr. Speaker, we shall see more about this matter in a moment. As I have already suggested, Governor Harris could not have considered himself at that time governor of Tennessee on any legal presumption whatever. He had left the capital in February, 1862. He had taken those assets with him. He had peregrinated over the country, and had got by this time away down to Greensborough, Ga. The State government of Tennessee had been in the hands of other parties from early in 1862. Yet we find him drawing $750 in gold coin out of the children's school fund as his salary.

But what else? Now, Mr. Speaker, I read another receipt. This time Mr. Harris signs it himself, and the receipt says definitely for what period the payment was intended; and by implication it says very clearly that the other receipt was intended for the quarter ending the 1st of May. Here is this second receipt:

Received of Joel A. Battle, treasurer of Tennessee, $750 in gold coin, which is in full of my salary as governor of Tennessee, for the quarter ending the 1st of February, 1865.

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

GREENSBOROUGH, GA., March 17, 1865.

I say, then, that as this receipt says on its face that it covered the quarter ending February 1, 1865, it is fair to presume that the other receipt covered the quarter ending May 1, 1865.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look this matter squarely in the face. Let there be no dodging about it. Let us all stand up to the square record and the truth. Ex-Governor Harris claims to be a man of great courage; I have no doubt that he is. He ought to have courage enough to go before the people of Tennessee and explain why he paid himself in gold coin out of the children's school fund while he paid the poor confederate soldiers $17 a month in confederate trash. I wish to ask in this connection, am I an assassin of character? Have I assassinated anybody's reputation? Have I done any man wrong? Was my language even one-hundredth part as strong as I might have made it, and then verified it by the record? Have I been guilty of false statements? If the character of Governor Harris has been hurt, Mr. Speaker, it is not my fault; I did not do it. If his character has been assassinated it is a clear case of suicide, for he did it himself. I only alluded to historical facts.

But in further confirmation of all that my remarks imply, I ask permission to read some good Democratic testimony. Hon. John M. Fleming, by far the ablest man the Democrats have had in Tennessee since the war, thus testifies to the truth of all I have charged against Governor Harris. Let me read what he said on the subject of Harris and the school fund. Colonel Fleming was at this time editor-in-chief of the Knoxville Press and Herald, the leading Democratic paper of East Tennsesee. In 1872, referring to this subject, he said:

We are not without some interesting memoranda, however, which in course of time returned to tell their story of our wandering "State government." Among the relics recovered from the débris of the fugitive government were the "assets of the Bank of Tennessee," which seem to have been in the "ark" of support, if not of safety, in the wilderness. Among the documents found among the returned "assets" of the bank were some very curious papers. As specimens we will instance one or two. This queer-reading paper will no doubt be read with curious interest:

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my colleague give the date of that?

Mr. HOUK. That was in 1872. I cut it out from a paper of that date. It was in 1872, when Governor Harris came to tell the people of East Tennessee how to vote.

Colonel Fleming in this article prints the receipts which I have already read, and continues as follows:

The language and dates of these documents demand attention. Judge Caruthers was "elected" governor in August, 1863, yet as late as April 21, 1865, we find him still receipting, "away down in Georgia," for "gold coin" as his salary as governor of Tennessee—more than three years after he left the capital of the State, and nearly two years after he had left the soil of Tennessee! The State of Tennessee was then entirely in the possession of the National Government, and had been for many months. Andrew Johnson, having provided for the redemption of civil government in Tennessee, had been elected Vice-President of the United States. Governor Brownlow had been duly installed, and was recognized governor of the State, with his office at the capital. President Lincoln had been assassinated, and Andrew Johnson was President. General Lee had surrendered, and the armies of the confederacy were dissolving forever. All pretense even of a government of Tennessee outside of its limits had been abandoned. The rebellion was overthrown, and all pretended authorities resting upon military power had perished.

The war-worn confederate soldiers of Tennessee, paroled by the conquerors, ragged, foot-sore, and dispirited, were wending their weary ways, as best they could, to find again some rest and consolation in their homes, made desolate by the blasts of war. They were returning with spirits broken, hopes crushed, without money or scrip for father, mother, sister, wife, or child, save a mass of confederate trash that was not worth the carrying. What a consolation it would have been for these brave, but defeated, disbanded, and impoverished soldiers, as they contemplated the ruin of their households and felt the sore extremity of their own disaster, could they have known that Isham G. Harris, "governor of Tennessee," was, on the 21st day of April, 1865, drawing his quarterly installment of $750, in gold coin, from the money that had belonged to the people of Tennessee "before the war broke out!"

Now, if Mr. Johnson had been "military governor" of Tennessee and Governor Brownlow was then the regular civil governor of Tennessee, drawing his salary as such, will Governor Harris explain to the people what kind of governor he was and what executive service he had been rendering the people of the State when he drew his salary in gold coin at Greensborough, Ga., on the 21st of April, 1865? And will he tell the confederate soldier who came home penniless, who had been paid his $17 per month in confederate trash, how it happened that the same kind of "money" that was palmed off on the soldier was not good enough for the official traveler in high life, who had been adorning his name with the very imposing suffix of "governor of Tennessee" for nearly two years after his term had expired, and that, too, "away down in Georgia?"

[Laughter.]

Now, I desire to read from another good Democratic authority, Col. A. S. Colyar. You gentlemen know him. He is a good Democrat, at present editor of the Nashville Union, the leading Democratic paper in the State of Tennessee. In a speech at Murfreesborough in 1872, as reported in the Nashville Banner, another good Democratic paper, Colonel Colyar replied to a charge made by Governor Harris, who was present and participating in the discussion, that Andrew Johnson, when military governor of Tennessee, levied assessments upon the people without due process of law, and made them pay those assessments for certain specific purposes. Mr. Colyar said:

Mr. Johnson was a military governor—not a civil governor under the oath of office—that, right or wrong, such contribution had been collected among all people in time of war, while the war was actually going on, and all the books on war justified it, that as war meant to conquer by exhaustion, it was worse than nonsense to deny the right as a war measure, but that Governor Harris was the last man in the world to make this question, and that he proposed to take him as a subject and illustrate what he meant, though the points were not at all parallel; that Governor Harris himself in 1861, while governor, under an oath to support the constitution, and only in anticipation of war, caused what was called a military board to take, and which was taken by his orders, without due process of law, in the month of May, 1861, while the State was still in the Union, from the Bank of Tennessee and out of the sacred school fund, secured by the constitution to the children of the State forever, $382,913; that without due process of law he took in June, of this fund, $767,744; that without process of law he took in the month of July, $1,649,213; August, without due process of law, $973,449; in September, without due process of law, $334,641; in October, without due process of law, he took from the school fund $208,143; in November he took, without due process of law, $130,939; in December, $113,751, making in all of this fund taken without due process of law, $4,550,793.

Governor Harris not only for war purposes, and without due process of law, took this large sum from the children of the State, but he went to the Planters' Bank and told the officers of that bank that he must have $500,000, and that he was backed with the military and that they must furnish the money; and under a positive threat of taking by force he got, without due process of law, from this bank $500,000; and then he went to the Union Bank, and under a positive threat to take by force, he got $500,000. Turning to the governor, Colonel Colyar said: "Sir, if Johnson ought to be damned forever for taking money without due process of law, don't you think you ought to go to hell for at least a thousand years?"

Another Democratic authority, if you please, Mr. Speaker.

A reporter of the speeches of Hon. Horace Maynard, General Cheatham, and President Johnson, at Tullahoma, November 1, 1872, thus reports that portion of Mr. Johnson's speech referring to King Harris:

Mr. Johnson was exceedingly severe on Isham G. Harris, saying that he had peregrinated through the South with our State treasury, where he had "cracked the nut and took out the kernel, returning us the hull and other trash." He said he had borrowed $20,000 each from the Union and the Planters' Banks, for which he gave his individual notes and paid them after he became President, which money was used for the relief of the destitute. He remarked in a very sarcastic way that he had not robbed banks, as had been done by some who were now pursuing him with so much vindictiveness. One and a half millions of the school fund had been taken away. At the beginning of the war the assets of the Bank of Tennessee were worth ten millions, and when the war closed $400,000 had been returned. He said he had been accused of seeking to array the rich against the poor, but a confederate congress had been guilty of this when an act was passed exempting every man from military service who owned as many as twenty negroes. He explained the Mrs. Surratt affair to his own satisfaction, if not to the satisfaction of his hearers, and retorted on Harris for permitting men to be hung and imprisoned in East Tennessee upon a mere suspicion of having been engaged in bridge-burning. His [Johnson's] nephew had been arrested and imprisoned, being placed in irons at Greeneville, and had been forced to hang Henchie and Fry with his own hands and then to take a spade and bury them. He was particularly severe and truly eloquent on this point.

In 1872, after King Harris was deposed and was no longer king de facto anywhere on the earth, he came to East Tennessee to instruct his former true and loyal subjects how to vote, how to protect themselves against tyranny and oppression. He made a speech at Morristown, and was met there by Col. John Baxter—and the published report of that portion of Colonel Baxter's speech, relating to the acts and doings of King Harris, while he reigned, is as follows:

"In beginning his reply, Mr. Baxter said he did not appear as Mr. Johnson's champion or at his request. He came to answer Harris as a citizen and spoke only for himself. No one else was responsible for his sentiments.

"He said Harris had severely arraigned Johnson for the hanging of Mrs. Surratt. That was an act committed in a time of intense public excitement. The loyal people were maddened and demanded it. He had always thought it wrong, but Johnson's offense had in palliation many circumstances, and he did it in defense of the nation's life. But who arraigns Johnson for it? Isham G. Harris! By what right? Baxter then eloquently referred to the situation in Tennessee in 1861. Harris, as governor, then was sworn to support the State and Federal Constitutions. But he violated it not only in the particular charged upon Johnson, but in toto. Harris says neither he nor Johnson could lead the people by the nose. Yes; and Harris knew that in 1861. So he organized an army and drove them. How did he do it? In that year we voted 61,000 against separation. Harris then convened his legislature to force us out. He made a military treaty with the confederacy and transferred Tennessee to it. Then he armed fifty-five thousand soldiers, disarmed the people, and then again submitted the secession question to us. With his soldiers he drove us into rebellion.

"In 1861 I spoke here with Harris. I advised you against secession; he urged you to it. Andrew Johnson advised you against it, and if you had obeyed him you would be better off."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish in conclusion to show that ex-Governor Harris not only held on and claimed to be governor of Tennessee three years after he had fled from its capital, but that Andrew Johnson had been appointed and had taken charge of the government of Tennessee, and taken all the necessary steps to reconstruct and bring it back into its harmonious relations with the Union, but Judge Caruthers, as has been already shown in the Democratic editorial by Mr. Fleming, had been elected to succeed Isham G. Harris, though not inaugurated, because the Federals held possession of the State; and that Brownlow had been elected and inaugurated with a loyal Legislature, which was in session in Nashville at the very time ex-Governor Harris was drawing his salary from the school fund of the children of the State. And when this fund was captured in Georgia the chivalrous governor of Tennessee, who had promised his followers "to die in the last ditch," ingloriously fled from the country.

Mr. Speaker, what I have said has not been said in malice toward anybody, but as soon as I saw what appeared in the RECORD I determined that I would not submit to be branded as a falsifier or as one who made false statements on this floor, knowing, as I did, that I had a mountain of proof behind me. Why, sir, I could have accumulated proof until it would have filled as many pages of the RECORD as the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] filled with his celebrated speech here the other night on Secretary Stanton. [Laughter.] There is no end of testimony lying around loose everywhere in Tennessee in regard to the course of Governor Harris in holding over, traveling around, having a government on wheels, paying himself out of the children's school fund, in gold coin, three years after he had left the capital of the State, two years after he had left the State, and within a few weeks of two years after his term had expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. After the House has so patiently listened to the gentleman from Tennessee I ask also its indulgence for a few moments. And I desire to say I shall not be at all unparliamentary, if I can control myself, and I think I can, in any effort to reply to what has just been stated.

On the 30th of March, when the Post-Office bill was under discussion——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not object to my being heard for a few moments after we have listened so patiently to the gentleman from Tennessee. I will not inflict a long speech on the House or trespass on the rules.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If it had not been my uniform practice in these matters, I should not object at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I trust the gentleman will not object after we have listened to the gentlemen from Tennessee without attempting to interrupt him.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that this a matter affecting a Senator in the other wing of the Capitol. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and allow my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON], to whose remarks exception was taken by the gentleman from Tennessee, to be heard.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will not insist on my objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. On the 30th March, under pretense of discussing the question then under consideration, my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] made an assault first on the First Assistant Postmaster-General and then on the senior Senator from the State of Tennessee. I did make a reply to the gentleman on that occasion. I do not agree that it went into the RECORD just as I made it. But it is there; and if I used on the spur of the moment language that was unparliamentary it would be nothing but right if the House should say that I should now retract that language. But the issue made between us stands. The question was whether what the gentleman stated was true and correct or not. I endeavored to say it was not true, and this I now repeat.

Now, sir, after the gentleman had in the first place made an assault upon the First Assistant Postmaster-General by name, he also made an assault upon the senior Senator from Tennessee. And here is the charge he made. I have it clipped from the RECORD, and will read what he said on that occasion, using his exact language:

But that which I desire to discuss more particularly is the Post-Office Department. If it had been predetermined, if the President and his Cabinet had met in council and determined to inflict punishment upon the people of my district, they could not have more completely succeeded than they have under the administration of the postal service in that district for the last twelve months. We never knew but one time before what it was to be persecuted. We had that experience only once, and that was in the days when men were robbed, arrested, imprisoned, and mobbed or hung for opinion's sake. Since this administration came into power it has been a perfect persecution from the very beginning, and I want to call attention to one or two facts, and before I begin I send to the Clerk's desk to have read a letter which I addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster-General on yesterday; and afterward I will explain what it is.

The Clerk proceeded to read this letter from the gentleman from Tennessee to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, in which he is charged with having removed the post-office from Trundle's Cross Roads, one mile and a half out of town, into the country. I do not read this letter, as it contains language hardly becoming a member of this House in addressing an official communication upon public business to the head of a Department. I say that, nothwithstanding the gentleman assumes to have a great deal of experience when he undertakes to lecture some of his colleagues on this floor. I quote again further from the gentleman's remarks:

The First Assistant Postmaster-General has removed the post-office out a mile and a half into a remote corner of the district, over on Pine Ridge. He failed to find a Democrat there, and he had to take a Mugwump.

That is what I stated was not true.

Mr. HOUK. Does the gentleman say that when he said my statement was false he had reference to that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I had reference to both, and I will show it before I am through. He said further:

I want to bring this question before the American people, whether or not men can be persecuted through the officials of this country; whether communities can be persecuted in that way; whether a people must be deprived of their mail or be caused to go clear out of the town and made to travel a mile and a half away from the center of the population for the mail which ought to be carried to their doors as it had been for the last seventy-five years.

Mr. HOUK. I state again that it was removed, and after I addressed the First Assistant Postmaster-General about it he wrote me a letter promising to have the matter investigated and the office removed back to the place which would be the most convenient for the people, but it has not been done until this good day, according to my correspondence.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point I make, Mr. Speaker, is that the gentleman said that the post-office had been removed by the Department. Now, I assert the fact, and I assert that the gentleman knows the fact, that it has not been removed by the Department. Nor, by the gentleman's own admission, has any "Mugwump" postmaster been appointed. If the location of the office has been changed in any way, it was done by the postmaster after he was appointed—this postmaster who is vouched for by the gentleman from Tennessee himself as "a Republican, and a good man."

Mr. HOUK. But a Mugwump.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are not those two terms, "Republican" and "Mugwump" inconsistent with each other?

Mr. HOUK. No.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then hereafter I will designate the gentleman the distinguished Mugwump from the second district of Tennessee.

Mr. HOUK. That would be a misnomer as to me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will now read the letter of the First Assistant Postmaster-General:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of this date, requesting information as to appointment of postmaster and removal of post-office at Trundle's Cross Roads, Sevier County, Tennessee.

In reply I beg to state that on January 12, 1886, Daniel R. Pitner was appointed at that place. I have given him no authority to remove the office from the village, and steps will at once be taken to secure its location at the point most convenient to its patrons.

Replying further to your communication, permit me to say that the only information I have as to the politics of Mr. Pitner, the recent appointee, is contained in a letter from Hon. L. C. HOUK, dated January 18, 1886, touching the above-named office, in which, after referring to this appointment, he says: "Nor is complaint made against the appointee, who is also, like his predecessor, a Republican and a good man."

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours,

A. E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives.

That is the testimony of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] himself as to the character of this postmaster.

Mr. HOUK. And I still bear it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Thus, sir, the whole fabric so brazenly built up before the House by the gentleman falls. The First Assistant Postmaster-General has given no order for the removal of the office, as charged, to persecute the paper there; and in order to complete the persecution has not appointed a "Mugwump" as postmaster, but to copy the exact language of the gentleman, used by him in a letter to the Department, written a little more than sixty days before his harangue in the House, "The appointee was a Republican, and a good man."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does all this tend to show that Mr. Harris did not draw that money?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I will come right to that.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish the gentleman from Tennessee would permit me to ask him what difference there is, in substance, between an order of the First Assistant Postmaster-General directing the removal of a post-office to a particular place, and his permitting it to remain there after it has been removed; in either case does he not indorse the removal?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; he had no notice of the removal until he was informed of it, when he said he would take steps to have the matter investigated; that is, the action of this "Republican and good man," and I presume it was done.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My reason for making that inquiry was because things of that kind have happened in my part of the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not heard from the Post-Office Department on this subject since March 31. I do not know whether it has been done or not.

Mr. HOUK. I have information from responsible parties who live right there and who know all about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems that the local information of my colleague is not very reliable.

Having totally destroyed this fancy sketch of the gentleman in relation to Trundle's Cross Roads and the post-office there, it will take but one moment to dispel the illusion in the gentleman's mind in reference to the post-office at the other "village" in his district and county, where his people have been persecuted and outraged by the Department, and all upon the advice of the senior Senator from Tennessee.

I again quote his words from the RECORD:

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOUK. I move to strike out the line just read. I want to get all these facts before this House and before the American people. There is another village in my district and in my own county which does a large business. There are three or perhaps four stores in the village, and from time immemorial the post-office has been there, but this administration has picked it up and carried it over a creek into a kind of swampy place where you have to go through a laurel thicket to get at it. The post-office now is kept in the house of a private citizen who is a millwright and is usually away from home at work during the day, so that there is nobody to hand out the mail except his children or his wife. In both these cases to which I have called attention the postmasters were men of high character. The postmaster at Trundle's Cross Roads is the peer of any man in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet for character. [Great laughter.] I do not say that for the purpose of reflecting upon anybody. I state it as a fact, because he is the peer of any man on this floor or elsewhere in character, standing, and business capacity. I suppose that is the reason they removed him—because of his respectability.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I want to say in conclusion is that I do not know how this comes about, unless it be under the influence of a man who paid himself his salary as governor out of the children's school fund of the State two years after his term had expired and when he was a refugee in the swamps of the South.

The charge here is that the post-office at Thorn Grove, Knox County, had been by the Department removed in order to persecute the people there, and that all of this came about "under the influence of a man who paid himself his salary as governor out of the children's school fund of the State two years after his term expired and when he was a refugee in the swamps of the South."

The gentleman here brings in this affair, sir, in order to get to make an attack upon the senior Senator from Tennessee. I have only to state the facts to show how entirely unfounded were the charges of the gentleman. The office at Thorn Grove was not removed and the new postmaster was not appointed upon the recommendation or application in any way of Senator HARRIS.

Mr. HOUK. Did I say he was?

Mr. RICHARDSON. You said it was done under the influence of a man who took the State's school fund.

Mr. HOUK. I said I did not know under what influence it was done unless under his influence.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, if that is not saying it was done by him, what did you mean to say?

Mr. HOUK. He may not have done it directly——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I understand you to withdraw that insinuation as to the senior Senator from our State being responsible.

Mr. HOUK. I withdraw it just this far. He may not have done it directly; but there are in my community a few little men who go round seeing how much devilment they can do against Republicans.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the senior Senator has written no line nor uttered a word in reference to that office. Whatever has been done there was done wholly upon the application of the junior Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Jackson, as the papers on file in the Department show, and to which the gentleman has access at all times. So all these charges of the gentleman, so rashly made, are shown to be utterly groundless and unsustained by truth and the facts of the case, and the assault made upon the character of Senator HARRIS is shown to be unwarranted and absolutely gratuitous.

It must be apparent to this House that the gentleman has a horror of some kind come over him when he permits his mind to recur to the senior Senator from Tennessee. And for him to speak of that gentleman is for him to turn loose all holds and give free utterance to his wildest imaginations. When he speaks of him he reminds one of what the author of Flush Times in Alabama and Mississippi says of one of his lawyer characters when that personage attempted to make a speech in defense of his client. He said of him, "He just shined his eyes, threw up his arms, twirled his tongue, opened his mouth, and left the consequences to Heaven."

Why is this fierce and bitter attack made upon Senator HARRIS by the gentleman? Why drag into the debate upon the Post-Office appropriation bill in this House Senator HARRIS's dealings with the so-called school fund of Tennessee? The gentleman's attack makes it necessary that the facts be given to the country.

I ask the attention of the House to the facts, as I shall state them very briefly; and the records show them to be just as I give them. I do not controvert the record produced by my colleague. He has referred to the journal of the Legislature of Tennessee. Sir, these things have all been fought over in Tennessee for the last twenty years.

Prior to the late war the State of Tennessee had acquired a considerable school fund. The State had also chartered a bank called the Bank of Tennessee. The State owned the stock of the bank, and by law it was the fiscal agent of the State. The school fund was long before the war made a part of the capital stock of the Bank of Tennessee. This was the condition of the school fund of Tennessee when the war began. Now, when Nashville was about to be surrendered to the Union forces, in 1862, the Bank of Tennessee, with all its assets, cash, archives, &c., was removed South and kept within the lines of the confederacy.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before my colleague departs from that matter, I desire to ask him whether it is not a fact that while this Bank of Tennessee existed it was the fiscal agent of the State; and the salaries of State officers and other expenditures of the State were paid out by that bank upon warrants issued for the purpose, as was done in this case?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly. The officers of the State were paid by the cashier of the Bank of Tennessee upon drafts drawn by the comptroller, indorsed by the treasurer.

During the remainder of the war the bank was changed about from place to place as the exigencies of war made it necessary in order to keep the same out of the way of the Federal armies. The senior Senator, who seems to be the especial object of the gentleman's hate and malevolence, was the governor of the State of Tennessee. His only connection with that bank was, as governor it was his duty under the law to nominate the board of directors who were to be confirmed by the State senate. He was governor when the war began in 1861, and had been for two terms. He remained governor during the whole war, and as such was entitled to his compensation under the law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact——

Mr. HOUK. Was he re-elected at the end of his term?

Mr. McMILLIN. I was about to call my colleague's attention to the fact that under the constitution of our State the governor "holds office until his successor is duly elected and qualified."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUK. His successor, Governor Brownlow, had been elected and was in office. The gentleman can not get out of it in that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The senior Senator from our State was first elected governor in 1857; again in August, 1859; and again in August, 1861.

Mr. HOUK. When was Brownlow elected?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He never was elected until after the war.

Mr. HOUK rose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Wait a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee can not be interrupted except with his consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will show in a moment that the gentleman has misread our history; he is not familiar with it. I will not attribute it to inexperience, however.

Mr. HOUK. I have too much experience to try to crawl out of so little a hole as you are trying to crawl out of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is entitled to proceed without interruption unless he yields.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By the constitution of Tennessee her governor holds his office until his successor is duly elected and qualified. I refer to Article III, section 4, of the constitution, which I will read.

Mr. HOUK. I beg to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOUK. The gentleman says that the constitution of Tennessee provides that the governor shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified. Now, on the 21st of April, 1865, was not Governor Brownlow in office as governor? Had he not been elected in March previous and inaugurated on the 1st of April? Was not the Legislature then in session at the capital of Tennessee when Mr. Harris drew this last quarter's salary in gold?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman knows very well that that whole authority was disputed, and if the confederacy had succeeded Mr. Brownlow's election would have been null and void.

Mr. HOUK. Certainly; and so would the whole authority of the United States. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAYDEN. If the confederacy had succeeded—well, that is a pretty big if. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no use to fight the war over here to-day. I will not be dragged into that kind of debate. I have the record here, and it shows that the senior Senator of the State of Tennessee did his duty.

Mr. HOUK. Was it his duty, after his successor was elected, inaugurated, and qualified, and with the Legislature of Tennessee in session, to take his pay out of the fund which belonged to the school children of that State?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have denied that already.

Mr. HOUK. But you have not shown anything to disprove it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will if you will only keep your seat.

Mr. HOUK. You say you will, but you never come up to time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now to proceed. The governor of the State of Tennessee held his office until his successor was elected and qualified. Now, then, while it is true that a distinguished citizen of the State was, at an election held in August, 1863, elected to succeed Senator HARRIS as governor, yet as a fact he was never inducted into the office and was never qualified to hold it, and never assumed to do so. This gentleman was the Hon. Robert L. Caruthers, who is now dead. The Federal armies had possession of the capital of the State, and indeed of nearly all its territory, the Legislature could not assemble at the capital, and thus Mr. Caruthers never entered upon the duties of governor to which he had been elected. Thus it was that Governor Harris, under the constitution and laws of Tennessee, held over as governor, his successor not having been duly qualified to act as such, as provided.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not decline to yield the floor for a question, as I hold the floor myself by the courtesy of the House.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Does the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Does the gentleman hold that Governor Harris, having sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and in a time of flagrant war his term of service having run out, and when he endeavored to destroy [cries of "Oh!"]—yes, when he was endeavoring to destroy the Government of the United States—does the gentleman say that Governor Harris was still the legal governor of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not going into the discussion of war questions. So far as I am concerned I shall not be in favor of having them inflicted upon this House. They are not necessary at all to the issue before us.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I want to know from you whether you insist that when Governor Harris's term had expired and when he was engaged in a rebellion against the Government he was still the legal governor of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I do say that he was governor of the State of Tennessee, and under the confederate law the governor of that State de jure as well as de facto.

Mr. PETTIBONE. After Governor Brownlow had been elected and inaugurated and recognized by the United States Government, do you still insist that Governor Harris was the legal governor of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, I do.

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is all we want to know then.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because he was the governor of Tennessee, elected by the people of Tennessee, receiving five times as many votes as Governor Brownlow ever received as a candidate for governor. Not only that, he was exercising all the functions of the office. The confederacy had not collapsed, but still existed.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes; but he was exercising those functions in the State of Georgia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Caruthers did not claim to be governor, as I have stated, and exercised no function of that office, and drew no salary from the State.

The only funds the State of Tennessee had and owned, including taxes, &c., were the assets of the Bank of Tennessee, and out of these assets Governor Harris was paid his constitutional salary as governor for a portion of the time he was entitled thereto, as shown by the receipts which the gentleman has read. This he had the absolute and unqualified right to do. He drew it from the Bank of Tennessee and gave his receipt therefor. There was no secrecy or concealment about the transaction. The receipts read are public records of the State. The money paid him was not specially a school fund, but, as I have shown, was assets of the Bank of Tennessee, and the bank was the only source from which the officers of the State could draw their compensation.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the whole story plainly stated, and completely answers the unjust insinuations and unwarranted innuendos so gratuitously made by the gentleman when he said, on March 30, on this floor, that "acts had been perpetrated against a community" in his district which he characterized "as outrageous and infamous," which he could not account for, except "that these acts were done under the influence of a man who was paid his salary as governor out of the children's school fund of the State two years after his term had expired and when he was a refugee in the swamps of the South."

These things, sir, have all been published years and years ago in the newspapers of our State, and yet her people have unstintingly showered honor after honor upon her senior Senator. The chiefest honor in her gift has twice been freely and proudly conferred upon him since their publication, and so long as he asks this honor or consents to accept it, it will be his, as no son of Tennessee, how worthy soever he may be, will ever contest it with him.

The first time he was elected, the most distinguished Republican, Judge Smith, of Memphis, one of the ablest Republicans in the State, representing his own county, cast his vote for him in our Legislature, in which he was elected by a three-fourths vote. He needs no defense at my hands. His personal honor and integrity of character are the pride of our people, and no man, be he high or low in station, would have the temerity, face to face with him, to assail in the slightest degree that honor and character. By this I do not mean to say, sir, that this distinguished man will feel called upon to notice the silly vaporings of every politician of vulgar methods who assumes a greatness he does not possess and undertakes to have himself magnified by being noticed by his superior.

In this connection, the gentleman having read from a paper at Nashville, I desire to read what a Republican editor in the State of Tennessee says about his speech of the 30th of March last. It is from the pen of the Hon. Thomas H. Baker, editor of a Republican paper in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HOUK. He left you and came to us to get an office, and when he could not get an office of course he went back again. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman shows the shoe pinches and he can not help squealing. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I read, I say, from Hon. Thomas H. Baker, one of the ablest and most distinguished editors of the Republican party in the State of Tennessee:

We denounced Isham G. Harris's policy in 1860 and 1861, but never for one moment did we question the sincerity of his motives or his personal integrity. Nay, more. We never heard a man who knew him personally do so.

Now, as to this school fund business. Governor Harris never had the school fund in his possession. It was all the time in the charge of the officers appointed by law, and as acting governor his only duty was to see whether that law was faithfully executed.

He drew his salary in gold, it is said. That he had the legal right to do so, no impartial lawyer ever questioned.

But the gentleman summons another witness, who is the editor of a paper at Nashville, Col. A. S. Colyar, and it happened that Colonel Colyar has also testified briefly on this point since the gentleman's speech of March 30, and I send to the Clerk's desk a short extract of what he has said in regard to Senator HARRIS in this connection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SENATOR HARRIS—A TENNESSEE EDITOR ANSWERS AN ATTACK UPON HIM.

"If there are any facts of public interest connected with the school fund of Tennessee which the Post would deem worth knowing, I am at its service," said Mr. A. S. Colyar, editor of the Nashville Union, to a Post reporter yesterday, referring to the insinuation of Representative HOUK that Senator HARRIS had misappropriated or misapplied the school fund of the State during the war.

"Did Senator HARRIS have anything to do with the fund, and was he implicated in its loss in any way?"

"The effects of the Bank of Tennessee, including the school fund," replied Mr. Colyar, "were removed South and kept during the war by the bank officers, and brought back at the close of the war. Mr. HARRIS was governor at the time, and I have no doubt conferred with the bank officers about what was best to be done. The assets of the bank were reduced under State legislation for raising and supporting troops. But what was left after the drain made by the military board created by the legislation referred to was kept intact in the South, and brought back intact at the war's close."

"Did anything connected with the affair reflect on Senator HARRIS?"

"Nothing, absolutely nothing, except that he was decidedly a war governor, and was in favor of using the resources of the State to arm and equip soldiers, and in this way much of the bank assets were used up; but as to there being any dishonest transactions or any suspicions even resting on the governor or bank officers, it is not true in any sense. There has been no cloud on the Senator growing out of this affair. He has not been a favorite with what might be called the progressive element of the Democratic party in Tennessee. He belongs to the wing that refuses to turn back and take another row after he has finished hoeing his row; he just keeps on in the same line out in the woods, hoeing trees, and so the more progressive Democrats who believe in improving our rivers and building up our industries by protecting labor do not agree with him, and I am among that number. But there is one thing about him that all Tennesseeans admire—his honesty and uprightness in public and private affairs. He has been in public life for about forty years, almost without interruption, and not only has no cloud rested on him in that period, but he has made the reputation of being scrupulously honest in private affairs and in his public life. I have never known a man who stood higher, or whose name was a surer protection against trading politicians or moneyed lobbyists. HARRIS is a very strong man in Tennessee, and his popularity is based on his ability and his honesty rather than his views of policy."

"Was the school fund not lost at all?"

"The school fund, or rather the bank assets, out of which the school fund was expected to be paid, was not lost during the war. It was brought back and turned over to a Republican governor and a Republican Legislature, and when the Democrats came into power a few years afterward the school fund had all disappeared."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is this the same Harris who is a director in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I dare say that when the report of a committee of this House charged with that investigation is made the gentleman will be able to determine that question for himself.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then he is not the same, I presume?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will have that information in proper time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, the gentleman does not like to say, perhaps.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, when that question is addressed to me with honesty of purpose and not in an entirely gratuitous manner I am prepared to answer it.

One word more, Mr. Speaker, in reference to this school fund and I have done.

It ill becomes the gentleman [Mr. HOUK], or any member of his party, to refer by way of criticism to the handling of this fund, as I will proceed to show. If there be, sir, any page in the history of the damnable robbery and plundering of our Southern States by the merciless crew into whose hands we fell after the war, it is certainly the page which records the handling of this "sacred school fund of the children of Tennessee" after it was returned by her officers in 1865 to the capitol of the State at Nashville. This fund, being largely if not all in gold, had been carried all over the Southern confederacy to avoid capture, sometimes in cars, sometimes in wagons. It was scrupulously guarded and cared for by Governor Harris and the State officers during those long and unhappy years. At the close of the war this money, being in gold, was returned to the capitol at Nashville in the same wooden boxes in which it took its flight from Nashville in 1862.

Mr. HOUK. How much of it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was returned to the capitol at Nashville in the same boxes, I repeat, in which it took its flight in 1862. I will give the gentleman the amount——

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman stated that it was captured; now was it captured?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was not captured. It was taken in charge and turned over at the request of Governor Harris, and in charge of the treasurer there and other State officers, who carried it to Nashville.

Mr. HOUK. The sworn testimony shows it was captured.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The boxes were hauled to the capitol building from the depot on arrival at Nashville, and were dumped into the building on the floor, under the direction and order of the authorities then in possession there. They were placed under the guard of Federal soldiers for some days. It is not charged that any portion of this fund was thus lost. If not, it is to the credit of the honest Union soldiers who kept silent vigil over it.

As the sequel shows, sir, it must have been far better for the State of Tennessee and her poor children, about whom the gentleman seems so solicitous now, if these funds had remained in the charge and under the control of the United States soldiers. The State officers then in charge of the State of Tennessee at Nashville took this money; it was counted, and there was found about $800,000 in gold.

Mr. HOUK. The amount was $720,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The party to which the gentleman belongs was then in undisputed control of the State.

Mr. HOUK. With the exception of the treasurer, who, as I will show in a moment, was a Democrat and committed suicide.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They elected their governor and Legislature and then began the high carnival—United States Senators were to be elected. Citizens who had always been loyal to the flag were to be disfranchised and disqualified from holding office. Constitutional amendments were to be passed, all the offices of the State were to be filled, and large sums of money were needed. The gentleman's party friends took charge of this money. They controlled the governorship; they controlled the treasury; they elected legislators; they passed constitutional amendments; they impeached and dismissed from office honest judges; they disfranchised the people; they disqualified them from holding office; they prostituted the so-called judiciary of their own creation to the basest party ends to subserve wicked partisan purposes. They did all this and more; but above all, at the end of their short reign, when the Democratic party wrenched power from their hands and opened the books, "this sacred school fund" belonging to the poor children of the State had nearly every dollar been stolen, squandered, and dissipated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman a question right there, a single question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What was the name of the State treasurer that permitted the robbery of that fund?

Mr. RICHARDSON. He was one elected by the friends of the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Was his name Polk?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; and the gentleman knows it was not.

Mr. MORGAN. Polk came twenty years after.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman understood that, I am sure; and it is not necessary to take time by answering such a question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And it is not claimed that Polk ever had charge of the school funds.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Polk was never treasurer until 1879. The facts about which I speak, this squandering of the so-called school fund, occurred in 1865, 1866, and 1867.

That is not at issue at all. The truth is, the Republicans were in control absolutely of the State. They had the treasury and the treasurer, they had the comptroller and every officer of the State, and as I remarked, within three years this $720,000 was nearly every dollar of it dissipated and squandered.

It had been safely carried "through the swamps of the South," if you please, had been honestly turned over to the gentleman's party at Nashville at the close of the war, and in three or four years, in time of profound peace, his party associates had made way with it all, and it was lost forever to the poor children of Tennessee. So I say, sir, the gentleman and his party should never again refer to that sacred school fund which was and is not.

In conclusion, sir, I desire to make my grateful acknowledgments to the House for the courtesy shown me in giving me this opportunity of replying to the remarks of my colleague.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have leave to print their remarks upon this national question. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. And that we proceed now with the consideration of the public business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. WISE and others objected. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. Is it in order now to proceed with the public business?

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. HOUK. I rise to reply to a few remarks which the gentleman brought into this discussion, and I want to show them to be absolutely unfounded and will produce the proof.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I must demand the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the House will also allow me the same length of time to reply I will be glad to have him proceed. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in justice to myself——[Cries of Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HOUK. Well, I believe the House is magnanimous enough to permit me to correct a slander.

The SPEAKER. But the House refuses to allow the gentleman to proceed.

Mr. HOUK. I think the House will reconsider its decision. It is well known all over Tennessee that the treasurer was a Democrat and committed suicide.

Mr. McMILLIN. Elected by the Republicans. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed to call committees for reports, which is the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of committees, the Chair at the same time being permitted to recognize gentlemen to make reports.

There was no objection.

SECTION 5352 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, with amendments; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7860) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL F. RICE.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. OATES, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 4566) to provide for the settlement of the accounts of the United States with the Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad Company; and

A bill (H. R. 8924) to authorize the Secretary of War to open and readjust the settlement made by the United States Government and the Selma and Meridian Railroad of Alabama.

JAMES S. CLARK & CO.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2417, a bill (H. R. 9370) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 2417) was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SANTA FÉ.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2856 a bill (H. R. 9371) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 2856) was laid on the table.

SIGNAL SERVICE, GEOLOGICAL SURVEY, ETC.

Mr. LOWRY, from the committee on Signal Service, Geological Survey, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, reported bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 9372) to limit the printing and engraving for the Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, and the Signal Service; and

A bill (H. R. 9373) to repeal so much of the act of June 20, 1878, as provides for the appointment of second lieutenants in the Signal Corps.

Mr. LOWRY. I am requested to ask that the views of the minority be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire also to have printed the views of the minority on the bill relating to the transfer of the Coast Survey.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, all the reports and minority views with reference to each bill will be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask whether it is necessary to reprint the testimony?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the testimony has been printed by the commission. It appears as a miscellaneous document. The Chair presumes it is unnecessary to reprint it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the money it would cost can be saved.

Mr. LOWRY. It was printed for the use of the commission.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose enough copies have been printed to answer every purpose.

Mr. LOWRY. What has been printed has been entirely exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House orders the printing that will involve 1,900 more copies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not directed the testimony to be printed. It will not be printed unless the House so orders. This appears to have been printed as a Senate document.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the House need not reprint it.

Mr. LOWRY. I suggest that the report simply be ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. That is always done.

Mr. RANDALL. But the gentleman wants the order to print confined to that and not to include the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so ordered. The reports alone and the bills will be printed and not the testimony.

Mr. LOWRY. That is quite satisfactory.

CORNELIA P. RANDOLPH.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8893) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to execute a deed of quitclaim and release to a certain alley in Washington to Cornelia P. Randolph and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNAPOLIS AND BALTIMORE RAILROAD.

Mr. WILKINS (by Mr. FINDLAY), from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORGANIZATION OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 4419, a bill (H. R. 9374) to authorize certain changes in the organization of the Post-Office Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 4419 was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 2056) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABINGDON, VA.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL SCHULTHEIS.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7911) granting a pension to Daniel Schultheis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. NEECE, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1609) granting a pension to Thomas Shannon, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ACCOUNTS BETWEEN MONTANA AND UNITED STATES.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the accounts for arms, ammunition, and accouterments between the Territory of Montana and the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES MURPHY.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3221, a bill (H. R. 9375) for the relief of Charles Murphy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 3221 was laid on the table.

THEODORE DUNMIRE.

Mr. LOUTTIT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8057) for the relief of Theodore Dunmire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Patents, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1544) authorizing William Lewis and William H. Lewis to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of their patent for new and useful photographic plate-holders; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report order to be printed.

WILLIAM E. BROOKE.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Patents, also reported back favoraby the bill (H. R. 7092) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to extend the letters patent heretofore granted to William E. Brooke; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OVERFLOWED LANDS, LAKE SAINT CLAIR.

Mr. VAN EATON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1204) setting apart the marsh and overflowed or shoal-water lands in and bordering upon Lake Saint Clair, in the State of Michigan, for a national shooting and fishing resort or reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Patents, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 3873) extending a patent to Frederick S. Jennings, of Danbury, Conn.; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LIVE-OAK LANDS, LOUISIANA.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8807) to cancel certain reservations of lands on account of live-oak in the southwestern land district of the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RELINQUISHMENT OF UNITED STATES LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 182) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HUTCHISON.

MARGARET STAFFORD WORTH.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back favorably a bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 3362 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8738) to so further amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes as amended and section 3363 as makes a distinction in the mode of packing and selling cut-tobacco; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET POLAND.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4313) for the relief of Margaret Poland, administratrix; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL-FARM LANDS, BEAUFORT COUNTY, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, in South Carolina, by the United States, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the lands in Beaufort County, South Carolina, known as the school-farms, now owned or held by the United States by virtue of the proceedings under the act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862, and under acts supplementary thereto or upon the same subject-matter, may be redeemed and restored to such persons as shall make application therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within one year from the passage of this act, and furnish satisfactory evidence that such person or applicant in each case was, at the time the United States acquired title thereto, the legal owner of such land, or the heir at law or devisee (or grantee, in good faith and for a valuable consideration) of such legal owner; but before such redemption shall be awarded and title restored on any such application and proof, such applicant shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the direct tax proper charged against the lands described in such application, together with the cost of advertising the sale of said lands: Provided, That if any such school-farm is only a part of a tract of land against which such tax was levied, then the applicant for redemption shall pay only such pro rata share of the tax and costs as may be ascertained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be properly chargeable against such school-farm.

SEC. 2. That whenever the foregoing conditions have been complied with, and redemption and restoration of title have been awarded in any case by the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make out a certificate of release of the interest and title of the United States in and to such lands, in duplicate, which shall be approved, in writing by the Secretary of the Treasury, and his approval indorsed thereon, and then one copy thereof shall be delivered to such applicant and the other filed in the office of said Commissioner.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, prescribe and promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may be necessary and proper to facilitate the execution of this act and secure the most speedy and least expensive attainment of the purpose hereof that is practicable.

SEC. 4. That if, at the expiration of the time hereinbefore allowed for redemption, there shall remain any of said lands unredeemed, it shall then be the duty of the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to proceed to sell, at public auction, as soon as may be consistent with the public interests, the lands not redeemed and restored, and to release and convey the same to the purchasers in the manner aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That all money derived from the redemption and sale of the said school-farm lands shall be invested in United States bonds, for the use and support of free public schools in the parishes of Saint Luke and Saint Helena, South Carolina, under the provisions of section 6, act of June 8, 1872, as amended by the act of March 3, 1873.

SEC. 6. That wherever on said school-farms there are buildings which have been erected by the State or United States for school purposes, and are now used for such purposes, said buildings, with 2 acres of land surrounding the same, shall be excepted from redemption or sale under the provisions of this act, and shall forever remain devoted to school purposes.

SEC. 7. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. STEELE. Pending that, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (S. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. Then I ask unanimous consent.

There was no objection; so the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is put on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent either that the session of this day be extended until 6 o'clock, or else that an evening session be held. I make the request in order to facilitate the passage of the legislative appropriation bill..

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana requests unanimous consent that the session of this day be extended until 6 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and Mr. BLOUNT resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to be heard for a moment on the question of order presented, and I ask now to have read at the Clerk's desk the first paragraph of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress. As it is read, the House will perceive that its language is identical with the language of the first paragraph of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have already stated, it will be seen that the language just read is identical, except as to dates, with the language of the first paragraph of the pending bill, namely, "That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely." I call attention further to the fact that every legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill from that time to the present, without a single exception, contains the same language. I admit, sir, that the language was new when it was embodied in the act passed ten years ago to which I have called attention. It is not to be found in the preceding bills. It was placed there for this reason: A large number of salaries were being reduced, and this language was inserted in the bill by the conference committee, because otherwise it was manifest that the mere reduction of a salary by the appropriation bill will accomplish nothing, as the officer would still be entitled to recover the difference between his salary and the amount appropriated. I call the attention of the Chair also to a decision of the Court of Claims, rendered at the October term of 1885, in the case of John M. Langston vs. The United States, in which this exact point was presented. Mr. Langston was our minister to Hayti. His salary was fixed by law at $7,500. We appropriated for two successive years, 1883 and 1884, $5,000 only; both branches of Congress regarding that as a sufficient salary. The consular and diplomatic bill, in which that salary was appropriated, contained no language similar to that which has been read, and which is embodied in this legislative bill, that the appropriations should be "in full compensation" for salaries, nor any words to that effect. The consular and diplomatic bill, unlike the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, has not uniformly contained those words and did not contain them in the years 1883 and 1884. In passing upon the question the court say:

The case before us does not come within the principles that control the determination of other cases. The salary of the minister to Hayti was originally fixed at the sum of $7,500. Neither of the acts appropriating $5,000 for his benefit during the fiscal year in question, 1883-1884, contains any language to the effect that such sum shall be in full compensation for those years. Nor was there an appropriation of any money for additional pay, from which it might be inferred that the Congress intended to repeal the act fixing the salary at $7,500.

Therefore the court held that inasmuch as the appropriation was but $5,000, the officer was entitled to recover the difference between that sum and the salary fixed by law.

Now, having called the attention of the Chair to the effect of that ruling, I shall say that I have before me a few of the salaries to be affected by the ruling on this question. There has not been time to go clear through the list for ten years to ascertain the extent to which salaries have been reduced by appropriation bills, but in the hurried examination there has been time to make I find that there are one hundred and thirty-three salaries named in this bill that have been reduced by the appropriation bills below the amounts prescribed by law.

Mr. RYAN. Prescribed by permanent law or by the appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. By the appropriation bill. These amount in the aggregate to $45,700.

As a matter of course, if the language "in full compensation" is to be omitted from this bill, Congress should at once appropriate the whole amount of these various salaries, for otherwise the Government will be subjected to the expense of suits in which recovery by the officers is absolutely inevitable.

Now, let us see how this matter operates in a few cases. Take the salary of the surveyor-general of Nevada, originally fixed like all the others at $3,000, though very few of the salaries of the surveyor-generals are now up to that amount. This office had come to be of no public importance. It was difficult to attach Nevada to any other surveying district. The question was, what to do with the records. Therefore, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, that salary has been reduced to $1,200; and gentlemen who are aware of the condition of things in Nevada know that the expenditure of $1,200 for that office is very ample. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] who sits beside me says it ought to be reduced to $500; and doubtless he is correct; for the officer now is a mere custodian of the public records. Yet the effect of a ruling, if sustained, to strike out these words "in full compensation," would be to increase this salary from $1,200 to $3,000. I mention that only as an illustration.

Again, take the Superintendent of Foreign Mails. The salary of this officer was fixed by law at $4,000, yet gentlemen who are aware of the duties of the office know that $3,000 is very ample compensation. By this bill, as by former appropriation bills, $3,000 is appropriated as the salary of that officer; yet as a matter of course, if the words "in full compensation" are stricken out on this point of order, the appropriation for this salary must be not $3,000 but $4,000.

Take a group of cases—the governors of Territories, eight in number, whose salaries by law are $3,500 each. By an appropriation bill nine years ago the salary of these officers was reduced to $2,600, and the reduction has continued from that day to this. The effect of striking out these words, "in full compensation," would be in this case to add $7,200 to the aggregate amount to be appropriated for these salaries. So through these various cases, a list of which I will insert as a part of my remarks.

The legislative bill H. R. 8974, in providing for certain salaries for the fiscal year 1887, gives the same sums as were provided for in 1886, but different from the amounts fixed by law in the following cases:

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. When the gentleman speaks of a reduction that has occurred upon the salaries fixed by law, does he in all cases speak of the salary fixed by permanent law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; permanent law.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And the gentleman does not in any case mean the salary fixed by some prior annual appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are many instances in which offices have been created by appropriation bills. That was the case with both the first and the second assistant commissioners of pensions; and there are many other instances.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In such a case as that, where the office is created and the salary determined by an annual appropriation bill of some previous year, what, in the gentleman's judgment, would be the effect of striking out these words, "in full compensation?" I mean where there is no permanent statute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The result would be exactly the same. That is to say, the offices of first and second assistant commissioners of pensions having been established by an appropriation bill, the effect is exactly the same as if they had been created by independent legislative enactment You can not reduce this or any other salary, although the office was created by an appropriation bill, unless you are able to do so in one of the current appropriation bills.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Suppose in an appropriation bill for a particular year an office is created, and it is provided, "There is hereby appropriated so much money for the compensation of the officer for the year." That is what I understand the gentleman to mean when he speaks of the creation of an office by an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not apply, because the phraseology is not generally what the gentleman supposes.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Well, I do not profess to be familiar with these matters.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not generally the phraseology, although there are instances where it has been used.

Now, a word further as to the effect of striking out these words, "in full compensation," upon this point of order. The distinguished gentleman [Mr. MORRISON] who made the point of order said, "Let the salaries be reduced and offices abolished in the usual way." I do not think he uttered those words advisedly, if he sought to prevent such reductions being made on an appropriation bill.

I think I am perfectly safe in saying you can not find a statute of independent legislation abolishing an office in our history. I am confident nothing of the kind has happened in our time. I do not think you will find an independent statute reducing salary. If there has been decrease of salary or abolition of an office in the past history of our country, as far as I am advised, it has been upon an appropriation bill. So that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] says let these reductions of salary and abolition of office be done in the usual way, he forgets that the usual way throughout our history, when one party or the other administered the Government, has been to abolish offices and reduce salaries upon appropriation bills.

One other word, Mr. Chairman, on that point. From the organization of Congress it is inevitable, from the law of its organization it is inevitable, if in the past there has not been any reduction of salaries or abolition of offices except upon appropriations, there will not in the nature of things be any in the future. From the very nature of the case you have to bring side by side the public service with appropriation of public money. Without the application of the two in harmony there will be no legislation, as the long past history of the country will indicate.

So I assume if the House has placed itself in the position it can not reduce salaries and can not abolish offices upon the appropriation bills, then the whole policy of Congress is changed, radically changed, from what it has been before. The whole of its organization is changed from what it was before, Mr. Chairman, if you can not make any reform in the case.

The gentleman talks about committees reporting. Yes, you have committees on the various Departments of the Government. Let them report. You have known, Mr. Chairman, and you gentlemen have known, how remote are the prospects these measures will receive consideration in one or both of the Houses of Congress. Such measures have not been passed heretofore. We know the impracticability of that kind of legislation, and will not admit it. Offices have been created heretofore by independent legislation, but salaries have not been reduced by independent legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this House is then confronted with the most important question or point of order, in my judgment, ever presented to it. It is whether this House intends to retain in its hands the machinery, the agency, necessary to enable it to reform abuses existing in public employment as to the number of employés or the salaries of employés.

Mr. FELTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FELTON. Is there any increase of salary provided for in this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; there are a few increases of salaries. There have been, according to the brief record furnished from a hasty examination, one hundred and thirty-three salaries reduced during the last ten years under the language used in this bill, "in full compensation," which was put into that bill, as I have remarked already, by the conference when it became manifest it was necessary to accomplish the purpose, and after a struggle which prolonged the session of Congress to the middle of August. The incorporation of that provision was deemed so important to the public service the session was prolonged in order that that measure of reform should be secured. That was the first House of Representatives controlled by gentlemen on this side of the House, that is, by the members of the Democratic party, for a long series of years. It was the first session of the House held under the control of the Democratic party for twenty-five years.

And I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while both parties, Republican and Democratic, have controlled this House for a period of ten years, both of them have retained the rule under which these reductions might be made, and both have incorporated into the appropriation bill the language "in full compensation." So up to the beginning of this session of Congress that language has had the approval of both political parties in the control of this House. The question now is, whether the House under the change of its rules last December proposed to overturn the public policy in the interest of economical administration of the Government, which began with the Democratic party in the Forty-fourth Congress and which received the approval of the Republican party in the Forty-seventh Congress.

I have spoken mainly of the effect and history of this amendment, and will now come to the technical question, the real question, whether or not the incorporation into a general appropriation bill of the language that the sum appropriated shall be, if expended, received in full compensation for the service indicated, is subject to the point of order, or that it is new and independent legislation. That is the question.

Mr. Chairman, it goes further. I do not put the question well. I put it in a better form thus: Under the rules of the House is it possible to impose a limitation upon the expenditure of public money? I am putting it better thus; I think the terms are better: Is it not in the power of the House in appropriating public money to impose a limitation upon its expenditure? Why we say this money if expended shall be received in full compensation for the service rendered. If Congress has not the power to impose that limitation, then we have almost abandoned the legislative power. We have almost abandoned the power to control expenditures of the public money except and until legislation which has received the approval of both branches of Congress and signed by the President can be gotten through, and that, inasmuch as it will frequently defeat any appropriation at all, will be absolutely impracticable.

Mr. LONG. But is it not only a limitation upon the power of expenditure, but also upon the right of the servant to receive?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all; it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the money.

Mr. LONG. But is it not also a limitation upon the legal right which the servant previously had to receive the compensation previously fixed?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a limitation necessarily upon his right to demand more for the service than is appropriated by the terms of the bill. Suppose at the end of this bill language be incorporated that no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the purpose indicated unless the same shall be received in full compensation for the service named. Would the Chair say that limitation is not in order? And yet if it is in order, then the language is precisely the same here, not in words but in substance, that the money shall only be expended on that condition.

Now, I would like to say to the Chair that the rules under which we act generally in appropriating public money are drawn from the same general source as that from which, in the main, our institutions have sprung; and going back to the early struggle between the king and the house of commons, we find the origin of the principle of limitation fixed upon public expenditures. There the representatives of the people claimed the right to impose limitations; and if this House has never abandoned that right, as I claim, and if the rules of the House, to which reference will be made, have that effect, then it can only be made to have that effect by a strained construction and a construction injurious to the public service and fatal to economy, compelling you to restore thousands of dollars to this appropriation bill, which in the judgment of both Democratic and Republican Houses for ten years past were ample and sufficient compensations for the service to be rendered. The language of this rule, as the Chair knows very well, is as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

Up to that point it does not meet the matter in question—

unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress—

That language does not change the case—

nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Do you change the law when you say that none of the money shall be expended except upon a given condition?

The law fixes the salary of a Territorial judge at $3,600. In the judgment of this House $2,600 is sufficient salary. Do you change or even go to the extent of suspending the law by simply providing that the officer named shall only be entitled to receive any compensation under the provisions of the bill when he receives in full for his services the sum of $2,600? Does it change the law? Is it not simply the law of the appropriation; a limitation upon the expenditure of the money immediately covered by the bill; a law, in fact, of the appropriation bill itself? For you, Mr. Chairman, have undoubtedly reached the conclusion that this rule refers not to the law of an appropriation but refers to a permanent law. Here we deal simply with the law of the appropriation; that is to say, that the money which we appropriate shall not be expended except upon given conditions and is to be received in full compensation for the services.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The law provides that the President of the United States shall receive a compensation of $50,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Suppose you appropriate in the bill $40,000 and say he shall receive that in full compensation for his salary. Does not that change the existing law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt of the power of Congress to so appropriate——

Mr. MILLIKEN. But does it not change the existing law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I repeat, I have no doubt of the power of Congress to do that by an appropriation, but the law of the salary would continue, and the moment that provision of the appropriation bill was changed by a succeeding appropriation the salary would go back to the amount fixed by the law.

Mr. REAGAN. But is not the service rendered after the appropriation is made?

Mr. HOLMAN. If he receives his salary he receives it subject to the limitations put upon it by the appropriation bill which provides the compensation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But does it not change the existing law?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend fails to distinguish between the law of an appropriation bill and a permanent, fixed law.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How can the President get his other $10,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. This law simply applies to the expenditure of money for the year and not to the permanent salary fixed by the law. It is simply the law of appropriation or of the expenditure of the money. At the very furthest the only possible construction would be that it was a suspension, for the time being, by the operation of the appropriation bill, of the expenditure of money for the salary fixed by the permanent law.

Mr. LONG. So that the salary of the President in the instance given would be governed by two conflicting laws at the same time?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all; it would be the same salary as fixed by the law, and will still go on in the absence of limitations. But it is within the province of Congress to limit the appropriation and state that it shall not be expended except upon certain conditions. That being done, the condition fixed becomes the law of that appropriation and expenditure, but the salary remains the same, and whenever Congress withdraws that temporary or annual restriction the salary goes on just as before, and would be so held by the courts.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then it would be within the province of the Committee on Appropriations, if their bill was adopted, to deprive the President of all his compensation?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all, except by such a provision as this limiting the appropriation.

But the question is overwhelmingly important. It is important to this country; it is important to the public integrity; it is important to the public honor. We, sir—you and myself and others on this side of the House—are here under a command, under a commission, not to increase salaries over those of the preceding ten years, not to increase the number of officers, but to retrench and reduce the expenses of this Government.

I listened with admiration to the stirring and eloquent words of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] when he admonished this side of the House that these seats were filled by gentlemen pledged to reform and retrenchment in the expenditures of our Government. I indorse that sentiment cordially; and I should blush if in the very first year of the Democratic administration of this Government this House should consent, in the application of its legitimate legislative power, to place barriers upon itself by even absolutely prohibiting members from bringing forward measures intended to carry out in good faith the pledges made to the people.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I stated substantially what I had to say in support of the point of order then made and now under consideration. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is correct in saying that the words employed in this bill are much the same as in bills for several years past. But he seems to forget, and he must have forgotten when he framed this bill, that at the commencement of this Congress a rule different from that prevailing in this House for some years past was made—a rule which, adopted as it was by a large majority on both sides of the House, imposed, it seems to me, an obligation even upon the gentleman from Indiana to pay some respect to it.

The gentleman must understand very well what I meant when I said "reduce or increase these salaries in the usual way;" yet he expresses the belief that this language was inapt or not appropriate. The usual way of making or changing a law is by bill for the purpose, and this our rules require. No one better knows than he that we declare in the rules that when a branch of the public service was established and compensation for the several offices in that service was fixed by law he was forbidden by the rules from changing that compensation on an appropriation bill. The rule said to him that it was his duty to appropriate the money which the law had already determined should be appropriated. As I said yesterday, if he or any other member believes that too much or too little is being appropriated, he has nothing to do but to introduce and secure the passage of a bill providing a different salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many such bills can pass in the course of a hundred years?

Mr. MORRISON. None has passed within the last ten years, nor in the last six months, because you are unwilling to obey the rules reducing or relating to salaries and officers unless you do so in your own way and against the rule adopted by the House for the government of us all on this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. What steps have you taken toward it?

Mr. MORRISON. My duties have been in another direction and connected with another branch of service.

Mr. HOLMAN. So have mine.

Mr. MORRISON. Your duties have been in appropriating money for the payment of salaries and other expenditures, and you have discovered several cases in which you think the salaries fixed by law are too small, as well as a number in which you think they are too large. And all that the gentleman had to do was to put in legislative form, in conformity with the rules, a bill to fix those salaries at whatever rate was deemed fair compensation.

I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to press further or say more on this point of order. It is too plain to be misunderstood. I do not make it because I want any salary increased or reduced differently from what the gentleman proposes. I presume I might vote with the gentleman from Indiana for all the increases he proposes to make, and I certainly would vote for all the reductions he proposes when he presents the proposition in conformity with the rules. I make the point of order for the purpose of insisting that the law, the rules of the House, and its orderly procedure shall be observed, especially by those who understand the necessities for such observance so well as does the honorable gentleman from Indiana.

The gentleman says he should blush to see somebody or anybody in this House refuse to do away with an office; and I believe he proposes to do away with one in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. A great many.

Mr. MORRISON. I think of but one; and he proposes, I believe, to create several. I go with the gentleman when he proposes to do away with any office; I do not always go with him when he proposes to make some new offices. I might refer to the very last bill which went through this House under the whip and spur of the other side, with a majority of Democrats against it, the oleomargarine bill. When that bill came along creating offices, the gentleman "jumped on the cow-catcher" and went along with the rest. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Did I not try to reduce the salaries in that bill?

Mr. MORRISON. You voted for the offices, and you voted for them with the salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that the salaries were reduced $500 each? It was not as much as I asked, but still there was that reduction.

Mr. MORRISON. But still there were some new offices which you saw the opportunity to make in that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misapprehends me. I have made no new offices in the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. You made new offices in the bill to which I refer; yet you were telling the House but a moment ago you could not make or unmake offices except on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman addresses himself to me, I wish simply to say I have made no new offices in the bill, and there are none there by my co-operation.

Mr. MORRISON. There were new offices in the bill to which I refer, and the gentleman voted for it; and there are new offices and increased salaries in this bill. That is all I mean to say. I simply point to the fact, so that the gentleman may look both ways when he seeks to "blush" and not fix his gaze on me, because I insist on the rules being observed. The House adopted these new rules for some purpose——

Mr. HOLMAN. Was that purpose to prevent our reducing salaries or abolishing offices on an appropriation bill—the only way in which it can be done?

Mr. MORRISON. That is assumption purely. The purpose was to insist upon the Appropriations Committee appropriating the money which the law had previously said should be appropriated for the purposes named. The gentleman is not in doubt at all about what the purpose was.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend, I believe, voted for a very different rule ten years ago when the Democratic party came into power in the midst of a Republican administration. I think my friend entertained a very different view when he himself hung out as one of the House conferees on the legislative appropriation bill until those words, "in full compensation," were inserted in it.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly. I suppose I have changed in some particulars—not in many, either—in the last ten years. Let us be candid with each other. I mean nothing unkind or offensive in what I say or have been saying of or to the gentleman from Indiana. But he knows why we adopted the original rule. We thought that through the appropriation bills we could better force a Republican Senate to comply with our purposes in cutting down expenditures. But later, when great complaint was made and some abuses had grown out of the rule, we thought that when we had control of the administration which was expending the money the Republican Senate would not stand in the way of our making reductions in the amounts to be expended by us, its political opponents.

Mr. HOLMAN. Especially as they had no persons in office to be affected.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly they have some. I think I heard somebody arguing here that under the civil-service system they have some officers in yet. [Laughter.] And if there are any, I propose that they have the salaries fixed by law; and when we find any salaries that are too high, as some of them no doubt are, I will go along with the gentleman from Indiana to cut them down; but he will seldom find me going with him to put any up.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has not done anything in that line up to this time.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; introduced and reported a bill, and I have been doing the best I could with that branch of the service which was specially assigned to me. It is true that the gentleman and some of our friends on the other side of the House, and on this, chose the other day to relieve my committee of a part of its labors; and at that time, as I have said, the gentleman "jumped on the cow-catcher" and waved a leaf of tobacco in the interest of the "poor farmer" while making new officers for him to pay.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill to which the gentleman refers went to the Committee on Agriculture, I think, by consent; did it not?

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly. I make no point on that; but that did not make it necessary to vote for it and its new offices.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no point made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose my friend from Illinois has taken into account the effect of a rule prohibiting retrenchment by a reduction of salaries or the abolition of offices—I suppose he has taken this into account in determining whether any measure could pass Congress to diminish by a reduction of taxation the burdens now resting upon the people of the country?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; I have considered that. Introduce a bill in suitable form, reducing the salaries you propose to reduce in this bill, and I will go with you in getting it made law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why does not my friend do so himself? Why throw the duty on somebody else? Who more than he is the representative man of the Democratic party here in the House? Upon whom more than upon him rests the duty of bringing forward reforms? He refuses to reform in our way; why does he not propose reform in his own way?

Mr. MORRISON. I have already said I am not charged with providing for payment of salaries and other such obligations.

The rules are yours as well as mine. Whatever duties you may have imposed upon me under the rules I have been content to observe them like a man. I have never refused to observe the rules that you have made or caused to be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress we all agreed on this side of the House to the rule which provided for a reduction of salaries on appropriation bills.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly. We worked along under that rule for some time. When in my opinion it had been found to work badly I endeavored as far back as the Forty-sixth Congress to change the rule and you prevented it. I submitted. Now the gentleman from Indiana wants to know why I have not done this or that—why I have not led in the reduction of expenditures. I have heard year by year from the gentlemen from Indiana and Pennsylvania about this reduction of salaries and expenses, about this system of economy, until I supposed that these officers had their salaries fixed at the right rates and as low as they ought to be. As they were fixed by the gentlemen from Indiana and Pennsylvania for officers of the other party, I supposed they were low enough for ours. [Laughter.]

I did not know the Appropriations Committee was going along from year to year repeating the same old story, each year reducing a salary $500 or any other sum, and all the time the same $500. I did not know when they got it reduced they had to repeat the same next year to reduce it again, because the law had not been changed but was left as they found it, and left as it had been found when the Committee on Appropriations had the right to fix and make it permanent. But it now seems it was not fixed except for each year, so that the committee could repeat its economy each year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Could you have got through any law producing any result in any other way, except upon an appropriation bill, during all these years?

Mr. MORRISON. Probably not when the Republicans had the Senate and the spending of the money, all their people being in office. Yet they might as well have permanently fixed a salary as to continue fixing it each year at the same rate. I think if there is anything too high now, if any of our people get too much, and they are all our people in this bill, I think, except the Public Printer, and I see you get in $500 more for him than under the law—— [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. No more for him than for a great many years past.

Mr. MORRISON. That may be. I supposed you had all fixed at salaries they ought to have. That is, in ten years you ought to have fixed them. That you had not to discover another but the same reduction each year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, you admit yourself you discovered the reason why it was not done. You admit no independent law could pass; that any chance of reform was in an appropriation bill. There has been no reform except under appropriation bills.

Mr. MORRISON. If you have your way we never will. If the House gives way to you and overruns the rules [laughter] in that way you will try to reform, but in that way or not at all. In that way you can repeat the same reform every year. In that way reform can be made to last for the purpose of being paraded, whether made or not.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, this is an important question under the new rules. And it is very important that we should not allow any danger, real or imaginary, to keep us from doing our duty under the rules.

Now, the old rule about which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] commented was this:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Under that exception in appropriation bills made heretofore such legislation as he says ought to be made on this appropriation bill was certainly in order. Is it in order now? Let us see if the gentleman thought so when we were debating the rules. And, mark it, I with him was opposing the stripping of the Committee on Appropriations of large parts of its jurisdiction.

Mr. RANDALL. This applies to all committees.

Mr. HAMMOND. I was going to say that I thank the gentleman for saying it for me. Because the rule presented by the Committee on Rules changed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] sought to ingraft on it this amendment. I refer to page 313 of the RECORD for the present session:

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that the proposition I submit takes the rule as reported by the Committee on Rules in exact terms, including the words "and for contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government." It retains those words and adds the language which I desire the Clerk to read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Nor shall any provision changing existing laws be in order upon any appropriation bill or be received as an amendment thereto; but provisions or amendments for the direct reduction of the number, salary, and compensation of officers and employés of the United States shall be in order on a general appropriation bill if germane to the subject-matter of the bill."

Mr. HOLMAN, among other things, went on to say as follows:

I certainly hope that the power of the House to reduce, on any bill to which the matter is germane, the number and salaries of officers of the United States will not be taken away. If these bills are to be distributed, let each of the committees having charge of appropriation bills exercise this power. I hope that no gentleman will object to the House retaining this power of retrenchment on proper bills.

There was the issue directly made, that that power ought not to be "taken away" which existed under the old rule. He begged to allow it to exist under the new rule. The House, so far as stripping the committee of that legislative power was concerned, was almost unanimous. The rule, as it was adopted, declared that the Appropriations Committee should only appropriate the money which the law says is necessary for running the Government, and that the other committees should take care of the legislation.

Now, it may have been a bad rule. That is a question about which the House and the gentleman from Indiana differed. It may be a rule that will hurt the Democratic party. That is a thing about which the House and the gentleman will differ; but it is the rule, and as long as we understand we are to be bound by the rules we must stand by them, let the consequences be what they may.

If the rule is in the way and is wrong, change the rule; but do not evade it or infringe it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of avoiding just such an issue as this, on last Monday a week ago I submitted a rule that would permit what has been regarded as absolutely indispensable to economy in the affairs of the Goverment and sent it to the Committee on Rules through the House, and so far as I have heard it has not been acted upon.

Mr. HAMMOND. Very well. That only shows that at that time the gentleman himself believed that what he undertakes to do to-day could not be properly done. I thank the gentleman for coming to the support of my argument.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all. I had not any such apprehension, but I wanted to make assurance doubly sure. I regard that rule as absolutely consistent with the power of the House. It imposes restrictions upon the expenditure of public money, and this is the first time that the new rule has been invoked against an appropriation bill, when nearly every bill reported to the House and passed by it had some legislative provision not in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. HAMMOND. No single bill that passed the House since these rules were made had any legislation upon it not mentioned in the report; and one objection would have thrown it out.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, but——

Mr. HAMMOND. And the objections were not made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, I say so; and this legislation is also named in the report.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes; but objection is made here, and that is just the difference. The other was contrary to the rule except by unanimous consent, and there was unanimous consent given. Here it is withheld; that is the difference.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and I am just expressing my astonishment that when we came to the consideration of the civil list the very first objection is made and urged against the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am not discussing the question whether the gentleman ought to be astonished or not. I am discussing the rule under which we are operating. As I understood the argument of the gentleman, and I listened with care and attention to it, he undertook to advise the chairman of the committee that this is not contrary to the rule; and I thank him for his interruptions, which substantiate my declaration that it is contrary to the rule.

But when he thought it might be doubtful whether that was true, he took another position, which I think untenable. He said that this did not change any existing law; that it simply suspended the operation of a statute for a certain length of time. And he read from the case of the United States against Langston. That simply decided if an appropriation bill provided less money than the statute fixed for the salary that that did not pay the whole salary, and that the man to whom it was coming could sue in the Court of Claims on his statutory right and recover the balance. Well, that was simply following out what they had already intimated in the case of Mitchell, in 109 United States, where they held, among other things, this language:

The whole question depends upon the intention of Congress as expressed in the statutes, whether a simple failure by Congress to appropriate any or a sufficient sum to pay the salary of an officer fixed by previous law is of itself an expression of purpose by Congress to reduce the salary. We do not now decide that.

They did decide in the Langston case that the same thing was not a repeal of the statute fixing the salary; but in the case of Fisher, in the same volume, the court held that these words which are copied in this act were a repeal pro tanto of the old law, and that because it was a repeal of that law Fisher could not recover for the years in which those words were used in the appropriation bills and could recover for the years in which they were not used.

Now, as to Mr. Fisher, in reference to his salary these were the words, identical with those of this bill under review, namely:

That the following sums be, and are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service for the fiscal year, &c.

And the gentleman from Indiana suggested that we could not repeal a statute that way. The Supreme Court in that case said this:

When Congress has said that the sum appropriated shall be in full compensation of the services of the appellee, we can not say that it shall not be in full compensation, and allow him a greater sum.

Not only do the words of the statute make the intention of Congress manifest, but that intention is plainly repugnant to the former statute, which fixes the yearly salary of the chief-justice at $3,000. It is impossible that both acts should stand. No ingenuity can reconcile them. The later act must therefore prevail, and the earlier act must for the time covered by the appropriation acts above referred to be suspended.

And now to show that the court treated that suspension as a repeal, a change of existing law, I turn back to page 145, where we find the basis on which that decision was founded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Therefore the gentleman holds that the suspension——

Mr. HAMMOND. I am not telling you what I hold. I am showing what the Supreme Court hold. The court said:

Certain well-settled rules of interpretation are applicable to this case. One is that a legislative act is to be interpreted according to the intention of the legislation apparent upon its face; * * * another that, if possible, effect must be given to every clause, section, and word of the statute; * * * and a third, that where two acts are in irreconciliable conflict the later repeals the earlier act, even though there be no express repeal.

I have omitted the authorities cited. There is a declaration that if these words "in full compensation for" are included in such an appropriation bill which becomes the law, it affects the hundreds of salaries covered by that act and changes the existing laws pro tanto. That is the object of those words in this bill.

The object of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is to repeal those statutes. He tells us so by his speech, that they ought to be repealed; that these salaries ought to be reduced. Well, the plain reply is, if they ought to be, this is not the way to do it under the rules. If we can not do it otherwise, the House is responsible and not he for having put itself in the position where it can not. The House has expressed no desire to do it so far. So far as I know, nobody has expressed any desire to do it except in this bill. And it was well known it could not be done in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a suggestion and I call the attention of the Chair to the question already put by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], a point which had escaped me. It is that the point of order can not lie against the words which are now the subject of the question of order, for the reason that the words "in full compensation" do not change any law, do not modify any law, do not suspend any law.

The question is whether some subsequent provision of the bill has that effect or not. I submit, therefore, that so far as these words are concerned they are not obnoxious to the point of order. They do not change a law. The only question is whether in some subsequent provision of the bill this ultimate result is intended, whether some other provision of the bill is affected by the words now under consideration. And does the Chair know what salaries in this bill would be affected by this?

Mr. MORRISON. I pointed out one instance last evening.

Mr. HAMMOND. What the gentleman from Indiana suggests is hardly worth dignifying with the name of a technicality. The gentleman has put the fight upon the question whether the use of that language would repeal the law. The language is:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Now, the idea he suggests is that we have to go on until we get to a particular place and say that because we put those words in we have to bring this salary up to the statute or repeal the law, one or the other. It does not change the force of the point of order at all, because, answering candidly, if the gentleman's point of order had been made that this point of order could not operate until these paragraphs of the bill had been read, then a fair and honest way to get at this point of order would have been to read all these sections for the purpose of this point of order, but not for the purpose of legislation until after this point of order was disposed of. However, this heading runs through every one of them. The word "namely" carries it through every line; and if the words of repeal can be put in here, we shall simply have a fight over every one of these salaries when they are raised or when they are lowered, instead of declaring in the beginning there shall be no repealing law in this statute. All we have to say is, take out those repealing words and go on and appropriate the money according to the rules of the House as directed, and let the House bear the responsibility.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not willing to sanction the view that the House shall abdicate its right to control public expenditures unless upon the clearest possible necessity. The House of Representatives is charged primarily with originating bills for revenue. The members of the House are the direct representatives of the people. The Congress is charged with the duty of appropriating money for the support of the Government. The bill which is pending before the House is itself legislation. The changed rule simply proposes to prevent the incorporation of new legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend permit me to quote, in connection with what he is saying at this point, the language of the Constitution?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. The language of the Constitution is: "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

Mr. REAGAN. Yes. In reference to the subject of salaries, the Constitution provides that the salary of the President and the salaries of the judges of the courts shall not be reduced during their terms of office. There is no such provision with reference to any other officer of the Government, and it has been the practice of Congress constantly and habitually to determine by its appropriations the salaries to be paid, and, to a large degree, the number of the employés of the Government. Can it be supposed that it was intended by the change made in the rules to so circumscribe the powers of Congress in making appropriations for the support of the Government as that it should not be able to limit and control the expenditures of the Government?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Has it not been, ever since the Forty-fifth Congress at least, the rule and the practice that no provision increasing expenditures should be allowed on an appropriation bill?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is just as much a limitation as what is asked for here, only that it is in the other direction.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, for ten years, as we are advised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the salaries appropriated for certain officers have been less than the amounts prescribed in the laws creating the offices thus provided for. Those appropriations were the expression of the will and the judgment of Congress in making provision for the support of the Government, that the salaries so appropriated were sufficient, and he who accepts a salary under an appropriation conditioned as this is, that it shall be in full for his services, has no ground of complaint against the Government nor any right of action, as stated in the opinion read by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], for an additional amount on the ground that the law creating his office provided for a different sum from that which has been allowed in the appropriation bills. When the Congress, in the discharge of its duty for ten years past, has held that certain officers were entitled to certain salaries if, for some purposes, this reduced allowance is a repeal pro tanto of the statute, may it not be taken as the common law of the House—I do not mean simply during these ten years, but the whole practice of Congress during its existence—may it not be taken as the judgment of Congress that that law is either repealed or so modified as that Congress properly controls the amounts of the salaries?

Mr. CANNON. If it should be so accepted by the House is it not time that where there are increases of salaries persistently adhered to from year to year (as there are many in this bill) the same rule would apply?

Mr. REAGAN. I think the statement is correct. Congress provides for the expenses of the Government, and it could not have been the purpose of the Committee on Rules to abridge powers of Congress in the appropriation of money for the support of the Government, and if Congress in making provision for the support of the Government chooses to reduce salaries or to increase salaries it seems to me that it would be a dangerous and evil limitation upon the powers of Congress to say that it has no such authority.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the Constitution provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in consequence of appropriations made by law, and under that provision the civil service of the Government has its foundation and authority. The Democratic House in the Forty-fourth Congress designed to reduce expenditures, and it became necessary to change the rules at the first session of that Congress so as to enable that House to execute the pledge upon which they had come into power. I am unwilling that this discussion shall end without reciting in a brief way the occurrences of that session. The rule was changed so as to allow the reduction of expenditures and the abolition of a number of officials in an appropriation bill. The action of the House, in form of a bill to that intent, went to the Senate. The Senate demurred, finally conceded the reduction, but denied to the House the power of saying that the amounts appropriated should be in full compensation "hereafter." If we could have secured the insertion of the word "hereafter," it would have been the law governing us for the future, but we were not able to do that.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] and myself are perhaps more responsible for these words than any other two men in the House, because we were on the conference that finally compelled the Senate to yield the insertion of these words. Why did we do it? Because we were advised, as has been stated here, that the laws would give to every employé whose salary was reduced a right to appeal to the courts to recover the difference between the amount appropriated and the salary fixed by law. For that reason we had those words, "in full compensation," inserted in the bill, so as to cut off the innumerable suits that would otherwise have been brought against the Government. And thus we have gone along ever since. In addition to binding ourselves at that time and in that particular, we bound the Republican party; it is my duty to say what I believe to be the fact, that when the Republicans had control here they permitted these same words to go into the appropriation bills. I think that statement is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. RANDALL. So far the gentleman from Indiana and I agree. But I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas in the suggestion that this rule recognizes a distinction between independent legislation on appropriation bills and other legislation. In other words, I think that this House has imposed a restriction upon itself as to reducing salaries or dispensing with employés upon an appropriation bill authorized by a separate statute. The defect is in the rule. Sooner or later those who enacted this rule, whether on the one side or the other, will, I hope, come to see that upon such bills as this the House should not be restricted in this way, but should have the power to reduce salaries and dispense with employés on an appropriation bill, because experience has shown that we can not successfully secure separate enactments in that direction, more particularly when the two Houses are divided in political sentiment.

Hence I would be glad to see the rules changed in this particular. Like the gentleman from Illinois, I always obey the voice of the House in all particulars. So far as I have been able I have done so in this case without making any "wry faces." I appeal to the House to give in some way, not simply to the Committee on Appropriations but to all these committees having charge of appropriations of the public money, the opportunity upon appropriation bills to retrench expenditures by reducing the salaries of officials or by abolishing unnecessary offices. I am forced to the conclusion that whatever may have been the intention of the two-thirds on both sides of the House, as described here, who concurred in adopting this rule, they have framed the rule in the manner stated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. Inasmuch as the gentleman places that construction upon the rule, I wish to inquire what authority the Committee on Appropriations had to withhold appropriations for any one institution authorized by law and which should have been covered by the bill. I refer to the Saint Louis assay office. While appropriations are made for every other assay office, that is left entirely out of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. When that portion of the bill is reached I may have some amendment to offer, and it is likely I may have something to say.

Mr. BLAND. I merely wanted to know what authority the Committee on Appropriations had to omit that assay office from the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to complicate what I have now to say with remarks upon any particular item.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that, but I claim that the Committee on Appropriations had no authority to discriminate between different institutions, and make appropriations for some while they withheld them from others.

Mr. RANDALL. Believing as I do that the defect is in the rules, I differ with the gentleman from Indiana to this extent. I think that the rules of the House do in practice prevent these reductions unless they can be made by unanimous consent. Under the rules as they are framed today, any one member of this House by making a point of order can, in my view, prevent the reduction of any salary or the dispensing with any employé authorized by a separate statute.

Mr. FINDLAY. As the gentleman admits that the rule is defective, does he not concede the point of order to be good?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can not have listened closely to the line of my argument if he did not draw the conclusion that he now wants me to concede.

Mr. FINDLAY. I just came in, and heard only the latter part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. I have said all that I care to say.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, if there is any item in this appropriation bill that reduces the salary of any officer whose compensation is fixed by permanent law, that item, when reached, is subject to a point of order; and such point of order when made ought to be, and I think will be, sustained.

I do not think there is any escape from that conclusion. The argument made chiefly by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was addressed rather to the propriety of the rule than to its effect and operation. The question here for the Chair to determine, and the only one, is whether the clause against which this point of order is made does of itself change existing law. The point is not altogether technical—not at all technical in my judgment—but is substantially that the Chair must first be satisfied the language against which the point of order is made does of itself change existing law.

Does it? How does it change existing law? Will it not depend upon the action of this body upon the items in this bill whether there will be anything for that provision to operate upon or not? As we proceed in the consideration of this bill and come to a clause against which a point of order may justly be made, when we come to an item which increases or reduces the compensation fixed by law the point of order can properly be made against it, and if made I have no doubt it will be sustained. Suppose that is done all the way through the bill, then let me ask what is there for that provision to operate upon? Will it not be mere surplusage?

Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman a question in the line of his discussion?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Suppose an appropriation in this bill for an officer is less than the sum fixed as his salary, and suppose he does not draw it at all, and afterward resorts to the courts?

Mr. RYAN. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question.

Mr. OATES. What would be the ruling?

Mr. RYAN. I say if that provision is left in the bill, and if the compensation as reduced is left in the bill, then there is something for that clause to operate upon. When that is done the effect will be that the compensation will be changed, and whether he receives the amount or not he could not collect the amount fixed by the permanent law, but only the amount fixed by the appropriation bill.

Mr. OATES. At the expiration of the time appropriated for what is the law as to his salary?

Mr. RYAN. Then the permanent law would operate.

Mr. OATES. Then it does not operate as a change of the permanent law?

Mr. RYAN. It is a change only for the year.

Mr. OATES. Only for the year?

Mr. RYAN. That is all, only for the year provided for in this bill. So, Mr. Chairman, the point I make is this: That the Chair can not say now that this provision does change existing laws, for it can not change existing law unless the House leaves something in the bill after it has concluded the consideration of it which reduces salaries below existing law.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose the point of order is withdrawn or overruled, and you go on, and later in the bill you make the point of order that it cuts down the salary, then it is too late?

Mr. RYAN. My answer to that is this: If this House shall retain in this bill an item reducing salaries in violation of the rule, then that decision ought to be made effective by the application of this clause to prevent the collection of a greater compensation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Still it would then change existing law.

Mr. RYAN. It would; but the effective change would be made by retaining the item of appropriation.

Mr. LONG. But you must bear in mind that the mere passage of this through the House does not make it a law. It does not become a law when it passes the Committee of the Whole. It does not become a law until it passes both Houses and has been approved by the President.

Mr. RYAN. But if it be the judgment of the House that a salary ought to be reduced, the rule to the contrary notwithstanding, ought not the action to be made final and complete by the operation of that clause?

Mr. LONG. I do not see the pertinency of the suggestion.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman does not see the pertinency of the suggestion? I will illustrate. Here is an item in the bill providing for the reduction of the salary of an officer. It is provided that he shall have $4,500 in the bill. By the permanent law he is entitled to $5,000, this being a reduction of $500. Now, when we reach that item in the bill you or any other gentleman can make the point of order against it and have it stricken out, and if there is nobody in the House to do that, then it stands as the unanimous judgment of the House that he ought to have but $4,500 for the next year. Is not that clear?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. RYAN. Then, if that be so, ought not the judgment of the House to be made effective by leaving that provision in the first section of the bill to operate upon it and prevent the officer collecting $500 more?

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the law forbids such a provision in the bill.

Mr. RYAN. It forbids legislation.

Mr. LONG. But the objection is made to the words in the first section, "in full compensation;" and all of these provisions to which the gentleman has referred are in connection with the first clause. You can not separate the two; they are all parts of one bill.

Mr. RYAN. You can not and ought not to separate them, and that is just the point I am making. Connected they may change existing law, but disconnected the words "in full compensation" can not be held to change existing law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me suggest this to the gentleman from Kansas. If you turn over in the bill and find a provision for the payment of the governor of a Territory, for instance, say $3,000, which by law is fixed at $5,000, why do you say the point of order applies to such a provision?

Mr. RYAN. Because it reduces the compensation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it does not. It is simply the appropriation of an amount to be applied to that salary.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. But in connection with these words on which the point of order is made it does change the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I admit that; but I say you can not make the point of order when you reach that clause.

Mr. RYAN. I do not agree with the gentleman. I believe when we reach any such provision the point of order can be successfully made against it, because, in view of the history of the rule and the discussion upon it when adopted, the Appropriations Committee can not report in an appropriation bill any reduction of salaries fixed by law, nor any increase of them. And when they undertake to do that in an appropriation bill every such provision is subject to the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I think the construction placed upon this question by the gentleman from Kansas is a correct one. The only language now before the Chair on which the point of order is based is the language which is embodied in the words "in full compensation," &c. Until you reach some of the items of the bill where the salaries are provided for by law I do not believe the point of order can be sustained. So far as the Chair in a parliamentary sense knows at this moment, there is not a single item in this bill, there is not a single salary provided for which has been fixed by law.

Mr. LONG. But the Chair is presumed to know the law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair is not presumed to know the contents of this bill until they are read in their regular order for action by the committee.

Mr. LONG. But this bill has been read at length.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And the only question before the Chair is whether the language which has been read—that is to say, the words to which I have referred, embodied in the first section of the bill—is subject to the point of order. You can not go beyond that and construe the language of a portion of the bill which has not been reached for present action.

Mr. HAMMOND. Has not this bill been read twice?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You can not now consider the language which is contained in the bill forty or fifty pages beyond the point which is under consideration.

Mr. LONG. But the whole bill has been read at length, and the Chair is supposed to know the law.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Certainly.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Are not these words presumably operative?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They are presumably operative as far as they go, or will be if they are adopted.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Well, can not the chairman then act upon that presumption until something else appears?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair can not act upon a presumption that there are items further on providing for salaries fixed by law. It would be a very violent presumption for the Chair, when a bill is before him embracing four or five hundred items, to look somewhere forward and carry the point of order to it. The only thing the Chair can take notice of is the language upon which the point of order is made and immediately under consideration. This language has not been adopted. It is not a part of the bill. The question for the Chair to decide is as to whether or not the language immediately under consideration is of itself obnoxious to the rule. That is all the Chair can determine.

When you get along further, and come to the case of the surveyor of Arizona, alluded to by my colleague [Mr. MORRISON] yesterday, if a previous law has fixed his salary, and we have not appropriated a sufficient amount to meet it, then this language may probably operate upon it and work a change of existing law, but no point of order can be made against such an item until we reach it.

Let me say another word. Those who have sat on this side of the House since I have been here have always professed to favor economy by reduction of salaries and offices. Several gentlemen on this side have lately made a good deal of reputation by proclaiming that we hold our seats here because we were sent here to retrench expenditure and to reduce salaries. These gentlemen know there are but two ways by which a salary can be reduced. One is to introduce a bill, secure its passage through both Houses, and then obtain the assent of the President. And that the only other way left is to reduce these salaries on an appropriation bill.

Now, what is the fact? Not one single gentleman now on this floor has introduced in this session, or at any time while a member of Congress, a bill reducing the salary of any officer of the Government. I feel I am perfectly warranted in making that statement, that there is not a member on this floor to-day, no matter if he has been here for years, who has ever introduced a bill reducing the salary of any officer of the Government. Well, what must we do? These gentlemen, having failed to introduce a bill reducing salaries, must confess, if they will be candid, that after having tied the hands of the Appropriation Committee and this House, so that we can not reduce a salary or abolish an office on appropriation bills, have not attempted to open the way for this being done otherwise, and therefore no such economy can occur in this Congress.

They say, "We have put fetters on your Committee on Appropriations; we have deprived you of the power you have hitherto been entitled to exercise of reducing salaries;" and knowing this can not otherwise be done, yet they clamor for such reduction of expenditures. Now they must confess the new rules are wrong in this particular or they ought to cease talking about economy by the reduction of salaries.

Mr. BLAND. I want to correct the statement of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not now.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman made a misstatement which he should permit me to correct now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well.

Mr. BLAND. I beg to state to the gentleman that Mr. Warner, of Tennessee, introduced a bill in the Forty-seventh Congress reducing all salaries. And let me say that I do not see why the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] could not have introduced a similar bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will look at the RECORD he will see that I confined my remark to gentlemen now here. My remark did not include Mr. Warner, of Tennessee, who is not now a member. I repeat that no gentleman now here has during his whole service in Congress introduced a bill reducing the salary of a single officer.

In the first place, it was useless to introduce a bill for that purpose, because even if it should pass through the Judiciary Committee or some other committee having jurisdiction it would not become law. It would be simply landed here in the morning hour and put upon the Calendar and buried there so deep that it never would be resurrected. It is folly to talk about reducing salaries in any other manner than on an appropriation bill.

If you gentlemen have willingly put into these rules a prohibition against the reduction of salaries by appropriation bills you have voted that you will not allow salaries to be reduced. I do not believe that was the intention of most of those who voted for that rule. I voted in favor of retaining in the rules that salutary provision of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was the author, prohibiting any change of law on an appropriation bill except to retrench expenditures or to reduce the number or salaries of officers. I deeply regretted when I saw that provision go out of the rules. It has saved millions of dollars to the tax-payers of the country. I protested against it then. I did not at first fully see the effect of the abrogation of that rule. I begin to see it now if the Chair holds we are powerless to reduce expenditures of this character on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, let me state to him that he has overlooked a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], and reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to reduce the salaries in the consular service, making a decrease, the report says, of $515,000 annually in the amount of salaries.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman has also forgotten the bill introduced by his colleague [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I had understood the bill reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] was for the purpose of reorganizing the consular service, but that in the aggregate it increased rather than reduced the salaries.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The contrary is shown by the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I introduced a bill with reference to the compensation of district attorneys and marshals which would result in the saving of more than half a million dollars a year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That bill has escaped my observation. I apprehend it is the only one that can be referred to, and my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] knows well it will never be heard of again in the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is a reflection on your colleague.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My colleague is a very ingenious, strong, and valuable member of Congress, but he has not power to pass bills unless the House is ready for such action. Any member can introduce a bill, but even my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], strong as he is, can not pass a bill without the help of a majority.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. He might try.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He knows the bill will never see daylight again after it takes its place on the Calendar.

If this point of order is sustained you may bid farewell to any hope of retrenchment or reduction of salaries in this Congress.

Mr. LONG. Perhaps you will change your rules.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this point of order. It has been already stated during this session of Congress that the amendment to this rule was radical. One reason that operated upon the minds of many members on this side of the House and induced them to vote in favor of amending the rule was that for a number of years past "riders" had been placed upon appropriation bills for the purpose of coercing the Senate and coercing the President. In other words, the House of Representatives had on various occasions, notably in 1878, sought, under the old rule, to put a grip about the neck of the President and say to him, "Assent to our view touching legislation, or else the Government shall not have the money that is necessary to carry it on." It was to prevent that kind of thing that this side of the House, as I understand it, voted for the modification of the rule.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if those riders were not put on the appropriation bills also for the purpose of forcing members of this House to vote for them who would not have voted for them as separate propositions?

Mr. CANNON. Possibly. But, Mr. Chairman, the rule was amended. That amendment was broad and radical, and whether I want to see this point of order sustained or not, whether I want to see any particular salary cut down or any particular salary raised or not, I am compelled to say that in my opinion the point of order is well taken. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the view that if his doctrine is to apply, and if the House under the present rule still has the power to make a limitation outside the permanent law and in its teeth, then by that same power of limitation we can not only reduce salaries, but necessarily we can increase salaries as well.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; because that would not be a limitation. The limitation is what I insist upon. That would not authorize any increase.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend say that the power of "limitation" which he claims, which would enable Congress to nullify the law by reducing compensation in any given case, would not also enable Congress in a proper case to nullify the law by increasing compensation? I need but state the proposition to show its absurdity.

Now, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana as well as of the Chair a step further. This bill does reduce a few salaries, but I undertake to say that the number of salaries increased in this bill in comparison with the current appropriation law is far greater than the number reduced. There are many officers provided for in this bill that do not have any status at all in existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the gentleman would name them.

Mr. CANNON. Well, my personal friend and the gentleman's political friend Mr. Stockslager, assistant commissioner of the General Land Office, has no standing, except from year to year, in the appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand the gentleman. There are many officials who are recognized only in the appropriations made by Congress from year to year for their compensation.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Of course I do not claim that I suppose my friend from Indiana was thinking about these pet Democratic lambs who are upon this bill and have no status in the general law when he was talking about "economy" and "reducing expenditures;" but the moment you establish the principle that, under the name of a "limitation," the law can be changed, that moment you establish a principle which will enable the majority of this House to run riot in the teeth of existing law and increase officers and salaries; and, while I am not going to charge that any gentleman upon the floor of this House has that object in view, yet I do say that if you were to retain power a great while and the rule should remain unchanged, that would be the result.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman say that the power to impose a limitation upon an officer or a salary implies the power to enlarge either? In other words, that the power to restrict implies the power to enlarge?

Mr. CANNON. I say that the rule as it now exists prohibits new legislation upon this bill; but if you can play this sharp game and say, "we will call it a limitation to reduce a salary," then by virtue of the same power of "limitation" you can increase a salary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to say a moment ago that this bill made an increase in the appropriations over the current year by reason of increase of salaries?

Mr. CANNON. In comparison with the current year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, this is mainly a bill of salaries, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amount of the bill, as presented to the House by the Committee on Appropriations, is about $800,000 below that for the current year.

Now, if we have made this reduction to the extent of $800,000, how can the gentleman claim that we have increased the appropriations by raising salaries?

Mr. CANNON. I have great respect personally for my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND]; but it has never been my fortune to stand upon the floor of the House and discuss a general principle or to see anybody else stand on this floor and discuss a general principle which might perchance in any of its ramifications make the least assault upon the Democratic party, when my friend and colleague has not felt called upon to jump up in the twinkling of an eye and misrepresent something or misstate something by withholding a part of the facts or somehow conjuring with the facts to try to mislead the House or the country.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have said nothing about the Democratic party; I only asked a question.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, that was where the shoe pinched. The other day in the course of the general debate I explained where these reductions were, and at the same time I pointed out some of the increases in salaries upon this bill. The House would not have patience with me if I were to go over that matter again. I have said all that I desire to say.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion on this point of order has been prolonged, and the Chair feels ready to decide it.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to make a single observation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] will proceed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I rose for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry, or rather two such inquiries—first, whether there is any way under the rules of stopping this, in my judgment, overdone debate; and, secondly, if there be any such method, whether it is not about time to put it in practice?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a matter within the discretion of the Chair how long the debate upon a point of order shall continue. The Chair has been trying to exercise that discretion justly.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Chairman, this being properly rather a legal than a strictly parliamentary question, I desire to submit a single observation. Under Rule XXI, which declares that no provision changing existing law shall be in order in any general appropriation bill or as an amendment thereto, it is maintained that the words in this bill to which the point of order is raised operate as a repeal by implication of an existing provision of statutory law, and that they are therefore not in order. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is well known that the law does not favor any repeal by implication, and only in cases where a subsequent provision of law is found to be totally irreconcilable with a pre-existing provision is a repeal by implication held to have resulted. The inquiry, therefore, it seems to me, is whether this proposed provision is necessarily in conflict and irreconcilable with the existing provision of the statute. If it is not irreconcilable, then I assume the former law is not repealed by implication, and hence the proposed provision in this bill does not change existing law.

Now is this provision in the legislative appropriation bill irreconcilable with the previously existing statute? Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that no provision were made in a given case for the payment of a salary fixed by a previous statute, or, rather, suppose that in this bill a part only of a given salary were appropriated, would the effect of the words "in full compensation thereof" be to change the pre-existing law, ex vi termini—by the mere force or meaning of the expression itself? If it would not, could not the official sought to be affected still properly insist upon his rights, if he saw proper, under the former provision?

Take the case of the omission to appropriate for the Mississippi River Commission. At the last session there was, as I understand, an entire omission to make any appropriation for the compensation of the board of commissioners on the improvement of the Mississippi River. It will not be insisted that that omission affected in any manner the previously existing law authorizing the appointment of a board of commissioners and the payment of their salaries?

Suppose the act to which I have referred had contained a provision appropriating $2,500 as the salary of each of those commissioners, and suppose the act had declared that such appropriation should be "in full compensation therefor," and the commissioners had thereupon accepted that compensation and receipted for it, that would have disposed of their claim for the then current fiscal year. But suppose that, under the present administration, there had been a change, as it has been fondly expected by some persons that there would be to some extent, in the constitution of that body, and suppose that the bill before us contained a similar provision and should become a law, and the gentlemen who had succeeded to those positions should refuse to accept the compensation provided by such an appropriation bill, would it be held that the law upon the subject of their salaries was necessarily changed notwithstanding the fact that they had refused to accept the compensation thus limited in the appropriation act?

It seems to me that the former law would still continue to exist. I submit that my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] who has control of this bill is correct in the position he assumes that the provision in this bill operates simply as a suspension of the pre-existing law. I submit that he is sustained in that position by the decision which has been cited in support of the opposite doctrine. The case of The United States vs. Fisher, which has been cited here from 109 United States Reports, was a case originating in the Court of Claims. Fisher was chief-justice of the Territory of Wyoming, and had been receiving a salary of $3,000 a year. In an appropriation act a limitation similar to that proposed in the present bill was imposed upon the amount of his salary. It was provided by the terms of that appropriation act that $2,600 should be appropriated in full compensation for his services. That amount was paid to and received by him under the provisions of the act; and he subsequently sued in the Court of Claims for the purpose of recovering the difference between the amount so paid to and accepted by him and the amount of salary authorized by the original act. Did the court hold in that case that the provision in the appropriation act operated to change the previously existing law? Did they hold that the previous act was repealed by implication? Did they say that the former law was no longer in existence by reason of the provision thus embodied in the appropriation act? No, sir; the court recites the fact that this sum had been received by Mr. Fisher as full compensation. From June 30, 1877, up to and including November 26, 1879, it is set forth he received without protest his compensation as chief-justice of Wyoming at the rate of $2,600 per annum.

Then, after considering the rule of construction and citing authority in support of the view they take, the court held that the later act must prevail, and that the earlier act must therefore for the time covered by the appropriation be considered as suspended. The result of these views was that the judgment of the Court of Claims which awarded payment of salary at $3,000 per annum from June 30, 1877, to June 30, 1879, was reversed, and the cause was accordingly remanded.

If in this case there is found this qualification attached to the appropriation of any given salary, and the present incumbent receives the compensation thus provided, he would come within the terms of the decision in the case of The United States vs. Fisher. But suppose when we come to appropriate next year there is no such limitation imposed in reference to the amount of salary in the appropriation act for that year, would the original act not be held to be still extant and in full force? And in the event the party was entitled to proceed in the Court of Claims would not the Supreme Court, following the doctrine laid down here, recognize his right to recover the full amount of his salary as provided by law? If I am correct in this construction of the clause in the present appropriation bill, it is not obnoxious to the objection made; and in view of the important consequences likely to result from the application of the doctrine that the point of order is well taken against the provision, I have ventured to submit these suggestions in the hope they may not be entirely without profit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in considering this question of order is not permitted to inquire into the wisdom of legislation or importance of legislation, but simply to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] whether or not it is in order to legislate on appropriation bills. It is conceded in the debate by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in the bill salaries have been reduced in amount from the general provision of law. The question, therefore, arises as to the construction of Rule XXI of the present House of Representatives. It is important we should go back to the Forty-fourth Congress and examine the rule there and the subsequent changes, with a view of ascertaining what the purpose of the House of Representatives was in relation thereto.

On page 193 of Barclay's Digest the rule is:

> No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures. (Rule 120.)

Complaint of the extraordinary exercise of power given to the Committee on Appropriations under this rule continued until the Forty-sixth Congress, when that rule was changed and the power of the committee was restricted, so as to read as follows:

> 3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Still there was complaint made of the extraordinary power given to the Committee on Appropriations by reason of this rule, and at that session of Congress the following was adopted in lieu thereof:

> 3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

All the qualifications of the rule of the preceding Congresses—Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth, and subsequently the Forty-seventh—have been restricted, and the rule is left as I have read it.

During the consideration of this question an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as has already been stated, a part of which is as follows:

> Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order upon any general appropriation bill, or be received as an amendment thereto; but provisions or amendments for the direct reduction of the number, salary, and compensation of officers and employés of the United States shall be in order on a general appropriation bill if germane to the subject-matter of the bill.

On this proposition there was a yea-and-nay vote, as follows: yeas 69, noes 205. I have, therefore, no difficulty in coming to a conclusion, in the light of the preceding rules and the action of the present House, that it is not in order to provide for the reduction of a salary on an appropriation bill where such salary has been fixed by law.

It was claimed by some gentlemen in the course of the debate that this is not a limitation upon a salary, but is a mere limitation upon the appropriation. The reduction of a salary in this way perhaps is an illustration as to what the word limitation upon an appropriation means. If so, it is quite easy to see what the present House of Representatives intended to do, to wit, to exclude what may be called limitations upon appropriation bills.

But it is argued by gentlemen that this does not repeal the law. The language of the rule is, "change existing law." Without this provision in this bill, under the operation of the general law fixing the salary during the fiscal year 1878, the officer would be entitled to the full amount of his salary; such would be the operation of law. He would be entitled to it by force of the statute; but this provision amends it to that extent, and is, therefore, a change of existing law in the opinion of the Chair.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. What does the Chair rule out as being within the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the whole clause should be excluded, that is to say, the words "in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year," &c., because it is provided in a subsequent part of the bill, as conceded in the debate as well as ascertained by the Chair upon an examination, there is a reduction of salary as fixed by law.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the words "in full compensation" were the only words to which exception was taken, and on which the point of order was made. Now, if all that clause be stricken out it strikes out the date of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made, and there is no time fixed within which the appropriation covered by the bill shall be available. I think, therefore, the Chair should only rule out that part of it to which exception was made; that is to say, the words "in full compensation."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct; and the Chair upon an examination accepts the suggestion. The words, therefore, "in full compensation" are ruled out.

The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 7 by adding the words:
"Provided, That none of the sums hereinafter appropriated shall be expended in payment of any salary to any person or employé in the service of the United States included in the classified civil service during furlough or leave of absence for a longer period of time than thirty days in any twelve months: And provided further, That when any person or employé in said classified civil service is necessarily absent from his post of duty for a longer period of time than thirty days in any twelve months it shall be lawful for the appointing power of the Department in which such person is employed to appoint from the eligible register of the United States Civil Service Commission a person to temporarily fill such position during the actual and necessary absence of such regular employé: And provided further, That said subemployé or temporary employé shall receive during his said employment the full amount of the salary of such absent employé."

Mr. HAMMOND. I make the point of order upon that it is new legislation. I do not know whether it is good or bad, but it is new.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not understand that any part of that amendment, except perhaps the last proviso, could be called in question under the rule as being out of order, nor could it be construed in any sense as new legislation.

I admit that the proviso, which makes provision for the temporary appointments of persons to these positions, is perhaps new legislation and may be subject to the point of order. If the point of order is made I shall ask to withdraw that part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made.

Mr. TAULBEE. If it be insisted upon I shall ask to withdraw that provision providing for temporary appointments. If then the point of order is further insisted upon, I desire to be heard for a moment upon it. I think, however, the Chair will be able to decide without debate as to whether or not it is new legislation, and I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee in discussing it at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

Senate:
For compensation of Senators, $380,000.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in the eleventh line, insert:
"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be available until the Senate shall confirm the pending Presidential appointment for register of deeds for the District of Columbia."

[Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Ohio knows that he is out of order; but if he desires to be heard I shall not press the point of order now.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not quite understand the gentleman. Is it proposed to accept the amendment?

Mr. HAMMOND. I said the gentleman knew it was out of order, but I had no objection to his being heard.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Well, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

I suppose the point of order is that this is new legislation. If this proposed amendment stood by itself I would not, I think, be in favor of it. But I propose it in order to harmonize with the bill, and that the bill generally may be unified. [Laughter.] I propose it also for the purpose of bringing out the latent power of this House to generally supervise all branches of the Government.

It may be observed that if we could exercise all that power that it seems we have we could do a great deal more than we have done hitherto and affect the action of the other branch of Congress, and might even go further. I wish, however, to refer the committee to some remarks that have been dropped during this discussion as an authority for the principle of this amendment. On page 5426 of the RECORD the gentleman having charge of this bill, speaking in relation to a provision in it much like this, used this language:

The House has not by any of its rules been deprived of a power when appropriating money to provide that it shall be expended in a specific manner and for a specific purpose. The House has not by its rules abandoned the power to legislate. It has not deprived itself of that power; that the House has still retained. It would be a strange thing indeed if the House had not retained the power of putting proper limitations on money which it votes in appropriation bills from the public Treasury.

That authority is found in the language of the very able parliamentarian who has this bill in charge, and the language was used in a discussion on a proviso added to the paragraph on page 19 of this bill, to wit:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointments from any one State, found duly qualified on examination and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

This provision I cite also as an authority in favor of my amendment. This provision was brought into this House by the Committee on Appropriations, at the head of which committee is the ablest parliamentarian, perhaps with one exception, in this body, and surely it is authority of some moment.

Let us see if the two cases are analogous. The Civil Service Commission, under the law by which it was created, had the power given it to form rules with the consent of the President of the United States, and when those rules were made and adopted they had all the force and effect of law. They had been formed, they had been made, they had been published; and now the Appropriations Committee proposes to pay that commission its salary—when? When the commission changes the law, thereby bringing directly to bear upon the commission the whole power of this House of Congress in directing legislation, for such it is.

Now that case stands in this way: By the law of Congress these gentlemen, officers of that commission, are entitled to their salaries, as members of this House are entitled to their salaries, as members of the Senate are entitled to their salaries. Without conditions, without any compulsion, they are entitled to the salaries fixed by law. But this committee says they shall not have those salaries until they do something which they have not done, until they do something which they think it is not right to do.

The amendment that I offer is not so strong a proposition against the existing ideas of this House as the provision of the bill which I cited as confirming the authority I have for offering the amendment, and which comes with the power of the reputation of this committe as parliamentarians.

I admit I know that in this provision which I have cited there are many elements of crime. I know that in this amendment which I suggest there are also some elements of crime, but not so many. It is proposed, in the first place, by the committee, on page 19, to offer a bribe to this commission, pure and simple: "Do differently from what you think your duty is or you shall have no pay; do it and you shall have your pay." There is the bribe. On the other hand, it conveys a threat—an unwarranted, wholesale, and illegal threat, one that would be punished in the State of Ohio by imprisonment in the penitentiary. And, thirdly, it says: "If you do not do that which you think is not your duty you shall have no salary, although the statute of the United States says you are entitled to it and you may have it."

Mr. Chairman, if this authority which I have cited is good authority it sustains the propriety, legality, and order of my amendment. If it is not good authority then I concede that my amendment is out of order. Mr. Chairman, you may remember that at one time two noted theologians met in debate upon an important question of theology, and the debate resulted in each converting the other. I am rather inclined to think that my remarks have converted me to the position of my friend from Georgia who objected to this amendment. I hope they have converted him to the position I occupied a few minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk began to read the next paragraph.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I have not withdrawn my amendment, and the question of order is still to be decided by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question of order.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. In what way?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am much obliged to the Chair. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendent of the document-room (Amzi Smith) $2,592.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order that the insertion of the name there, "Amzi Smith," is new legislation, and I move to strike it out.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, this amounts to the appointment by law of the superintendent of the Senate document-room, and the House has no right to participate in the appointment of officers or employés of the Senate. What I have to say as to this point of order I desire to apply also to line 194, line 241——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that that part of the bill has not yet been reached.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that. I am merely calling attention to the parts of the bill to which I wish the remarks I now make to apply. I desire them to apply to lines 194, 274, 302, 304, and 314. These provisions constitute a series of appointments of clerks and employés of various kinds by law. Under Article I, section 2, clause 5, of the Constitution it is declared that the House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers. By section 3 of that article, clause 5, it is declared that the Senate shall choose their officers——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to make a suggestion. I understand that this name, which it is proposed to strike out, is inserted in the bill in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate. This gentleman has been put upon the roll by a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. Whatever the Senate may do, this House has no right to participate in the appointment of any of the Senate's officers. Further, in reference to this case and the other cases which I have indicated, this Congress has no right to appoint officers or employés for another Congress. The officers and employés of the House of Representatives, as well as the Speaker, are to be elected, selected, or appointed, as the case may be, for the current Congress, and one Congress can not select officers either by law or otherwise for another Congress and prevent that succeeding Congress from choosing its own officers under the Constitution. Take this case of Mr. Amzi Smith, if this provision should become a law in this form and he should resign or die, the Senate would be without a superintendent of its document-room and without the means of paying one, for it could not take the $2,592, payable to Mr. Smith and pay it to another person. And the same is true with reference to each of these other cases of persons who have been selected and named to be appointed by law, not in accordance with the Constitution nor with the powers of this House. If this bill in its present form should become a law, and any of these persons should resign or die, the office would be vacant with no one to pay the salary to, for it can not be assumed that what is appropriated as a salary of a particular man by name can be paid to another man. This kind of legislation is an attempt to take away from Congress the power to select a portion of its own officers. It is true that this bill provides appropriations for the current year commencing the 1st day of July next, and it might apply to these officers up to the 4th day of March, but it could not apply to them after the 4th of March, for this House will cease to exist on that day.

We can no more choose officers for a succeeding Congress than we can elect a Speaker for that succeeding Congress. If we can during this Congress choose, either by law, election, or appointment, a Speaker for the next House, then we can during this Congress choose by law, election, or appointment officers for the next House, but not otherwise.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, I think that this whole practice of selecting men for these positions and naming them in the law is improper in itself, and has its origin in personal favoritism. It has the purpose of excluding the power of the appointing officer to make other appointments if he should think it necessary, and of preventing competition for these positions. Besides being contrary to the rules of the House and in violation of the Constitution it is improper in principle. I do not care how good these officers may be. I know some of them to be excellent officers, and if I were called upon to fill their places I think I should select them in preference to any others, but I would do it at the right time and in a constitutional manner.

There is no authority for undertaking to elect or appoint men to office by law. A provision of this kind adopts a principle which would exclude fair competition for official positions as well as deny to those who have the right to make these appointments the authority which belongs to them.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. He would be glad to hear the gentleman from West Virginia, but is fully satisfied on this question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the point of order is sustained, I have nothing further to say.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CANNON. What was the ruling of the Chair on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I wanted to be heard, but I suppose it is too late. The Chair has decided the point of order without hearing from the other side. Perhaps we may have a chance to discuss this question later.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is the Chair unwilling to hear argument on the other side of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is fully satisfied of the propriety of sustaining the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol police:

For one captain, $1,600; three lieutenants, at $1,200 each; twenty-two privates, at $1,100 each; and eight watchmen, at $900 each; in all $36,600, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PRICE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 164 to 170 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"For Capitol police $10,000, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Speaker: For private secretary to the Speaker, $1,800; clerk to the Speaker, $1,600; clerk to the Speaker's table, $1,600; in all, $5,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by striking out "six" and inserting "eight," in line 185; so as to make the salary of the clerk at the Speaker's table $1,800.

Mr. MORRISON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I have to say is that there is no law authorizing this increase of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Chaplain of the House, $900.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana; Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to strike out the line just read. It seems to me that this is a very appropriate time for me to relieve somewhat the monotony of discussions upon points of order and to submit a few suggestions on civil-service reform. I have no desire to revive the memories of the unfortunate conflict through which the nation has passed. If there is a single personal bitterness or sectional hate still lingering as the result of that conflict, I would, so far as I could, send it with Uncle Toby's oath to Heaven's chancery and let the tear of pity fall and blot it out forever.

But there is something due to truth, something due to history; and I desire to correct a statement inadvertently made by my amiable friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in his speech of yesterday. I do this for fear that with his growing imagination the time may come (for he is yet a young man) when he will believe in truth he put down the rebellion all himself. [Laughter.] He says in the first place:

I tell you, gentlemen, that if the long roll could be called of the dead and the living who fought for the Union in the late war, and their political sentiments could be ascertained, you would find that a majority of these were Democrats.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of very little importance whether they were Democrats or not. I have the same admiration for the gallantry and patriotism of one who differs from me in politics that I have for the same qualities in one who is in political sympathy with me. But what are the facts? I have here, compiled from authentic records, the votes of the soldiers of those States who, by the laws existing at that time, were permitted to vote. In the year 1862 the States of Colorado, Iowa, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin voted in the field. The aggregate Republican vote was 27,820, the aggregate Democratic vote 6,454, the majority for the Republican ticket being 21,466.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to those provisions in this bill which increase the salaries allowed by existing law. But it is hardly worth while to address myself to those provisions since the Chair has decided that they are out of order.

But I wish to say one word to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], who has expressed himself so kindly in reference to those who have differed with him upon the questions of the past. I believe that England to-day, with her monarchical government, is as proud of the record of Cromwell, who overthrow monarchies and beheaded kings, as of any other Englishman. I believe that France to-day is as proud of the achievements of Napoleon and his armies under the empire as of anything ever achieved in that country under a republican form of government. If I have read history aright, it shows that intelligent and patriotic people of every country are proud of the patriotism and courage and genius of their own people in whatever contest, even among themselves, those qualities may have been shown.

If that has been true of the past I dare nothing in saying that the time not only has come, but will come with emphasis when the American people will not only not cast reflections upon those who were upon one side or the other and seek to arouse partisan feeling and bitterness, but that when the skill and the genius and bravery of Sheridan upon the one side and Jackson upon the other and Grant upon the one side and Lee upon the other are mentioned they will be recognized as true types of American soldiers, of American valor, American skill, and American genius in the arts of war. Again, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further upon this subject, this bill undertakes here by legislation to retain certain names in it to which I am opposed, and they ought to be ruled out all through the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have been.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois says they have been ruled out. They ought to be ruled out, every one of them. We have no right to legislate for the next Congress.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Continuing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I find that in 1863 there was an election in which the soldiers of the States of California, Iowa, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin were allowed to vote in the field, and in 1864 the same privilege was accorded the soldiers of Maine, New Hampshire, Ohio, Vermont, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, and a number of other States, the record of which I will print in full. In these States in these years soldiers in the field were, as I have said, permitted to cast their votes for the party of their choice.

Mr. CURTIN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken, I think.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In the last year, it will be remembered, Mr. Lincoln was a candidate upon the one side and the distinguished soldier, now dead, General McClellan, upon the other. I will put in the RECORD tabulated statements of these votes; but simply desired to state them here to show in the aggregate that 82 per cent. of the soldiery voted the Republican ticket at these elections.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It shows all who fought were for the Union.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman, were Democrats voting for Lincoln?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, sir; Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order. The five minutes upon the other side have been already occupied by the gentleman from Indiana; and as he has expressed great reluctance to discuss war issues I insist that he should be relieved under the rules of the House from the necessity of doing so.

Mr. CURTIN. I beg leave to correct the gentleman from Indiana. Under a decision of the Supreme Court the soldiers did not vote in 1863.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Now, continuing further, I read another extract from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois. He says:

I am warranted in making the statement, sir, that if you will ascertain the number of Republican soldiers who have been removed from office under this administration it can be shown that an equal number of Democratic soldiers have been appointed. Has the President not the right when a vacancy occurs in an office filled by a Union soldier to select a Democratic soldier to fill his place?

I have here, sir, a paper published at the capital of my State, in which it is said of the Democratic postmaster of that city that—

The Grand Army men are lodging complaints against Jones for the wholesale discharge of crippled Union soldiers in the Indianapolis post-office. Jones has been in office now for a little more than a year. In this time he has discharged about twenty-five Union soldiers, some of them badly wounded and disabled. Their places have been filled by ward heelers of the worst sort. Not a single Union soldier has been appointed by Mr. Jones, and not a single Republican has obtained employment in his office under the civil-service examinations had from time to time.

This charge has been often repeated in the Indiana press, and has passed without challenge. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that Dr. Hunter, the gentleman appointed on the recommendation of my colleague, Judge HOLMAN, as collector of one of the districts of Indiana, has removed fifteen or twenty Union soldiers, and has largely supplied their places from the ranks of civil life. I do not know—my colleague, who is in hearing, knows—whether this be true or not; but I say to the gentleman that in my own knowledge within my own Congressional district a widow of a pensioned soldier, of a soldier who was disabled in his country's service, was turned out of a little post-office, which furnished her a meager support, and her place was supplied by an able-bodied man. I know of a number of instances in which crippled Union soldiers were removed from office, and one case where a soldier halting through the world upon a wooden leg was removed to give place to an able-bodied man; and while I do not know that these matters are of interest to the committee, or even to the Democratic party, I make the statement in order that these assertions of my friend from Illinois may not go upon the record unchallenged. The time is coming when the books will be opened, and we will see who have been the friends of the soldier of the Union. And now, with the permission of the committee, after putting the promised election statement on the record, I will extend my remarks on other branches of the subject.

There was no objection.

In 1862 Union soldiers were permitted to vote in the field in five States only. That vote was as follows:

States.	Republican.	Democratic.	Republican majority.
Colorado	567	12	555
Iowa	14,874	4,115	10,759
Missouri	2,139	7	2,132
Pennsylvania	1,867	274	1,593
Wisconsin	8,373	2,046	6,827
Totals	27,820	6,454	21,466

Percentage: Republican, 81.13; Democratic, 18.87.

In 1863 the soldiers' vote was as follows, to wit:

States.	Republican.	Democratic.	Republican majority.
California	4,143	140	4,003
Iowa	17,041	3,004	14,037
Missouri	8,827	777	8,050
Ohio	46,315	2,391	39,224
Pennsylvania	1,392	53	1,339
Wisconsin	9,257	747	8,510
Totals	82,275	7,112	75,163

Percentage: Republican, 92; Democratic, 8.

In 1864 the soldiers' vote was as follows, to wit:

States.	Lincoln.	McClellan.	Lincoln's majority.
Maine	4,174	741	3,433
New Hampshire	2,066	690	1,376
Vermont	243	49	194
Pennsylvania	26,712	12,349	14,363
Maryland	2,800	321	2,479
Ohio	41,146	9,757	31,389
Michigan	9,402	2,959	9,442
Iowa	15,178	1,364	13,814
Wisconsin	11,372	2,458	8,914
California	2,600	237	2,303
Kansas	2,867	543	2,324
Kentucky	1,194	2,823
Totals	119,754	34,291	85,463

These votes are an emphatic contradiction of the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to destroy a vital feature in the civil-service act by making the appropriation of the money necessary to its due execution dependent on the condition that the rules governing the selection of public servants be so changed as to give easy opportunity for making appointments exclusively from one political party. The change proposed is radical, and if coerced will insure a return to the old method of rewarding "party zeal" and disregarding proved competency and personal merit. It is evident that this change is suggested by the greed of the place-hunters. The spoilsman is to have a chance.

There is a statesmanship, sir, that has no Sinai higher than an official position and whose decalogue begins and ends with "To the victors belong the spoils." These profess to believe that when Grover Cleveland was elected to the Presidency the election carried with it to the Democratic party every office within the control of the Executive, little and big, from a spittoon-cleaner or towel-washer to a Cabinet minister. It strikes me that is too broad a claim for the size of the victory. Sir, although Mr. Cleveland was elected, he was not the choice of a majority of the legal votes cast in 1884. Of a total vote of 10,056,347 his vote was but 4,911,017, or 234,313 less than a majority. His majority over his principal competitor was less than 63,000.

And I assert, Mr. Chairman, that this victory was only made possibly by the pretense that the Democratic party was, in good faith, in favor of a non-partisan reform in the civil service. Confiding and over-credulous men of Republican antecedents voted the Democratic ticket upon the faith of these promises. Had the spoils system been asserted then as it is proclaimed now by the leaders, to be Democracy pure and simple, there would have been another defeat for that oft-defeated party. To desert the civil-service policy now is to betray the allies who made Democratic success possible. The Republican party was defeated because the adherents of Mr. Cleveland pledged themselves that he would inaugurate salutary reforms in the civil service of the country.

The orators of the Democracy talked glibly of the monstrous abuses that had grown up under the Republican system, as they said, of partisan appointments, and held up their new gospel of civil-service reform as a political short cut to all that was pure and honest in government. To be sure, these pretensions were absurd. Those who were induced to believe that the men who won at the election two years ago would prove to be the champions of a wholesome reform are disenchanted now. No one disputes that the administration was fully committed to the policy embodied in the Pendleton bill, the policy which in its most essential feature this appropriation bill seeks to nullify. It was indorsed in Chicago; it was repeated in the letters of acceptance by the national candidates; and this policy was emphasized by the President in his inaugural.

If it is possible to commit the Democratic party to any policy it is committed to this. It was committed to it in its national platforms long before the convention at Chicago. It gave it a specific and unqualified indorsement in the most statesmanlike platform it ever made or is ever likely to make. And this was done in a convention the history of which will rescue modern Democracy from oblivion. I refer to the convention and platform adopted at Baltimore in 1872. I quote from that platform:

The civil service of the Government has become a mere instrument of partisan tyranny and personal ambition and an object of selfish greed. It is a scandalous reproach upon free institutions, and breeds a centralization dangerous to the perpetuity of republican government. We therefore regard a thorough reform of the civil service as one of the most pressing necessities of the hour; that honesty and capacity and fidelity constitute the only valid claims to public employment; that the offices of the Government cease to be a matter of arbitrary favoritism and patronage; and that public station shall again become a post of honor.

Do the Democracy stand on this doctrine now? If not, why not? Was this grand declaration honest then, or was it a sham and a fraud? Was it announced to be put into execution, or was its only purpose to influence votes? Are we to understand that there is no such thing as good faith in politics?

The principles of the platform of 1872 have been reasserted in every Democratic national convention since then. A civil-service plank as clear in its language, as lofty in its declamation, and as captivating in its promises of reform was adopted at New York in 1876, and was written by Samuel J. Tilden himself. The administration party must face these declarations and abide them, or confess that it did not intend to keep these promises when they were made.

I have little reason to doubt the sincerity of the President. That he desires to redeem his pledges to the people by a firm enforcement of the statute is evinced by every public utterance. In his letter to Dorman B. Eaton of September 11, 1885, he said:

I believe in civil-service reform and its application in the most practicable form attainable, among other reasons because it opens the doors for the rich and the poor alike to a participation in public place-holding; and I hope the time is at hand when all our people will see the advantage of a reliance for such an opportunity upon merit and fitness, instead of a dependence upon the caprice or selfish interest of those who impudently stand between the people and the machinery of their Government. In the one case, a reasonable intelligence and the education which is freely furnished or forced upon the youth of our land are the credentials to office. In the other, the way is found in favor secured by a participation in partisan work, often unfitting a person morally, if not mentally and physically, for the responsibilities and duties of public employment.

I wish I could impress the truth that "a favor secured by participation in partisan work often unfits one morally, if not mentally and physically, for the responsibilities and duties of public employment" on the place-hunters of to-day who seek to destroy the law.

But the party is drifting away from its chief. It is not in harmony with him on any important question. It has no sympathy with him on matters of finance, and on the question of reforming the civil service it is preparing for open revolt.

There should be no surprise, sir, at the return of the Democracy to the spoils system. The piratical declaration that "to the victors belong the spoils" is the coinage of a Democratic brain. The system was first put into practice under a Democratic administration. Why, sir, Washington, during his eight years of administration, made but nine removals; John Adams but nine, and none of these because of offensive partisanship. Although Mr. Jefferson made thirty-nine official changes he most solemnly declared that none of them were influenced by political considerations. Madison removed five; Monroe nine, and John Quincy Adams, "the noblest Roman of them all," but two. Mr. Benton tries to vindicate Jackson from the odium of having first inaugurated the policy of punishing political opponents by indiscriminate removals from office. A recent writer says:

He [Benton] shows clearly by reference to the Government archives that, of nearly eight thousand postmasters, only four hundred and ninety-one were removed by Jackson in the time mentioned by De Tocqueville, and that, of the many thousands of removable officials, the total removals were six hundred and ninety for all causes; while a majority of the incumbents were political opponents during the entire administration. "General Jackson," says Mr. Benton, "on his accession to the Presidency, was in a new situation in respect to parties, different from that of apy President since Jefferson, whom he took for his model and whose rule he followed. He made many removals, and for cause, but not so many as not to leave a majority in office against him. Yet he came into office under circumstances well calculated to excite him to make removals. None of his political friends, though constituting a great majority of the people of the United States, had been appointed to office during the preceding administration, and such an exclusion could not be justified by any consideration. It was a change of administration, in which a change of Government functionaries to some extent became a right and a duty; but, still, the removals actually made, when political, were not merely for opinions, but for conduct under these opinions."

Notwithstanding this defense, history records the fact that in the single year of 1829 Jackson's administration guillotined six hundred and ninety Whigs, and over two thousand officials were removed altogether by him.

Whatever may be true as to Jackson's administration, it is undeniable that his successors, from Van Buren to Buchanan, conferred office on their party followers only, and summarily removed from office all who differed from them in political opinion. With this record behind it, who could expect any reform in the civil service from that party? I have repeated this history also to show that if the old system resulted in conferring office on men who had no fitness for public employment but their fealty to party, it was an evil not discovered by the Democracy until the Republicans secured control of the patronage of the Government.

But why this sudden hostility? Why should this law be repealed or even crippled? When the Republicans were in control of the Government the gentlemen on the other side were zealous in its support. They demanded its passage, they supported it, and clamored for its enactment. Do you want the spoils for your henchmen, and is this law in your way? The Democracy this day are in possession of nearly every office worth the having. The heads of Departments and of bureaus are all in its keeping. The foreign service, consular and diplomatic, is filled with the friends of the administration. The Territorial offices have been given to the faithful. The post-offices that are worth the taking are in Democratic hands. The confidential circular of the Postmaster-General has done a perfect work, and no offensive Republican survives.

All over the country soldiers' widows have been removed to make room for able-bodied men, and crippled veterans made to give way to civilians. The work is going on, and soon no Republican will be left. A few Republican clerks remain, and they are kept in a constant state of alarm. Every day the public press gives the names of unfortunates whose heads are in the basket of the executioner. Even with such protection as the civil-service law affords it will not be long before the spoils will all, or nearly all, be in the Democratic household. Be patient, gentlemen! There is no necessity for haste. Some device will be discovered by you by which the law will be avoided. When the Postmaster-General discovered that to edit a Republican newspaper, to belong to a Republican committee, to make contributions to Republican campaigns, or, in fact, to be an honest and outspoken Republican, was to be an offensive partisan and make one subject to removal for cause, the Democratic heart was glad. This circular was a bald perversion of the law, in its letter and its spirit.

The very essence of the civil-service law is to prevent the question of partisan politics from being considered in making appointments or removals from office. I refer to the class of offices covered by its provisions. These offices were not to be given as a reward for party services, nor was want of fealty to the party in power to be punished by removal. These questions were to be decided on merit. If the officer was faithful and capable he was to be retained; and if the applicant proved his moral and mental fitness to the satisfaction of the commission he was entitled to an appointment.

Partisan politics were to be absolutely excluded from consideration in this connection. If this is not the spirit of this law it has none. If it does not mean this it is a miserable fraud. One of the most attractive features of the law is the fact that it leaves both the applicant and the employé free to speak and act as American citizens without the hazard of losing their places. It was the purpose of this law to require of the public servant fitness, competency, fidelity—to accept nothing less, to require nothing more. How did the offensive-partisan circular operate? Always to remove a Republican, and always to put a Democrat in his place. A Republican editor, or committeeman, or contributor to a campaign fund is displaced to make room for a Democratic editor or committeeman or contributor.

True, the civil-service law was not violated in these cases, for it does not apply to postmasters, but this action was a wide departure from the declared policy of the President and a flagrant disregard of the tenure-of-office act. I speak of this new crime of offensive partisanship because it has been made to do its miserable work in almost every room in all the Executive Departments. It has been made to do service in securing the removal of the humblest Republican officials.

I do not say that political considerations should not in many instances influence both appointments and removals. There are certain agents of the administration to whom are committed the high trust of shaping and executing its policy, foreign and domestic. These have the guardianship of the principles and aims of the party in power. Those intrusted with this responsibility should be in accord with the administration, and in selecting these political considerations must be regarded. A free-trade policy should not be left to the mercy of protectionists, nor could the enforcement of the law for the reform of our civil service be confided with safety to officials who denounce it and seek to nullify it.

The policy of a party, when that policy is indorsed by a free election, becomes the policy of the people and it should be put in the hands of its friends. No one questions this. In selecting agents of this class, however, the public good demands the employment of the best available material, and party fealty should not be regarded to the exclusion of moral and mental fitness. No amount of partisan service will excuse the appointment of an unfit person to office.

But, gentlemen, there is a class of public servants whose duties are wholly ministerial, whose employment has no relation to the policy on which the Government is to be administered. What have the laborers, watchmen, messengers, doorkeepers, copyists, accountants, and the multitude of employés of this class in the several Departments to do with questions of public concern? Nothing in the world. They influence a policy only to the extent of their individual votes. In the workshop of the mechanic, in the counting-room of the merchant, or on the fields of the farm they are as important partisan factors as when in public employment.

Why, then, should the partisan test be applied in selecting these agents? Whatever party may be in power the Government is still the Government of the people—the whole people. The 5,000,000 voters who withheld their support from Mr. Cleveland at the late election are still citizens. They pay taxes for the nation's support and bear arms in its defense. The result of the Presidential election relieved them from no burden—from no responsibility. Are these people, these five million people who bear their full share of every burden, to be declared ineligible to even the smallest office in the gift of the administration? Such a position is monstrous.

But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, before proceeding further I desire to notice the charge so freely indulged in in this debate by the other side of the House, that the civil service was fearfully degraded by the Republican party, that it had brought reproach on the people by appointing unprincipled men to office. It is an old saying, sir, that "the teaching of the priest is not worth much who discourses of honesty with a stolen goose in his sleeve." It ill becomes a party that in the first year of its power made such significant mistakes as the appointment of Judd, Miere and Dunton, Tyrer and Conroy, Pollard, Downey, and a host of others of like ilk to preach purity and honesty to any other party.

I think this administration, brief as has been its reign, has learned—

> That pious ecstacies are easier far
> Than virtuous deeds.

After all its promises and virtuous resolves it has not been able to keep its own press from charging its highest officials with most reprehensible conduct, and already the Credit Mobilier has found its parallel in the Pan-Electric scandal.

It would be well, I think, for the fierce Democracy to cry now—to sweeten this offensive stench.

> An ounce of civet, good apothecary—

I deny that the Republicans gave the country a debauched civil service. That their confidence was at times betrayed by bad men I do not deny; that some of their chosen servants proved to be disreputable men and were guilty of crime I admit. Every recreant was prosecuted as far as it was possible to do so.

But, sir, he who claims that honesty belongs to one party to the exclusion of others is a demagogue. Dishonest men abide in every church and every political organization. And who so silly as to suppose it possible to select an army of officials from the masses without catching now and then a scoundrel? All experience proves that when large sums of money pass through the hands of many agents, whether of private or public employment, there will be losses and embezzlements. Ask your bankers, merchants, and corporation officials for their experience. These things will happen until human nature is wholly reconstructed. What are the facts as to the administration of the Government by the Republican party for the twenty-four years beginning in 1861?

The history of those years must not be forgotten. It must be remembered that it had to contend with the demoralizations incident to civil war. The rebellion more than quadrupled our expeditures and our public servants. Our annual revenues rapidly rose from $90,000,000 to $450,000,000. At one time our outlay reached nearly $800,000,000 in a single year. Is it to be expected that no more will be lost in transacting a business of four hundred millions than one of ninety millions? Is it to be expected that one hundred thousand servants will yield no larger number of disreputable men than twenty thousand? I insist that, tested by the facts, the Republican party gave the people as wise, as patriotic, as pure, and as efficient civil service as they ever had at any time in the history of the Republic.

It is oft-repeated and uncontradicted history that of all the vast sums of money Republican administrations held in trust for the people, the loss was but about one-fifteenth of 1 cent on each $100. Hundreds of millions of dollars of internal-revenue taxes were collected and disbursed without the loss of a penny. The most prudent and skillful men have never been able to conduct their private business with a smaller margin of losses. The Republican party challenges the closest scrutiny of its record, and refutes declamation by interposing unimpeachable history. It has turned the public revenues over to its successor to the last mill, and for fifteen months its books and records have been in the keeping of its political adversaries, and no crimes or frauds have been unearthed or even suggested.

It is true that the Republican party did not in the earlier years of its supremacy inaugurate a method for reforming our civil service. It had to deal with a bloody rebellion which occupied its every thought. It accepted the civil-service system as it found it. The system came to it from its Democratic predecessor, sanctified by forty years of unbroken Democratic practice.

The history of this reform legislation is brief and well known. President Grant saw the evil of what is justly called the spoils system, and in his message of December 5, 1870, call the attention of Congress to it in these words:

> Always favoring practical reforms, I respectfully call your attention to one abuse of long standing which I would like to see remedied by Congress. It is a reform in the civil service of the country. I would have it go beyond the mere fixing of the tenure of office for clerks and employés who do not require the advise and consent of the Senate to make their appointments complete. I would have it govern not the tenure but the manner of making all appointments. There is no duty which so much embarrasses the Executive and the heads of the Departments, nor is there any such arduous and thankless labor imposed on Senators and Representatives as finding places for constituents. The present system does not secure the best men, and often not fit men for public place. The elevation and purification of the civil service of the Government will be hailed with approval by the whole people of the United States.

Here a Republican President sixteen years ago calls the attention of Congress to this "abuse of long standing," and urges the assistance of Congress to the end that the civil service may be elevated and purified and that honesty and efficiency may be enforced in all the public employments.

The Forty-first Congress, at President Grant's suggestion, passed the following:

> That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as will best promote the efficiency thereof and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter; and for this purpose the President is authorized to employ suitable persons to conduct said inquiries, to prescribe their duties, and to establish regulations for the conduct of persons who may receive appointments in the civil service.

The President, under the authority of this act, at once convened a board of gentlemen decidedly favorable to the proposed reforms and eminently qualified for the work assigned them to suggest regulations for the admission of persons to office. On this commission were such men as Mr. Cattell of New Jersey, Mr. Medill of Illinois, and Mr. George W. Curtis of New York. These gentlemen engaged cheerfully in the business committed to them, and gave the President, among other things, the plan of competitive examination.

In his annual message of 1871 the President advised Congress of the progress made, and assured the people that he would give the system suggested by the board a fair trial. He indorsed this work of reform with his characteristic zeal. I will not detail the embarrassments which beset the effort to put this reform into operation. It made slow progress. Reforms, sir, are of slow growth. They do not come full-grown, as it is said Minerva did from the brain of Jupiter. They require years for their full development. From 1870 forward the subject was agitated by the press and the people. The Democratic national convention of 1876 said:

> Reform is necessary in the civil service. Experience proves that efficient, economical administration of governmental business is not possible if its civil service be subject to change at every election, be a prize fought for at the ballot-box, be a brief reward for party zeal instead of posts of honor assigned for proved competency and held for fidelity in the public employ; that the dispensing of patronage should neither be a tax upon the time of all our public men nor the instrument of their ambition.

This is sound doctrine, but it was but an echo of Grant's message. It steadily gained strength until it was embodied in the present law by the votes of both branches of Congress and of both political parties. The measure was proposed by a distinguished Democratic Senator, it was supported by Democrats in both the House and Senate, and is now unreservedly indorsed by a Democratic President. It passed the House of Representatives by a majority of more than 3 to 1, and it was put on its passage on the motion of a most distinguished member of that party—Mr. Cox, of New York. My colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] voted for it, and if I remember correctly it was not opposed by one of my Democratic colleagues.

But the Republican party was in power then! It controlled the patronage of the Government in that day, and this law was for it. Now matters are reversed; the Government is in the hands of the Democratic party, and when the law for which its representatives voted and which was repeatedly indorsed by its leaders and in its conventions is thrust between its henchman and the spoils there is an universal wail of pain and despair. The civil-service law was passed by a Republican Congress and was faithfully executed by a Republican President. The whole Democratic party was committed to it by its platforms and it went into power upon the promise that it should be the corner-stone of its administration.

I am not willing to see the President rebuked for attempting to carry out his pledges. I desire, moreover, to see this law fully tested. The idea embodied in it is right. I am not willing to say that the end has been reached, but all candid men must admit that the President is on the right road. Let us see what has been accomplished. Competitive examinations, as one of the measures for ascertaining the fitness of persons for office, have been adopted. That this plan has much of good in it to the service and the people will not, I think, be seriously questioned by any one.

It takes the patronage out of the hands of political jobbers who thrust their friends on the appointing power and demand places for them because of their labors and zeal as partisans without regard to their moral or intellectual fitness. It encourages effort and education and excites in the applicant a laudable ambition to excel in his acquirements. It offers a reward to merit and furnishes an incentive to honesty and industry.

It relieves the President, members of Congress, and the chiefs of the Departments of an army of hungry place-hunters who have nothing to commend them but their greed for office and the brazen and persistent impudence with which they press their claims. It will give modest and unpretentious worth an opportunity. It will also, in some measure, relieve the appointing power from the fearful responsibilities of the present system.

This is the policy the President is seeking to enforce and these are the results he is laboring faithfully to achieve. He is fully committed to these measures and to the important reform, to secure which they are intended to contribute. The work is but begun; it will take time to perfect the system. The reformer must be patient.

I do not see in the plan adopted all that will be required to complete the work of regeneration and purification. Competitive examinations and the abolition of political tests are important and gratifying steps in the direction of thorough reform, but they will possibly fall short of meeting all the wants and supplying all the defects of the past civil-service system. You may ascertain one's proficiency in the sciences, he may be crammed with all the learning of the schools and yet be radically unfit for the employment he seeks. He may be indolent or dishonest, or a mere theorist, and prove a failure when put to the test of real work.

It is not improbable in many instances the candidate passing the ordeal of an examination may wholly fail in the practical discharge of the administrative duties to which he may be assigned. I am ready to believe that a person may not answer correctly so many questions from the books as another, and yet in fact make the better and more efficient clerk. The one may be active and vigilant, the other slow, indolent, and inattentive. My conviction is that after all is accomplished that can be by examinations the Government must protect itself from incompetency and dishonesty by at once discharging from its employment every one who does not bring to its service the requisite ability, and bringing to immediate disgrace and punishment every man who prostitutes his office to dishonest and corrupt purposes.

The rule should be inflexible that none but the honest and capable should secure and retain places in the public service. The measures adopted are important helps in the work of reform, and others will be suggested as we go forward. We must strike at the root of the evil. Every man who has a position under the Government should be made to know that he holds it only on condition that he performs his duties with the strictest fidelity. He should be made to feel that he owes his position to no party and that no man can keep him in place if he is unfaithful or protect him from disgrace and punishment if he shall prove dishonest.

The Republican party is fully committed to a reform in the civil-service system. It has in convention, on behalf of its four and a half million voters, declared itself in favor of a system that "will abolish the evils of patronage and make honesty, efficiency, and fidelity essential qualifications for public positions."

Mr. Chairman, I regard this as purely a business question. The Government is but an organized community for the protection of life, liberty, and property; to guard the rights and redress the wrongs of the individual members. It secures these ends through agents known as office-holders, who are selected to perform certain duties, and are paid for these services from the earnings of the whole people. These office-holders are the agents of all. The want is an efficient, just, and economical service, and this can only be had by the employment of the capable and the faithful. Now, whether the civil-service rules need reforming or not, it is certain that to bestow office as a mere reward for party work will not give the people a good and an honest service.

The partisan test tends to destroy freedom of thought and independence of action and to make the appointee the mere creature of the man or party to whom he is indebted for his place. It puts fealty to party above fidelity to duty. It promotes the debauching idea that the chief end of government is not to reform abuses and promote the general welfare, but to distribute the spoils. It breeds a horde of creatures who are ready at the dictation of their bosses to engage in disreputable practices to control conventions and elections.

I put down among the dangers of the spoils system that in the selection of its instruments it disregards moral and intellectual worth and personal fitness that it may reward mere partisan zeal or cunning; that it tends to put public interests into the hands of unscrupulous political bosses in return for questionable party services; that it results in creating additional and unnecessary places and in enlarging official emoluments that it may increase party power by adding to its capital; that it stimulates election frauds and mob violence at the polls and nearly every crime that has been committed against the elective franchise. It often results in depriving the people of efficient, honest, and economical government by denying them the services of capable and faithful servants.

It is our boast that it is the genius of our political system to keep the pathway to distinction open to merit, to invite to the most exalted trusts the honest and capable, and in the race for public honors to give the poorest and humblest an equal chance. Under the spoils system how often does modest worth win over the ward bummer, whose only recommendation is that he helped fix the election? How seldom, under the most favorable circumstances, true manhood wins at the game of politics! I would not only elevate the public service, but would, if it were possible, put party politics on a higher plane.

Let parties and individuals seek power without a resort to baseness, for in all time no place was ever won by crime and corruption, or retained by falsehood, that did not scorch the very soul of him who held it.

I am not indorsing the details of the present law, nor am I committing myself to all the rules adopted by the President, for if I had time I would suggest some amendments, but the objects of the reform have my fullest sympathy.

Without pursuing these questions further now, I am content to be counted a disciple of Thomas Jefferson. These were his views as given by Mr. Benton:

Mr. Jefferson had early and anxiously studied the question of removals. He was the first President that had occasion to make them, and with him the occasion was urgent. His election was a complete revolution of parties; and, when elected, he found himself to be almost the only man of his party in office. The Democracy had been totally excluded from Federal appointment during the administration of his predecessor. Almost all offices were in the hands of his political foes. Justice to himself and his party required this state of things to be altered, required his friends to have a share proportionate to their numbers in the distribution of office, and required him to have the assistance of his friends in the administration of the Government. Removals were indispensable, and the only question was the principle upon which they should be made. This question Mr. Jefferson studied anxiously, and under all its aspects of principle and of policy, of national and of party duty, and settled it to his satisfaction. The fundamental principle was that each party was to have a share in the ministerial offices, the control of each branch of the service being in the hands of the administration; that removals were only to be made for cause and upon inquiry into the truth of imputed delinquencies. Official or personal misconduct, negligence, incapacity, inherent vice in the appointment, partisan electioneering beyond the fair exercise of the elective franchise, and where the heads of some branches of the service were politically opposed to his administration—these, with Jefferson, constituted the law of removals, and was so written down by him after his inauguration.

In correspondence with his political friends Mr. Jefferson said:

Some removals I know must be made. They must be as few as possible; done gradually, and bottomed on some malversation or inherent disqualification. Good men to whom there is no objection but a difference of political opinion, practiced on only so far as the right of a private citizen will justify, are not proper subjects of removal. * * * Officers who have been guilty of gross abuse of office I shall now remove. The instances will be few, and governed by strict rule and not party passion. The right of opinion shall suffer no invasion from me. Those who have acted well have nothing to fear, however they may have differed from me in opinion; those who have done ill, however, have nothing to hope. * * * Every officer of the Government may vote at elections according to his conscience; but we should betray the cause committed to our care were we to permit the influence of official patronage to be used to overthrow that cause.

This was genuine Democracy in the earlier and purer days of the Republic.

I beg pardon, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for departing from the order of this debate to call the attention of the country once again to a question that in my judgment overshadows all others. The question to which I now refer is that of reforming our

METHOD OF ELECTING A PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

We have not forgotten that immediately succeeding the Presidential election of 1876 we were in great peril. There was angry debate in Congress and alarm among the people. Threats were muttered with quivering lips in every section. Excited men, disappointed in their aims, in the frenzy of the hour threatened an appeal to arms. The cheeks of patriotic citizens blanched as they contemplated the danger. The nation was but a hairbreadth from a conflict it could not have survived.

All this was the result of a contested Presidential election, and that contest was made possible by serious defects in our electoral system. These defects have excited the gravest concern in the minds of the most eminent statesmen of all parties. Here the language of the Constitution, touching who shall count the electoral vote and announce the result, is vague. In whom is this power reposed? In the Congress or in the President of the Senate?

These are unsettled problems, and partisan statesmanship seems determined to avoid them or trifle with them. In this matter it has come to this complexion at last: that the Constitution is made to adjust itself to the necessities of party, and to confer the power of making the count on either the President of the Senate or Congress as its exercise by the one or the other may be made to secure a partisan advantage. The inquiry now is not what is the true interpretation of the Constitution, but to what party does the President of the Senate belong, or what is the politics of the Congressional majority? These ascertained, to the partisan the meaning of the Constitution is clear, for in his judgment the power shifts from Congress to the President of the Senate and back again as often as the one or the other is necessary to secure his party a victory. In this condition of the controversy the people will not be content with the settlement of the Presidential contest by either of these tribunals.

The office of Chief Magistrate is most important now, and is rapidly becoming more so. Every term he dispenses millions in patronage, and the Presidential struggle is becoming more and more bitter and exciting. It is not to be expected that when the masses are excited almost to madness, when public interests and private ambitions are involved, the vanquished will accept defeat from a tribunal whose jurisdiction over the controversy has been challenged during our whole national life.

But our whole system of Presidential elections is vicious. If it be true, as I believe, that the President of the Senate may finally pass on every essential fact in connection with the count of the Presidential vote, then the power thus lodged puts to a fearful hazard our liberties, for there is nothing to save popular government from the arbitrary rulings of an unscrupulous man but revolution. The Congress is equally unsafe. In these heated contests, these scrambles for spoils, the politician taxes his ingenuity to find plausible pretexts for the support of the most absurd and forced constructions of constitutions and statutes. To him the party is immaculate and its behests the supreme law. If our experience proves anything it shows that in these controversies Congress is incapable of rising above the low level of partisanship. No such tribunal is fit to try a contested Presidential election.

I repeat that this undemocratic and anti-republican system is dangerous to popular government, whether the result of the election is ascertained by either the President of the Senate or Congress, for even the electors may betray the people, defy their instructions, and defeat their choice. The people may choose one man and the electors select a wholly different one. You may choose a Democrat and they inaugurate a Republican and violate no law. No law can now be made to prevent such an event or to enforce the popular will.

But again, a State may appoint electors to select a President, or it may refuse to do so. If it refuse there is no power by which the appointment can be coerced. Now if every State should fail or refuse to execute this power there would be no election and the Government perish by mere non-action. For such a contingency the Constitution makes no provision. But suppose the States appoint, the electors vote and certify their vote as required, the tribunal trying the vote may wholly annul the action of the people and defeat an election by holding to such arbitrary technicalities as that the electors were not appointed in conformity to law; that they were ineligible to an appointment; that they did not vote on the right day; that they did not properly transmit their proceedings to the President of the Senate, or that the certificates containing votes were not legally authenticated. Upon such flimsy pretexts as these whole States have been and may hereafter be disfranchised.

Was there ever a plan of election more dangerous or more absurd? Ought this jumble of doubts and confusions to be longer tolerated? These are familiar facts I know, but I am pledged to my people to keep them before the Congress so long as I remain their representative or until the great danger of the electoral plan is removed. At every meeting of Congress a high select committee composed of distinguished statesmen is appointed to consider and report a remedy, and at every adjournment the question is just where it was when the session began. No party seems equal to the task of reforming this obsolete, vicious, and undemocratic system. Shall this danger continue longer to menace the people?

The formation of the Constitution was a grand work, I know, worthy the men and the age. We were then a homogeneous people occupying a narrow domain. We are now a nation of thirty-eight Commonwealths and nearly sixty millions of people. We have diversified interests and sectional prejudices, and differ widely in religious thought and in our ideas of civil government. In this confusion the public safety demands that our national elections be in accord with our democratic theory of government, so that their results may be accepted by all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to modify the remark I made. I feel convinced that my statement is correct. I am well satisfied, sir, that when the war began a majority of those who filled the ranks of the Union Army were Democrats. A majority of the generals who distinguished themselves on the side of the Union were Democrats.

Mr. ROWELL. Will you allow a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to yield.

Mr. ROWELL. I want to ask whether they were Democrats when they went in or when they came out?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to yield for any interruption.

Mr. BRUMM. Does not the gentleman know that the soldiers who were Democrats in the Army were those who got in after the conscription act was passed, that they were conscripts?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is a mistake.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I speak somewhat from my personal knowledge of my own locality. One county in my district in 1860 gave Lincoln 11 votes. That county furnished nearly a thousand men to the Union Army.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How many Republican votes does it give now?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Another county in my district which gave but 27 votes to Lincoln in 1860 furnished a thousand soldiers to the Union Army.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How many Republican votes were there when the boys came home?

Mr. BRUMM. On what side did those soldiers fight?.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Perhaps at that time the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not know on what side he was?

Mr. BRUMM. My record shows on what side I was.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I guess the Democracy did the fighting on both sides.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the committee to come to order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will reiterate my statement of yesterday. I believe if the long roll could be called of the living and of the dead who entered the Army on the side of the Union, it would be discovered a majority of them were Democrats. Nearly every great general who distinguished himself on the side of the Union went into the Army a Democrat, and most of them came out Democrats. Political office induced some to leave the Democracy.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I repeat, I stand by what I have said on this subject.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to what party do those belong who fought on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, a word in regard to the next point the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] makes. I am satisfied, and I speak by authority of those who know whereof they speak, that there have been as many soldiers appointed to office under this administration as have been removed.

A MEMBER. How many confederate soldiers have been appointed?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I say that while in every instance the Republican soldier removed has not been succeeded by a soldier in the particular place from which the removal has been made, yet the aggregate of the soldiers appointed under the Cleveland administration is equal to if not greater than the aggregate number of soldiers removed. Within the last ten days there has been placed upon the soldiers' roll of this House a soldier, a Republican soldier, from my own State of Illinois. I submit the magnanimity of the Democratic party toward the soldier and toward Republican officials is unparalleled in the history of any political party. We furnished the fighting men for the Union during the late war.

Mr. BRUMM. What corps were you in?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In none. Perhaps I was in the same corps as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. I was in the Tenth Corps all through.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. One of the best corps commanders that ever commanded Pennsylvania troops in the late war was a Democrat—General Winfield Scott Hancock.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Would it be in order to have the long roll called?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I merely want to reiterate that more Democrats enlisted in the Union Army than Republicans.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed on this paragraph.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] withdraw his formal amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is then on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to strike out the clause.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have withdrawn that amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would like to reserve the question of order which the Chair decided on an amendment a short time ago. I should like the Chair to give me an opportunity to call it up to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that we can not go back on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on that point of order.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $4,500, and for hire of horses and wagons and cartage for the use of the Clerk's office, $1,200; for Chief Clerk, Journal Clerk, and two reading clerks, at $3,000 each, and for the Journal Clerk (H. H. Smith) for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum; for disbursing clerk, tally clerk, and printing and bill clerk, at $2,500 each; for file clerk and enrolling clerk, at $2,250 each; for assistant disbursing clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, resolution and petition clerk, index clerk, superintendent of document-room, and librarian, at $2,000 each; for distributing clerk and stationery clerk, $1,800 each; for newspaper clerk, document clerk, upholsterer, and two assistant librarians, at $1,440 each; two messengers in the House library, at $1,314 each; one page, $720; one assistant journal clerk, at $6 per day during the session, $726; one assistant index clerk, during the session and three months after its close, two hundred and ten days, at $6 per day, $1,260; one book-keeper and four clerks, $1,600 each; three clerks to index private claims, at $1,600 each; one messenger-boy in chief clerk's room, $300; two laborer's in Clerk's document-room, $900 each; the person preparing the general index to the journals of Congress, under resolution of June 18, 1878, $2,500; assistant to person preparing the general index to journals of Congress, under resolution of May 22, 1882, $2,000; one laborer in the bath-room, $720; four laborers, at $720 each; one telegraph operator, $900; one chief engineer, $1,700; two assistant engineers, $1,200 each; two conductors of the elevator, at $1,000 each; one laborer, $820; five firemen, at $900 each; one electrician, $1,150; one laborer, $800; one laborer to clean Satuary Hall and watch statuary therein, $660; in all, $96,964.

Mr. MAYBURY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 193, after the words "journal clerk" insert the words "tally clerk."

Mr. MORRISON. Before any amendment is offered I want to make a point of order on this paragraph. I desire to make a point of order on the name, in line 194, "H. H. Smith."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from Illinois will state what is the point of order.

Mr. MORRISON. Under the rules of the House the Clerk is authorized to appoint his assistants. This is legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to be heard on the point of order. The Chair decided the point of order touching the name "Amzi Smith" in the appropriations for the Senate force before I had an opportunity to be heard. I heard the gentleman from Texas make that point of order.

I must confess that the only point he made which had any influence upon my mind was that under the Constitution the Senate had a right to appoint its own officers. I do not think that was well taken, but certainly that was the strongest point he made. The House of Representatives has a right, of course, to appoint its own officers in any way it sees proper. I wish to call attention, however, to the fact that this is not the appointment of an officer. I will read the language:

For Chief Clerk, Journal Clerk, and two reading clerks at $3,000 each, and for the Journal Clerk, H. H. Smith, for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum.

Now, there is no appointment of an officer there. It is a provision proposed to be made by the concurrence of the House of Representatives, because it is proposed to be written in the statute, and it can not be written there without the concurrence of the House—a provision for the performance of certain work, namely, the preparation of the Digest, for which $1,000 is to be paid, and this provision designates one "H. H. Smith" as the person who is to receive that compensation. Possibly the House might not choose to legislate that the work should be done except by this precise party.

Mr. LONG. The difficulty is that it is enacted by the Senate as well as by the House.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but can it be enacted by the Senate without the consent of the House? Is there no way that the House can act except by a resolution? A statute, I say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], is a resolution of the House, and more. I say again, that this provision does not come within the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

One word now as to whether this expenditure and these officials are authorized by law, and this remark applies also to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] a while ago to increase the salary of the clerk at the Speaker's table $200. When I take up the Book of Estimates (with which the Chair is familiar) I find that there is no law except the appropriation bill referred to for any of these salaries. There is no permanent law in existence that authorizes the employment of these pages and these clerks and all the employés under the Doorkeeper. There is a law authorizing the employment of the force in the Sergeant-at-Arms's office, but with that exception there is no law authorizing these employés. The power to make an appropriation of a thousand dollars or of ten thousand dollars as compensation for these employés is lodged in the House of Representatives, and the appropriation can be made by resolution or by law, the Senate concurring, which, as I have said, is a resolution and something more.

Mr. MORRISON. I wish to strike out, or have stricken out, the name of "H. H. Smith," here designated as "Journal Clerk," because under the rules the Clerk of the House has a right to name the Journal Clerk. The House does not appoint and the Committee on Appropriations has no right to name him.

Mr. CANNON. But this does not name the Journal Clerk. The House has a right to vote to employ a certain man, naming him, to prepare the Digest; but my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] takes the position that he, one member of the House, with the aid of the chairman, another member of the House, making two members, may keep the House from accomplishing that object.

Mr. FINDLAY. I call attention to the fact that this gentleman is not here named in connection with the salary, but in connection with the preparation of a digest, for which service he is to receive a thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not change the case. It is still legislation.

Mr. FINDLAY. It simply proposes to pay him a thousand dollars for a particular service.

Mr. MORRISON. Suppose the Clerk of the House should appoint some other Journal Clerk whose name would not be H. H. Smith, who would get this thousand dollars?

Mr. FINDLAY. But this is the man who has done the work. This is simply providing compensation for work already done, and this is the man who has done it.

Mr. MORRISON. This is not for work done; it is for work that is to be done by the Journal Clerk, who might or might not be H. H. Smith.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; we are appropriating for the next fiscal year, not for this.

Mr. FINDLAY. I did not understand that it was for work to be done in the future. I withdraw what I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, and the point is sustained.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order upon the words "for disbursing clerk," in line 196, or rather upon the provision raising his salary to $2,500. The existing law fixes the salary of this clerk at $2,250.

Mr. CANNON. Where is the existing law?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to know from the gentleman in charge of this bill why it is that this salary has been raised.

Mr. HEARD. Can the gentleman refer me to the provision of law which fixes the salary at $2,250?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The salary of this clerk has been heretofore fixed at $2,250, and the gentleman from Indiana who is in charge of this bill very well knows that fact. I ask that gentleman now for an explanation of the reasons why this increase has been made and I will accept his explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. My only explanation is simply this, that the Committee on Appropriations concluded to increase that salary $250.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But that does not explain what I asked the gentleman to explain.

Mr. CABELL. I will explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; with all the respect in the world for the gentleman from Virginia, I must decline. I want the gentleman who is in charge of this bill to explain to me why the committee have increased this salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, if you wish to know the reason why it was done I will say that it was stated to the Committee on Appropriations by the Clerk of the House that the duties and the responsibilities of this disbursing clerk were very considerable; that he was required to be here not only during the sessions of Congress but during the year, and the committee, inasmuch as they were reducing some salaries that were found to be too high, thought they would add $250 to this one.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this Committee on Appropriations in fixing these salaries has done it without regard to the service to be performed by the employés; and, not only that, but without regard to existing law and without regard to precedents. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has been relieved of two-thirds of his labor in consequence of the change in the rules, and yet his salary is increased $500. Under this bill you have increased the salary $500.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend labors under this mistake: that salary was increased by the preliminary action of the Senate during the last Congress.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Ah, Mr. Chairman, it is no use to talk about "the preliminary action of the Senate;" I am referring to the action of the House; and the Senate has no more to do with it than Tom, Dick, or Harry outside of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me a suggestion. He makes a point of order that there is an increase here of the salary of the disbursing clerk to the extent of $250; and that it is out of order. I submit to my friend that he permit the Chair to decide the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir. I propose to discuss it. The point I wish to make is that this committee in fixing these salaries has pursued a system of favoritism, and in doing so has acted unjustly toward some of the employés of the House, while showing undue partiality to those whom that committee wished to favor.

Mr. FORNEY. That is a broad assertion. The gentleman should not make it without showing it to be correct.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman will sit down——

Mr. FORNEY. State the facts.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I insist that gentlemen take their seats and allow me to proceed. I do not wish to be interrupted in this way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have introduced here time and again bills asking this Appropriations Committee to equalize the salaries of officers of this House and to do justice to our employés. Under the state of affairs now existing here men stand at one door who receive a salary of $750, and men at another door receive $1,200. The question how much an appointee gets depends upon who recommends him. I have been before the Committee on Accounts of this House trying to have these salaries equalized so as to do something like justice; I have sought to have some fair rule adopted. Yet we can not get a report from the Committee on Accounts, nor can we get justice from the Committee on Appropriations. All that we can get from the Committee on Appropriations is an increase of the salaries of clerks whom that committee is disposed to favor. I think, sir, that when a committee refuses to do justice to the various employés of the House it ought to be "sat down upon." [Laughter.]

Does the gentleman give us any reason why there should be this increase in the salary of the disbursing clerk, while there is no increase in the salary of any one else? One gentleman tells me that the number of members of the House has increased, and therefore there is necessity for increasing the pay of the disbursing clerk. Does the Committee on Appropriations carry out this rule with any other clerk or officer of the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to remind the gentleman that nobody, so far as I know, is resisting his point of order.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from West Virginia has criticised the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the salary of the disbursing clerk of the House, and has asked why it is proposed to raise the salary of that officer. The answer is a plain one, and it ought to be satisfactory to every gentleman here. We had before us in the Committee on Appropriations the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to state to us the duties which each of the officers under him is called upon to discharge. We found that one of the most hardly worked clerks in this House is the disbursing clerk, and that he was the worst paid. I do not know this gentleman; I do not remember that I ever saw him; yet I venture to say you may go over the list of House employés, from the commencement to the close, and you will find that he is the poorest paid of all. Hence the committee saw fit to allow him a small additional salary, and this could be readily done from reductions in another quarter.

Sir, this disbursing clerk stays here during the whole year. No matter who goes home, no matter when the sessions of Congress may close, he is obliged to stay here all the year around to attend to his duties and the pay of gentlemen who are at their homes engaged in other business or enjoying themselves. Employés who leave here at the end of the session send to this clerk during their absence to make out their accounts and send them their money. If there is a deserving man in the House of Representatives I say it is this officer. We have investigated the matter thoroughly, and if there is any salary which ought to be raised it is that of this disbursing clerk.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why did the Committee on Appropriations undertake to change existing law?

Mr. CABELL. We did not undertake to change any existing law. I take it for granted that the gentleman has undertaken to discuss something that he knows nothing about; that is the sum total of all this.

The gentleman raised another point. He spoke something in regard to the raising of salary of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was not a dollar additional put upon the pay of any clerk or any employé or any man who was around or connected with the Committee on Appropriations, not one dollar in addition to the old and usual salary. We found the clerk's salary, I think, at $3,000, and so let it remain.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, $2,250.

Mr. CABELL. I say we did not raise the committee clerk's salary one farthing. I say we did not add a stiver to it. If there is a hard-worked man in this House it is this clerk of the Committee on Appropriations; if any man here deserves his salary he does; his position is one of great labor and considerable responsibility.

It is easy for gentlemen to complain. I have frequently heard gentlemen complain of the work of the Committee on Appropriations. Let any gentleman go upon that committee and attend to the arduous work which it has to do and he will soon come to the conclusion that complaints against it are more frequently groundless than otherwise. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia has charged me——

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the point of order. [Cries of "Decision!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Virginia. [Cries of "Decide!"] The gentleman has charged me with talking on what I did not know anything about.

Mr. CABELL. That is a very large subject.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will say with equal kindness to him if he had thought a moment he would not have said so. He said the disbursing clerk of the House should receive this salary because he staid here to pay members.

Mr. CABELL. I did not say to pay members; I said to pay clerks of the House and other employés.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What have the clerks of the House to do with the disbursing clerk?

Does not the gentleman know the disbursing clerk of the House has nothing to do with the payment of members of the House during vacation or at any other time?

Mr. CABELL. I did not say that he had. I certainly have found out in my eleven years' service here where to go to get my pay. [Laughter and applause.] I never go to the clerk.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have no doubt the gentleman has found out where to get his pay, but he has been unfortunate in expressing himself. I say now there is none of these hazardous duties put upon the clerk.

Mr. CABELL. He has to give a bond, which no other clerk is required to do; he has to perform a greater number and more arduous duties than many others who are better paid, and he has to stay here all the year to send pay to many others who can go away upon the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. There is no reason why he should receive an additional salary in contradistinction to other clerks.

Now, what I wish to complain of is the system of favoritism carried out by appropriations as made by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CABELL. I deny, sir, that there has been any favoritism on the part of that committee. I do not know, personally, this clerk, and I do not know that any member of the Committee on Appropriations does, but they thought the man deserved the increased pay and gave it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now in reference to the disbursing clerk, the existing law only gives him $2,250.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to correct the gentleman. He made that statement before.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I decline to yield. I do not want to be corrected by a gentleman who does not know as well as myself. [Laughter]. I wish to ask the Appropriations Committee why it is when the clerk of that committee has been shorn of his responsibilities and duties his salary has been increased?

Mr. HOLMAN. You have made no motion.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Gentlemen incorporated it in their bill and you profess to be economists and reformers. Now, why not let in some reform and some economy in the Appropriations Committee as well as elsewhere?

Mr. HEARD. I ask the indulgence of the House for one moment while I direct the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia to the law as to the salary of this clerk. He said the existing law fixed the salary at the present time of that disbursing clerk at $2,250. He says that it is the law, and refuses to be corrected by any one who knows less than himself. If I had to plead guilty to that charge I never would try to correct anybody on this floor. [Laughter and applause.] But I wish to say if he intends to call the last appropriation bill the existing law, then he is correct; but if he goes to the statutes, then I say his salary is fixed at $3,000 a year. The existing appropriation bill fixes it at $2,250, but that is not law. The statute fixes it at $3,000 a year.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman a question, and I ask him to yield to me.

Mr. HEARD. If his question is a courteous one, yes.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will be as courteous as possible. Did not the Committee on Appropriations put it up from $2,250 to $2,500?

Mr. HEARD. The question of the gentleman from West Virginia reminds me of a conundrum I heard when I was a boy, so far as its relevancy to this case is concerned. If a schooner was about to sail, provisioned for six months, with a mainmast 60 feet high, what was the captain's name? [Laughter.]

The assumption of the gentleman from West Virginia, based on his premises, is equally violent. He says that is the law. But when the House of Representatives in the last appropriation bill fixed the salary at $2,250, I say the Revised Statutes fixed it at $3,000, and I refer the gentleman to the text of the law. In section 52, page 10, of the Revised Statutes for 1878, in the list of clerks for which payment is provided, it will be found as follows:

Six assistant clerks, at a salary of $3,000 a year each, and one assistant clerk, at a salary of $3,000 a year.

I am informed by the Clerk of this House, who is present on the floor, that the disbursing clerk is one of these assistant clerks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. HEARD. And there is nowhere in the law a different salary provided for him.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I think GIBSON has got you now.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I submit in good faith that the gentleman stated that it was existing law when it was not true.

Mr. HEARD. This is the law.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order. When a gentleman makes the point of order that a bill changes the existing law, is he not bound to show the existing law that he claims is changed?

Mr. HEARD. I make the point of order——

Mr. HAMMOND. I am speaking of the gentleman from West Virginia. I do not know whether it is the law or not. There is an issue joined and I want the facts.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I give as existing law the act passed by the last Congress for the purpose of fixing these salaries. It is existing law unless some man proves that it is not in accordance with the statute law. If there is a provision of permanent law against it that alters the case. But the presumption is that the last Congress acted in accordance with the existing law; and if you want to prove that it did not you must introduce your authority.

Mr. HEARD. That is very much like the culprit who offered to prove by thirty witnesses that they did not see him take the coat. [Laughter.] The gentleman from West Virginia wants us to prove that it is not the law.

He has no warrant of authority for saying that the appropriation bill controlling the appropriation for this item is the existing law.

More than that, the Court of Claims have within a very short time decided that such is not the case. In the Langston case—Langston was our minister, I believe, to Liberia—the law provided that his salary should be $7,500 per annum. The appropriation for the payment of his salary only fixed $5,000 per annum. He instituted suit in the Court of Claims, and that court decided that he was entitled to the other $2,500 a year.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That was entirely proper.

Mr. HEARD. I say then the appropriation for a specific length of time does not change existing law, and no lawyer will hold that it does.

The CHAIRMAN. On this section the Chair desires to say—the section to which the gentleman from Missouri refers—that it is simply a declaration of this character:

The following persons are employed in the service of the Senate, one Secretary, &c.

That is not a declaration of law. It may be and appears to be simply a declaration as to what service these persons were being paid for at that time; and which might have been done on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIR is ready to rule upon the question of order. [Cries of "Rule!"]

This is not a new question at all. For many years there has been an effort from time to time to increase the salaries of this class of employés which were simply fixed in an appropriation bill, and almost uniformly it has been held that where there was no general law upon the subject, and where the appropriation referred to the employés of the Departments for instance, that the provision in the bill fixed the salary and was the law governing the case. There is nothing in the rules of the present House which would necessitate any change of construction in that respect. It may not have been a very proper one, but it has been always and uniformly the construction, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The gentleman from Indiana will understand that this takes out the $250 extra, and that is all the Chair rules out of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer an amendment to restore the appropriation to what it is in the present bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY], which is pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 193, after the words "Journal Clerk," insert the words "tally clerk." Also amend line 196 by striking out the words "tally clerk."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. MAYBURY. I shall take but one moment of the time of the House in discussing this amendment, although I think I might have made a point of order that would have decided this. I find that the salary of the tally clerk has been reduced by the bill from $3,000 to $2,500. In other words, a discrimination has been made against the tally clerk by comparison of his salary with that of his colleagues at the desk.

I see no good reason for such discrimination. The salary was fixed in 1872 at $3,000. It was modified in 1876, at the time of the general reduction, and fixed at $2,500. In 1878 it was again restored to $3,000 per annum, and has remained at that figure ever since.

At the time of the restoration of this salary to $3,000 per annum there was added to the duties of the tally clerk the duty of preparing for use a Calendar of the business before the House, which is prepared by him, sent to the Printer, and laid on our desks twice each week. Prior to that time his duty simply consisted in keeping a record of tallies of votes taken in this House. Under the rules he not only keeps the tally, but he is obliged to record it. He is also obliged to take it to the Public Printer and see that it appears properly in the Journal. It is obvious this must be done after the adjournment of the House. He can never tell when the last vote will be taken; and the work of the preparation for the Printer always succeeds the daily proceedings of the House.

The preparation of the Calendar involves a good deal of intricate work. It obliges him to make a list of all the bills and reports, and to place them on the different Calendars in their proper order. He has to prepare a new Calendar twice a week, to see the proof is properly read, and to present it here for the information of the House. This work, of course, is done after the daily session of the House, because it is impossible for him to begin the preparation of the Calendar until after the reports have been made from the committees of the House. This involves a good deal of daily work after the sessions of the House have ended.

It appears to me this statement of the duties of the tally clerk indicates how important they are. The keeping of the daily sheet itself is a very important matter, and I might say without offending the modesty of the gentleman who now occupies that position that we have never had occasion to complain of the efficiency of his work. In its importance and in its amount it is equal to that of any of his colleagues. It begins when their work begins and ends when their work ends. I do not see in view of the importance of the work and the time when it has to be done why this discrimination should be made. I trust the House will restore the salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say just a single word. The tally clerk is an efficient public officer. His duties are almost entirely confined to the current sessions of the House. The committee thought that for the next year, which embraces the short session, $2,500 was a very ample salary, more than $800 per month for the actual time of employment. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BURNES. There can be no question but this amendment would have been sustained if a point of order had been made with regard to the provision in the bill. There can be no question but this amendment ought to be agreed to.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, here is a gentleman who at the commencement of the Forty-ninth Congress comes and takes a place, the salary of which is fixed by law—the current law of the land.

Mr. HOLMAN. An appropriation bill.

Mr. BURNES. Very well; it is a law, and is in the calf and in the sheep of the Printing Department of the Government. There is a law fixing the salary of the tally clerk at $3,000 a year. Why was not this reduction made last year for the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress? It might have been made then and this gentleman would not have been deceived. But he comes from his home and takes this position under a law that guaranteed him $3,000 a year for the Forty-ninth Congress, and I say it is but little less than a fraud upon him to take from him for the remainder of the Forty-ninth Congress the salary which the law guarantees to him.

This is the view I take of the matter, and I think I am as much for reform and economy as any gentleman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make an inquiry of the distinguished gentleman who has this bill in charge. I ask him whether the tally clerk indicated in this bill is not one of the six assistant clerks provided for by section 53 of the Revised Statutes, which section fixes their compensation and salary at $3,000 each?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have understood he is one of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then is there any sort of doubt that if his salary be reduced as now proposed he would have a claim against the Government for $500?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no trouble about that. The gentleman from New York will find by looking at the statute it is simply a declaration of the salaries, it is simply repeating the salaries named in the appropriation bill, and has no more effect that the appropriation bill for the current year.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care if it is merely a recognition. It is a general statute which organizes the corps of this House, stating what officers we shall have and what compensation shall be paid to them respectively.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 123, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, before passing from line 201, I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. I wish to say that the House this morning by unanimous consent agreed to extend the session until 6 o'clock.

Mr. COBB. Yes, when there was nobody here.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not prevent the committee from rising at this time if it so desires.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. COBB; and there were—ayes 75, noes 57.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, while suspending the call for tellers, I ask unanimous consent that if the House does not wish to carry out the agreement to continue in session until 6 o'clock a recess shall be taken until 8 o'clock to-night. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COBB, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, to act as tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to waive the point if my colleague will consent and the House will consent to sit for half an hour longer. It is of the highest public moment that this bill shall go the Senate as soon as possible.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 70.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer, on behalf of the committee, the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, in line 201, strike out the word "upholsterer" and insert the word "locksmith."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 201 by inserting after the word "document-room" the words "executive and miscellaneous document clerk."

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law to authorize that.

Mr. BURNES. The point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is purely technical. This is a new name given to an old office, a name suggested by the Clerk of the House for convenience, in consequence of the confusion which has arisen from the present name. This refers to the same officer who is described as "newspaper clerk" in line 203.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that the present name be retained. Otherwise there will be a change of the law.

Mr. BURNES. If the gentleman from Indiana objects to this name, I have no objection to changing the amendment, and the Clerk will please change it in accordance with the wish of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment in its present form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 201, following the word "document-room," the words "newspaper clerk."

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to state what the duties of this clerk are.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unhappily it does not come in. I wish it did. The newspaper clerk is receiving a salary of $2,000, which is the largest salary paid to any similar clerk. The bill simply proposes to reduce his salary to $1,440, and this amendment proposes to insert his name at this point so as to raise the salary to $2,000, which I concede is the present compensation.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the committee have reduced the salary of this clerk?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether there is any one here who knows of any duty that this clerk has to perform?

Mr. BURNES. I can answer the gentleman from Tennessee. Better perhaps than any one of us, the Clerk of this House knows the duties that are performed by this clerk, and therefore I ask that a letter which he has written on that subject may be read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I made the inquiry only for information, because I think the title by which this clerk is known is misleading.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the letter spoken of by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to submit the following, relating to and what are the duties of the position known and denominated as "newspaper clerk of the House of Representatives." The duties are:

To keep an individual newspaper account with the members of the House of Representatives, charging to the stationery account of each the amount paid for each journal, magazine, or periodical ordered; also, keeping an account of the amount of the cash balances, after entering and deducting the amounts paid for newspapers, &c.

He also has charge of the executive documents of the House of Representatives, subheading, epitomizing briefly the contents of each, and making the proper indorsements of all orders of the House on every document, thus preparing them for and transmitting to the Public Printer, having supervision of all such documents until they finally reach the distributing clerk and he makes the proper disposal of them; he also keeps an accurate register or docket of same in a register kept for that purpose, naming the date received, stating from whom, the President or Department officers, mentioning the nature of the document, to what committees referred, noting the orders of the House in every case, in order to be able at any time to give information and locate any document for members when desired.

He also has the charge and supervision of the miscellaneous documents of the House of Representatives, which include reports of nearly every description to be printed, memorials and resolutions of State Legislatures, and resolutions of the House of Representatives, except joint and concurrent resolutions of the Senate and House, making the subheadings, a synopsis of the contents, indorsements, and all orders of the House on each, seeing that all documents coming to his desk and ordered printed are promptly dispatched to the Public Printer, keeping an accurate register or docket of the same by date, by whom submitted or introduced, nature of the document, to what committee referred, and data of all orders, by rule, by the Speaker, or special, keeping this data in such a manner as to be able to give the course taken and location of all documents under his supervision and passing through his hands, and all other information in connection therewith, whenever so desired by members of the House and all others interested.

I would, in view of the duties of the position, to more fully designate by name the real duties thereto attached, that the position hereafter be known and denominated as the "executive and miscellaneous document clerk" of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY, M. C.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 23, noes 21.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that motion will not be pressed.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 46, noes 54.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 202, after the word "stationery clerk," insert "and two assistant librarians;" so as to read: "for distributing clerk and stationery clerk and two assistant librarians, $1,800 each."

In line 204, after the word "locksmith," strike out "and two assistant librarians."

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not see fully the effect of that proposition, but I reserve a point of order upon it.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, under this bill as it now stands the two assistant librarians would receive a salary of $1,440 each. The effect of the amendment is to allow them $1,800 each.

These employés of the House are expected to be gentlemen of intelligence. They are often called upon by members to assist in looking up matters of law and examining the records of Congress. It seems to me they are certainly entitled to be advanced a little in point of salary. The Library, where they are employed, has to be kept open during the entire year in order to receive documents from the Government Printing Office and other Departments of the Government. One of these assistants is obliged to be here all the year around. I observe that under the Revised Statutes the salary of assistant librarian is fixed at $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my point of order that this is an increase of salary and without authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to call attention to the fact that for the last two Congresses it has been necessary to detail a laborer to assist in the libraries of this House, and by resolution the salary of that laborer has been increased. Thus the House has announced the fact that the services of skilled men are necessary in this department of our service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the amendment has been ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks and messengers to committees: For two stenographers to committees, at $4,000 each; clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Agriculture, clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands, clerk to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, clerk to the Committee on War Claims, clerk to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, at $2,000 each; assistant clerk to Committee on War Claims, at $1,200; in all, $49,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 237 and 238 strike out "$4,000" and insert "at $400 each per month, while actually employed;" and in lines 256 and 257 change the aggregate appropriation to "$44,700."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order that this amendment changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will observe that this is a reduction——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will show what sort of a reduction this is, and think the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon the amendment when he learns that it increases expenditures. The amendment proposes to change the compensation of the two stenographers to committees from $4,000 each, as provided by law, to $400 a month while actually employed. These officers were originally employed at $5,000 a year; and for a number of years the incumbents of the offices received that salary, their duty being to take evidence and hearings before the various committees of the House.

After they had continued on that basis for some years the gentleman from Indiana procured an amendment on an appropriation bill which abolished the offices, and an arrangement was adopted by which stenographers, when required by the committees, were designated by the Speaker, their compensation being determined by the Committee on Accounts instead of fixed salary. We tried that system through the last Congress, and the result, if I recollect correctly, was that we paid three or four times as much as had been paid under the old system for the stenographic work. That arrangement proving unsatisfactory, the gentleman from Indiana procured another provision of law providing for two stenographers at fixed salaries, not $5,000 a year as formerly, but $4,000. That is the law to-day, and with that law the gentleman from Indiana seeks to experiment by adopting a different system of payment—$400 a month.

Now, a word upon the merits of the case; and let me illustrate the matter by what has actually occurred during the present session, showing that the gentleman's amendment is impracticable, and that instead of reducing it will increase expenditures. There have been two committees especially which have recently been doing a great deal of work requiring the services of stenographers—one the Pan-Electric investigating committee, the other the special committee appointed to investigate the labor troubles. The latter committee, taking with them one of the stenographers who had been appointed by the Speaker, Mr. Welch, were absent from the city eighteen days, traveling in that time 4,000 miles. That stenographer took, unaided, what it required two other stenographers, who were employed by parties interested, to take, and he returned with what would make five hundred printed pages of work, which is now about ready for the Printer. According to what has been the ordinary method of payment heretofore we would pay for the stenographic work of those eighteen days $1,200. He has paid out of his own purse about $200 for clerks to assist him in writing it out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And that was only one section of the committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As the gentleman from New Jersey says, that was only one section of the committee. Another section of the committee went to Kansas City at the same time and took a great amount of testimony, having to use another stenographer.

Now, let me illustrate still further the impracticability of the gentleman's amendment. The Speaker appointed a gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. Lafferty) as one of the stenographers as well as one from Tennessee, the gentleman who went out with the special labor committee. Mr. Lafferty had the misfortune of falling and breaking his arm about the time of his appointment, but being plucky, as our American citizens generally are, he resolved that the Government should lose nothing by his fall, and so he continued to send men before the Pan-Electric committee in his own private employment, taking care of them and paying them out of his own pocket.

What is the result? For this month alone, although he got a reduction from those he employed on account of being a member of the fraternity, he has, I am informed, paid in actual cash more than $700 for the month of April and more than $1,000 during the month of May, or $1,700 in all. In other words, the Government has had that reporting done at the rate of $333 a month, when during those two months it cost $1,700 to the reporters themselves.

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, there has not been more cheap reporting done under any system known heretofore than the work done by these gentlemen reporting for that special labor committee. The stenographer sent there one day, if I recollect correctly, and the gentleman can correct me if I am in error, took thirteen hours and a half of solid work, and his work averaged $100 a day if he were paid at the ordinary rate.

I submit now, after having tried the experiment of repealing the old law which gave these stenographers for committees $5,000 a year, and coming back under a new system which cost the Government more than twice $5,000 a year, and after finding that was unsatisfactory and having returned to the old system and reducing the salary to $4,000 a year, whether it is wisdom still further to experiment? It is now being done more cheaply than at any time since I became a member of Congress.

One word more and I am done. Your stenographers for committees have to pay their own clerk-hire, and that comes out of their salary. So there is not only required the very highest skill to do this work, but a large portion of the salary received by these stenographers is paid out again as clerk-hire in the discharge of their labors.

Mr. HOLMES. Under the old rule when the accounts of the reporters had to be submitted to the Committee on Accounts, what was the rate then allowed to these stenographers of committees?

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not posted as to the rate which was then allowed to these stenographers. I was informed, and accurately I have no doubt, that on account of the enormously increased expense of that system we had to abandon it and return to the old method of payment, but not till we reduced the salaries one-fifth. It was much more expensive than the old system when each one of the stenographers received $5,000 a year, being required out of that to pay all clerk-hire.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is before the Chair and I have nothing further to say than this: The office of these stenographers rests upon the appropriation bills in various forms. There is no other law on the subject. One of these stenographers has not been here.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to state to the gentleman from Indiana that while he has not been able on account of a broken arm to be here, he has been paying, as I stated before, during the month of April $700 and during the month of May $1,000, for doing work for which under this bill he only receives $333.33 a month, and has, I learn, kept the work up without expense to the Government beyond his salary.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee or the gentleman from Indiana, and that is this: This committee provides for two official stenographers. Now, suppose four are wanted at the same time, then what?

Mr. HOLMAN. Then they are employed.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is so. Owen Meredith in Lucile has very truly said: "Even Don Ferdinando can not do more than he can do." [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. When more are required, are they not employed and paid for what they do?

Mr. McMILLIN. They are, just as they would be if you paid by the month if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana were adopted.

We have tried that and were compelled to abandon it, as we have found it to be much more expensive than the system of paying salaries to stenographers for committees.

Mr. HOLMAN. If more than two are required, they are employed and paid for out of the public Treasury. The question is whether $400 a month is fair compensation during the next session of Congress. If gentlemen come here and perform their duties, that is all they have to do. If they think proper to remain at home and employ substitutes, that is a thing to be taken into account.

The point of order is raised against a material reduction proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. It is one the Committee on Appropriations thinks ought to be made. I think it receives the approval of the Chair. It is a reduction in the amount of compensation. It is for the Chair to say whether it is in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point order.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to move an amendment to this paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out in line 247 the words "clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions."

Mr. Chairman, there is no committee of this House which in my judgment has performed more arduous labor than the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and yet, sir, as I look upon the probabilities ahead of us I deem it a waste of public money to continue the employment of that officer.

We came here with the demand upon us, which was responded to and had been responded to by both political parties in this country, that there should be radical changes made in the matter of the general pension legislation; and a large number of bills were presented which voiced and echoed the sentiment of the people and of the political conventions of both parties, as well as the promises of gentlemen who had been candidates for Congress in more than two-thirds of the Congressional districts of the country—sentiments which had been echoed and reiterated upon platforms of both political parties, both State and national. The bills embodying these views found their way into the hands of this industrious and patriotic committee, accompanied as they were by a number of petitions, and special bills granting special pensions were introduced in large numbers.

That committee has reported a number of bills which are in keeping with the sentiment to which I have alluded. They reported, for instance, House bill 4915, amending paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes; they have reported House bill 7640, to increase pensions in certain cases; House bill 3238, to amend section 4700 of the Revised Statutes relating to invalid pensions; House bill 8098, for pensioning prisoners of war; House bill 2653, for the relief of West Virginia troops, &c.; House bill 1578, relating to claims for pensions by dependent parents, and House bill 663, to repeal the limitation upon the pension act known as the arrears of pensions. All of these bills are upon the Calendar of the House. This House, acting through its majority, has assigned a day to the consideration of nearly every other class of business which has been brought before it by the reports of its committees.

It has assigned days to the consideration of the Banking and Currency Committee's reports; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; to the Committee on Agriculture; the Committee on the Judiciary; the Committee on American Shipping; in fact, to every committee on everything else in the world except the demands of the Union soldiers of the country. It assigned a day to the consideration of the Mexican pension bill and passed it, and I may not stop here to give my judgment of what the principal consideration that induced that action was. During all this long session of Congress, while members on both sides of the House have been besieged to give attention to these other matters of interest to the Union soldiers of the country, I have not heard that this House has assigned a day to the consideration of these bills. We have not only the bills to which I have referred and others I might name, but we have also Senate bill 1886; and there is not a member here, from any Northern State certainly, if not from the South, who within the last four days has not found his mail burdened by appeals from army posts and everybody else throughout the country asking that action may not be deferred on that bill. These appeals come from all quarters, and yet no day has been assigned its consideration. I do not mean, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, was recognized.

Mr. MATSON rose.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions desires now to speak, if the Chair will recognize me next, I will yield the floor to him at this time.

Mr. MATSON. Does the gentleman desire to reply to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to add a word in reference to this same section of the bill, but yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to finish the sentence that I was on.

Mr. MATSON. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That it was entirely outside of any intention on my part to charge the Committee on Invalid Pensions with any negligence.

Mr. MATSON. I think the gentleman from Ohio has made the motion facetiously. I am sure he does not intend to insist upon it; and when he comes to discuss the action of the House in reference to the general policy of legislation with regard to pension bills I will have something to say to him in reply.

Upon this question and at this time I want to say only this in reply to his remark in reference to fixing a time for the consideration of general bills covering pension matters, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have reported to the House a resolution, and if he looks upon the House Calendar, page 29, he will find it favorably reported, asking the House to fix a day for the consideration of that class of business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, several bills were favorably reported; but what I complain of is that no day has been assigned for their consideration.

Mr. MATSON. Now, I want to know from the gentleman from Ohio what that has to do with the dereliction of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or why this motion should obtain on that account? The gentleman has moved to strike out from this bill the money allowed to the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, while he has admitted that that committee has more work than it possibly can do, having already four thousand bills and three thousand petitions in its hands. He wants to strip that committee of its clerk so that it can not do anything.

What we have been able to do we have only been able to do by help of the clerk; not because the clerks write our reports, but because it keeps them busy to keep the run of the bills. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is an unfriendly motion to the pensioners of this country. It can not be any other than an unfriendly one, and I think, therefore, as I have suggested, it must have been made facetiously and not in earnest.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to give notice that I have several amendments to offer on this section, and I desire to take this opportunity to say a few words on the amendments I propose hereafter to offer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I submit that until the amendments of the gentleman from West Virginia are submitted there is nothing before the committee for debate.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am addressing the Committee of the Whole on this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to call the attention of the great economist of the Appropriations Committee to the provisions of this section. In the first place, we formerly had an Appropriations Committee having charge of the thirteen great appropriation bills of this House. That committee then had a clerk at $3,000, an assistant at $1,600, and a messenger at $1,000 a year. Now since that committee has been shorn of seven of its most important bills, and has only six bills left, involving less labor and less work than falls to other committees in this House, still the economist of this House proposes to keep up the expenditure for the clerks and employés of that committee, while they cut down and cut the throats of the clerks of other committees. Not only do they propose to do this, but they give to the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on the Public Lands, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds annual clerks, when they know that there is never a meeting of those committees during the session of the House, not one hour's work for those clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman indulge me a moment? I beg to say to him that this is by resolution of the House, not by action of the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has been willing to override the rules of the House in regard to other subjects, notably in this bill in reference to the civil service. Why can not he carry out his constant professions of economy with reference to these clerks? I have persistently stood here and begged the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Accounts to equalize the salaries of the different employés of this House. I have introduced resolutions and have introduced bills having that object in view; and yet under their influence we can not get the action of a solitary committee to do justice to the poor and honest employés. We have here standing at that door two messengers, one at $720 and one at $1,200. Going into the folding-room you find the same inequality. But still the bowels of compassion of this committee are never stirred up a moment till it comes to their own clerks and employés.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have no time to yield.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Only a brief question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much is paid to the clerk of the committee of which the gentleman from West Virginia is chairman, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know. That is not provided for in this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman does not know I can tell him his clerk is paid $6 a day.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not ask the gentleman for any information, because I do not think him capable of imparting it.

I want to have those clerks put on the same footing as other session clerks unless the committee will do justice to all the employés. I want to say here I do not think any of the employés of this House get too much pay. I believe they ought to have fair, honest, living salaries. I am willing for one to put them on the same footing with the employés of the Senate. But I say when you go and deal with the employés of this House do it in an open, fair, manly way. Treat them all alike. And I want to give notice that I shall move amendments striking out the annual clerks and placing each one of them on the footing of session clerks and pay them for the time they were employed. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to oppose the amendment and call for a vote.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to strike out the first word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose there is no gentleman on this floor who understands better than the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] that my motion to strike out the appropriation for the payment of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was made for the sole purpose of presenting my views very briefly upon the prospect of any future or further pension legislation, and not out of any unfriendly feeling toward that committee, which has so faithfully discharged its labors.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I was saying was that when the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the leader of one branch of the sentiment of this House, the antagonistic branch to the majority branch of the Democratic branch of this House [laughter]—the gentleman upon whom we on this side of the House rely to prevent the other side from committing any mischief in this country [laughter]—when that distinguished gentleman called forth from the Pension Office the statement that the bill to repeal the arrears act would cost $200,000,000 per annum, I made up my mind that none of this general pension legislation was to pass this House. Therefore it is that I have been watching the progress of events with a feeling of the deepest interest, not that it might not be done, but that it might be done. I am exceedingly anxious that a bill for the relief of dependent parents should be passed, and I care not whose bill is reported or who shall get the credit for it.

I am exceedingly anxious that the bill which has come from the Senate which gives a pension to every disabled soldier who is dependent upon his labor for support shall pass; I am anxious that all these great reforms in this system of legislation shall be enacted by this House, but I have been jealous of the interests of those concerned and even fearful that we should have no such legislation in this Congress. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions says that that committee has reported a resolution asking for a day. It is enough for my purpose to know that no day has been assigned. I have been hearing continually for some time that this session is to adjourn somewhere from the 8th to the 15th of July. I know nothing about that; I am not consulted upon the subject [laughter]; but I am now pressing upon the consideration of the other side of the House the proposition that, while every other interest here has been assigned time and a generous allowance of time, this great pension interest (which I concede is as near to the heart of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] as it is to mine) has had no opportunity to be heard upon any pension bill, except the general appropriation bill and the bill to increase the pensions of widows. I now withdraw my proposition to strike out the appropriation for the payment of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I withdraw my formal amendment and submit my point of order on line 241.

The CHAIRMAN. At this time there are informal amendments pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order is too late.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia did reserve his point of order, but not until after he had debated the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I now desire to call the attention of the Chair to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that the gentleman's point of order is too late.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that the gentleman from West Virginia addressed himself to the merits of the question, and in taking his seat said that he reserved the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then I propose an amendment. I propose to strike out, in line 241, "$3,000" and insert "$2,500." Upon this amendment I want to say that this salary of $3,000 was first paid to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, if I am not mistaken, at the last session of Congress. In addition to that, this clerk has an assistant clerk at $1,600, and in addition to that he has a messenger. Now, when the Committee on Appropriations has had seven-eighths of its bills taken away from it and has less than half the labor that formerly devolved upon it, I do not see any reason why this committee clerk shall receive more than these other clerks of committees, besides having the assistants I have named.

Where does our Democratic "economy" come in? Where is it that our friends propose to "reform?" When you diminish the labors of an officer are you to increase his salary and call that "reform?" If the duties are reduced, or if additional assistance is given, is it not fair to presume that the salary should be cut down? Where is the justice of the proposition that this clerk, after seven of the great appropriation bills have been taken from that committee, shall not only have an assistant and a messenger, but shall receive $500 more than any other clerk in this House? Now, I appeal to the common sense, to the common fairness, the common justice of this House, to say whether this sort of thing shall go on. Take the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which does more work than this Committee on Appropriations does under our present rules. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has no such array of clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has three clerks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But they do not get the same pay as you give your clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. COBB. I see that the general law fixes the salary of this clerk at $2,980.80.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; that is the general law. But these gentlemen, who are so observant of the general law in some cases where they wish to be economical, do not observe it with their own clerk. I wish to know why there should be an increase of salary in this case because this committee has the power of reporting the appropriation bills? I move to reduce the appropriation from $3,000 to $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations, as constituted under the auspices of this side of the House, have reduced the clerks of that committee from four, the former number, to three, showing that we have sought to exercise a proper economy. I think there is scarcely a gentleman in this House who does not know the character and the value of the services rendered by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. He is here not only during the sessions of Congress, but through almost the entire year. Without making any invidious distinctions, I will say there are few men with whom I have come in contact in my legislative life who have been so well qualified to discharge the duties of this position as the present incumbent. More than that, I will say if this man were in my private employ I should consider him of sufficient value in the conduct of my business to induce me to give him a salary equal to that of a member of Congress. With this statement I am quite willing to leave the matter to the intelligent judgment of the House.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, it was rejected, there being 1 vote in the affirmative, 31 in the negative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of various citizens of Michigan and Indiana, asking the removal of the duties on salt fish, and that salt fish be placed on the free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Papers relating to the claims of John Chitword, of George W. Carr, and of Linton Riddle, of Franklin County; of David S. Noe, of Grainger County; and of Montgomery Woods, of Hawkins County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WAKEFILD: Petition of Claybaugh Post and 105 citizens of Winnebago City, Minn., for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. A. J. WEAVER: Petition of J. M. Scott and 80 others of Cortland, Nebr., asking for legislation recommended by the Grand Army of the Republic—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. B. WEAVER: Petition of John McCord and 18 others, citizens of Richland, and of Lewis H. Shiery and 290 others, of Keokuk County, Iowa, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886, for the relief of ex-soldiers of the late war—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIS: Papers to be filed with bill for relief of J. George Ruckstahl—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 11, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of dairymen and butter-makers of Minerva, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill taxing imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BROWN. I am requested by the Board of Trade of the City of Savannah to present the action of a special meeting of the board, in which they passed resolutions in opposition to the passage of what is known as the oleomargarine bill now pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; to which committee I move the reference of the resolutions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL. I present a petition in the shape of a resolution of the board of supervisors of Harrison County, Mississippi, favoring the passage of a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bernard. A bill providing for the construction of that bridge is now in the hands of the Committee on Commerce; and I move that the resolution be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present resolutions adopted by the board of county supervisors of Wapello County, Iowa, in the nature of a petition, contained in a letter addressed to me personally, but evidently for the consideration of the Senate, favoring the passage of the bill making an indemnity to counties for swamp lands disposed of by the Government. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Mrs. Rebecca A. Crow and three affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 2161) to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca A. Crow; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5496) to increase the jurisdiction of probate courts in Arizona, and to repeal all acts of the Territorial Assembly creating county courts in said Territory, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4063) to authorize the improvement of the water-power in the Mississippi River at Little Falls, Minn., to report it without amendment. I shall submit a report to accompany the bill within a day or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom were referred the petition of the United Labor League of America and resolutions tendering thanks to Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell for their efforts to promote the cause of home rule in Ireland, to submit a report thereon, and ask that it be printed with the accompanying papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator report a bill?

Mr. BLAIR. No; it is a report upon a resolution referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I ask that the report, with the accompanying documents, be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that this report, with the accompanying papers, when printed be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 107) for the relief of Elias B. Moore, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to submit, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a report to accompany the bill (S. 2207) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," heretofore reported by that committee, and also a statement which the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has handed me stating the precise grounds on which he concurs with the report of the committee, and I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, makes a report; which will be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, in South Carolina, by the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 505) for the relief of William J. Gamble;

A bill (S. 1657) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions; and

A bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to John Dennert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PROPOSED CONGRESS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to say that to-morrow, or the next legislative day, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 2362) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations, with a view of submitting some remarks thereon.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up at this time Senate bill 2172, the bill restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, &c., the bill which is the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] as modified. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

And also all lands which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of the branch line across the Cascade Mountains which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to modify still further the amendment which has just been read by striking out the words "at the date of the passage of this act" and inserting "on the 15th day of June, 1886."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask to have read an amendment which I shall propose when in order to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. I ask that it be read at this time and laid over, as there is an amendment pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after the word "Oregon," in line 12 of section 1:

Except such of said lands as appertain to and are coterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yesterday the confusion was so great in the Senate Chamber on account of conversation that several Senators complained to the Chair of the fact that they could not hear the proceedings going on. The Chair will endeavor to enforce the rules, but can only do so by appealing to each individual Senator to refrain from conversation during the proceedings of the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor on the bill before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, so many amendments have been proposed to the bill, and we have had notice of so many, that I do not propose to discuss any particular amendment in detail, but to submit some general observations which will cover all of them, and also the policy which this Government ought to pursue with reference to railroad grants, and especially with reference to this railroad grant.

In the first place, I desire to remark that the land covered by this grant is not in any strict sense, and never was, nor is any other property of the United States, the property of the Government of the United States. All the land, all the public property, all the money in the Treasury, all that which the mere machinery of Government controls, belongs to the people of the United States and not to the Government of the United States. Our connection with it as Senators, as Representatives, and in any other department of the Government in which we may serve is solely that of a trustee, the beneficial interest being in the people of the United States.

So, in considering the very important question now before the Senate, I shall not be guided by any private feeling, or any private wish, or any private motive of liberality or generosity which I may have. I do not think there is any place in this legislation to invoke our feelings or sentiments of liberality or generosity. So far as I may act, so far as I may be influenced, beyond the strict legal title of the United States and of this company, I shall look at what I regard may be the feelings, the sentiments, the liberality, and the generosity which are entertained by the people of the United States, who are the true owners of this property.

I am not opposed, I have not been opposed, to the policy of giving lands as a subsidy for railroad construction. I think that the old policy inaugurated by our fathers and continued up to the year 1860, of granting six sections per mile for the building of railroads through the public lands in new countries where the population was sparse was a just and wise policy. I am willing to continue it; and although I shall vote for a strict forfeiture of all the rights not secured by this railroad company, I am willing to grant to them as much land as six sections per mile from one end of the line to the other. I am not willing to go any further.

I alluded to the former policy of the Government on the subject of railroad grants; and in this connection I may say that from the time of General Washington to the 1st of January, 1860 no more than 30,000,000 acres of the public lands were ever granted for railroads, canals, or other public improvements. That embraced the whole of it; and from that period to about 1875 the enormous quantity of over 179,000,000 acres of the public land was granted, and granted to private corporations, whereas the former grants were nearly always to the States in trust for the people of the States, for their use and benefit, and not to corporations. But about that time a change came over the policy of the Government, and, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Railroads, 179,952,768 acres have been donated in aid of railroads.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator that my recollection is that the date of 1873 was the last grant. There has been no grant since 1873, I think.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then thirteen years cover these grants against seventy-five years; 30,000,000 acres in seventy-five years; 180,000,000 in thirteen years. That shows the change which came over the policy of this country about the beginning of the year 1861.

That amounts to 281,176 square miles—a very large amount. It is very difficult to comprehend it at once; so I will make some comparisons. It is just eight and a half times the size of the State of Indiana. It is four times as large as all the New England States combined. It is larger than all the five great Northwestern States carved out of that magnificent donation of the State of Virginia to the States of this Union. It is twice as large as the Empire of Great Britain, larger than the Republic of France, larger than the Empire of Germany, larger than any European empire except Russia alone.

What I desire to call attention to is the gift which has been made by the Government of the United States, by the agents and trustees of the people of the United States, out of their common property for the benefit of corporations.

The value of this land is sometimes spoken of as insignificant. I shall go into that more fully hereafter; but at this point I desire to say that, taking the average price at which the railroads have sold these granted lands, as shown by the Railroad Commissioner's reports, $4.30 per acre, the present value, its unimproved value, amounts to $773,796,893. That is the gratuity which the Congress of the United States, simply the agents and trustees of the people of the United State, have taken from their property and donated to private individuals.

That is the general scheme, profligate and wasteful in the extreme. But when we come to the particular grant now before the Senate we find that the waste and profligacy have been even greater than the general average. The grant was in the States 12,800 acres of land for each mile of railroad built; in the Territories it was 25,600 acres; and in order to secure to the railroad company the full fruits of these profligate and wasteful grants of the public domain a strip of land extending from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, about 2,000 miles in length—120 miles in width in the Territories and 100 miles in width in the States—one-half of that land was reserved from settlement and improvement by the American people, reserved from the location of the road till now, reserved now.

On one-half of that magnificent empire, extending from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, 120 miles in width in the Territories—and it is almost all in the Territories—not one American settler has a right to place his foot, to build his cabin, or to clear his field, except by the permission of this railroad company.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator if he understands that all of the land is withdrawn or only the odd sections?

Mr. GEORGE. I said one-half.

Mr. TELLER. His last statement was, as I understood, that no settler could place his foot upon any land or cultivate a field or build a cabin within the limits of the grant.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not catch the idea of the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say in substance that the whole territory was withdrawn from settlement.

Mr. GEORGE. One-half of it is what I stated; at least that is the idea I had in my mind, and I think the RECORD will show that I said so—every alternate section.

By the charter which was passed on the 2d day of July, 1864, the road was to be built from Lake Superior to Puget Sound with a branch via the Columbia River to Portland, commencing at some point not more than 300 miles west of Puget Sound. That was the original grant. I will state the conditions of the grant as I go along in juxtaposition with the performance of the company.

In the original charter I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that the company professed an ability to build this road, and accepted the terms from Congress without putting a mortgage upon any acre of its land or upon any portion of its property. That was the tenth section of the original charter. That was the guise in which they came to Congress and asked for this magnificent donation. They came here saying, "We have got the ability, we have got the money to build the road according to the terms prescribed in the charter, without ever mortgaging one dollar's worth of our property."

The road was to be commenced within two years from the date of the act, which would be the 2d of July, 1866, and was to be finished on the 4th of July, 1876, the centennial year. They came here professing the ability, saying they had the means and the power to do this great work and to finish it as the crowing glory of the first century of the American Republic, and Congress made this magnificent donation upon that condition. Now, let us see what happened. The next scene on this stage, the curtain was lifted May 7, 1866, just fifty-six days before the forfeiture would come from a failure to commence the work. They then came to Congress and asked for two years more in which even to make a commencement and for an extension of the time of completion to the 4th day of July, 1878. It was peace now; there was no war. That was the proposition on May 7, 1866, when they came to ask for the first extension. Quoting the language of the Senator from Ohio now occupying the chair [Mr. SHERMAN], in discussing this proposition, I state that at that time the company had not turned up one sod, one spadeful of earth, although it was then within fifty-six days of the time when their rights were to become forfeited. On that subject I desire to have read for the instruction of the Senate and for the instruction of the country the remarks made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on the proposition then made for the purpose of extending the charter. They were made on an amendment offered by a Senator to the resolution granting the extension, to insert "not less than 100 miles to be completed within a year" instead of "50." Upon that these remarks were made. The proposition was made to withdraw the amendment of 100 miles a year. The Senator from Ohio objected to the withdrawal. I ask the Secretary to read those remarks. I want them all read, because they are weighty words, full of wisdom, for our instruction to-day and for the instruction of the country.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to its withdrawal until I say a word or two about it——

Mr. GEORGE. Referring to the withdrawal of the amendment requiring 100 miles at least to be built each year.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

I understood it to be an amendment agreed to by the committee. This measure really ought not to pass at all. A grant was made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of twice the usual land grant, four times the grant of land originally conveyed to land-grant roads. The road traverses a region of country 2,000 miles long from the headwaters of Lake Superior across to the Pacific Ocean, through a region of country that is being rapidly developed by the discovery of mines and by the opening of an agricultural country on the Red River. My own judgment is, that if Congress would act wisely, it would accept the surrender of this grant already acquired by lapse of time, because the parties who obtained the grant have failed to shovel a single sod of earth upon the ground, although they have had this grant for two or three years. They do not expect to move in the construction of this railroad until Congress gives them a subsidy. That is my deliberate conviction, because no progress has been made. In the mean time they hold this grant of land. In my judgment the Northern Pacific Railroad will best and most speedily be built by dividing it up in short lines of railroad between different connecting points, say one line from the head of Lake Superior to the Red River, and another line across the continent, unless it is intended to give a subsidy, when it ought to be built by one general company.

I know the parties engaged in this enterprise, and they are men of character, and as they think they can make progress with their work I am perfectly willing to give them some additional time. I do not wish to impede it. They have undertaken to make a continental road, which is an important one, and I think they ought to be required to make 100 miles a year. At that rate it will require twenty years for its completion. Is the whole of this vast region of country to be held apart from settlement, the land reserved from cultivation, until a single corporation can build a line across the continent? Why, sir, in twenty years from this time this country will be teeming with population. I have no doubt of it. Three years make a revolution in a new country like Montana on the line of this road; and, in my judgment, in ten years from this time the region of country on the Red River of the North will probably apply for admission as an independent State. Why, then, give to a single corporation power over half a strip of country 40 miles wide and 2,000 miles long for a period of forty years; for at 50 miles a year it would take forty years, Sir, it is preposterous.

When these objections were stated to the men interested in this matter, they knew very well that Congress would never consent to hold back the settlement of that vast region of country that a single company might have a monopoly of a great grant for a line over 2,000 miles long. It seems to me that if we were acting technically we had better let this grant go, let these gentlemen who have not yet undertaken the work that they proposed to complete—the time being out in July—give way to others; let others undertake the work and try to push it forward. But I do not believe better men than these can be got to do it, and therefore I was willing to grant them a reasonable time. Two years, as the Senator from California says, is a reasonable time. Within that time they must commence the work, and one year after the expiration of two years they must build 100 miles, and 100 miles a year after that, according to this amendment. It seems to me that is little enough.

The limit of time for the completion of the road, I believe, is fixed at ten years, which would require them to build it at the rate of 200 miles a year. That may need some modification; but after the first two or three years they could readily build 100 miles a year until the country is developed, and then they would no doubt be compelled to build the whole road within a reasonable time. That ten years is enough to build a road across the continent is shown by the actual fact that the great Pacific Railroad will be built probably in five years from the time the first shovel was put in the ground. It does not require the same time to build a railroad on these vast elevated plains in the West that it does in the East, in New England and in Ohio, but even in Ohio we have built 100 or 200 miles of railroad a year, and in one case 300 miles were built through a difficult country in Ohio and Western New York in a single year. I refer to the case of the Atlantic and Great Western road. It seems to me that the provisions of this resolution with the amendments proposed are reasonable, and it is all that we ought to do now. It is certainly all that I am willing to do.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the date of that?

Mr. GEORGE. May 30, 1868, when a proposition came before the Senate for the extension of time.

Mr. ALLISON. That was four years after the original charter?

Mr. GEORGE. Two years was the first extension.

Mr. ALLISON. The original charter was 1864; so that four years after the charter nothing had been done.

Mr. MAXEY. The grant had then lapsed.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wanted to get the date.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the attention of the country to the statement made by the Senator from Ohio near the end of the extract which has been read, that ten years was ample time in which to build the road, and that the other Pacific road was then about being completed and would be completed within five years from the time it was commenced. But those views did not prevail. The resolution granting the extension was passed on the very day on which the speech was made, and it was so popular that even the yeas and nays were not called upon the final passage of the measure.

By that resolution the commencement of the work was fixed on the 2d day of July, 1868, and the time for the completion of the road was extended to the 4th of July, 1878, four years from the grant of the original charter for commencement, and fourteen years from the time of the grant of the original charter for completion. They got that legislation on the 7th day of May, 1866, but did they go to work? Did they reverse the statement made by the Senator from Ohio that they had not struck a spade in the ground? No; they did nothing until July 1, 1868. Just one day before their grant would have been forfeited by the extended term, they came before Congress and got an extension of two years in which to make a commencement, and by a technical, and I may say a mean fraud, while it appeared on the face of the resolution itself to shorten the time of completion, they added one more year to it. It was one of those tricks of legislation that corporations know so well how to avail themselves of. Instead of coming before Congress as they did in 1866 and asking for an extension, they went back and amended the eighth section of the original charter so as to make it read that the finishing was to be on the 1st of July, 1877. After having got this retroactive legislation inserted in the charter, then the act of 1866 which granted them an additional two years was ingrafted upon that, so as to make the time for the finishing of the road the 4th day of July, 1879.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Mr. Rice, who was advocating the measure, stated in the Senate that the effect of the legislation proposed was to shorten and not lengthen the time. By the law of 1866 the road was to have been finished on the 4th day of July, 1878. This legislation in 1868 said it should be finished in 1877, and to all appearances it was diminishing the time in which the road was to be completed, but yet in the way which I have just explained to the Senate they got another year, until 1879.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to know, in the first place, whether the effect of that legislation was or was not to waive the original condition subsequent attached to the granting act by which the road was to be commenced within a certain time and completed within a certain other time?

Mr. GEORGE. I answer that question in this way, that as to failure of time specified in the laws prior to this it was a waiver of forfeiture as to those times, but not a waiver of forfeitures for non-compliance with times specified in this legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. One other question. The Senator answers that in his judgment as a lawyer that legislation fixing a different time or attaching a new condition was an express waiver of the original condition subsequent attached to the grant by virtue of the express provision of the grant. Now, the next question I wish to ask him is whether, the grantor having once waived the original condition, the title having vested in the company, it being a grant in præsenti, the grantor can by any subsequent act whatever, as a matter of pure, naked law, attach another and a different condition subsequent upon the failure to perform which on the part of the company there is a right of re-entry? In other words, is it not true, as a matter of law, that when a condition subsequent is once waived by the grantor, expressly or otherwise, it is gone forever? And is it not a further fact, as a matter of pure law, that there is no power in the grantor, either the sovereign or an individual grantor, to create a new condition-subsequent and attach it to an estate that belongs to the grantee?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course when the grantor once waives the performance of a condition subsequent it is gone; but if by agreement of the grantor and grantee a new condition subsequent is inserted in lieu of the old one, then by all the law that I know, as well as by justice and reason and common sense, the grantee is obliged to comply with the last condition.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But the Senator admits——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will not insist.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Oregon really insists that there are no grounds to forfeit this railroad grant, I will so assume for the purposes of the argument; if that is his view, I shall be glad to meet him on some subsequent day on that proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not insisting on that at all.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator does not insist on that there is no quarrel between us.

When I was interrupted by the Senator from Oregon I had got to March, 1869, when this railroad company had lifted the curtain for the performance of another scene in this drama; and what was that? Up to that time, from the 2d of July, 1864, to the 1st day of March, 1869, nearly five years, this company had done nothing but come and ask or demand from Congress the grant of new rights and of additional privileges. On that day they applied for, and of course got—because they got everything they asked for—the privilege, contrary to the tenth section of the original charter, of mortgaging the road and telegraph line, and nothing else. That was all they could mortgage. They did not ask to mortgage the land they got.

You would suppose then they would go to work, would you not? But no, they waited a month and ten days, and then they lifted the curtain again, not to show performance or to show that they had done anything in the performance of this great work which they had been intrusted with by the American Congress, but to ask another privilege, and they got the privilege to build a branch railroad from Tacoma, in Washington Territory, to Kalama, on the Columbia River.

About that time Congress had waked up to these enormous grants, and in granting the privilege of making that branch road they expressly provided that the company should not have any land grant for it. I will show you directly how the railroad company beat Congress out of that. That was the express provision of that grant of a charter, that they should not have any lands.

Then you would suppose, Mr. President, they would go to work. They had got everything they had asked. They had found a liberal and generous Congress dealing with the rights and properties of the American people. But no, they came again before Congress after waiting a while. They waited from April 10, 1869, to May 31, 1870, and then they came again, and up to that time they had not struck a spade in the ground. No, sir; I am mistaken about that, for I remember that in the debate on this last proposition, when the then Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, was twitting them for a failure to do a single stroke of work upon this road, some Senator got up and said that in February last—it was now May, 1870—they had actually commenced work in Minnesota leveling the grades. Somebody replied, "Why, Mr. President, at that time in Minnesota the thermometer was 20° below zero, and it was utterly impossible to stick a spade in the ground." In February, 1870, they made the application for the privileges to which I shall call the Senate's attention, and to prevent the argument, made as it was made by the Senator from Ohio, that they had done nothing, they put a lot of men on frozen ground in the State of Minnesota to pretend to do something. On that pretense they got what they wanted.

Let us see what they did get May 31, 1870. The first thing they got was a thing that they said in the beginning they would not have, that they did not want. That was the privilege of mortgaging everything, all rights of property of whatever character they had. Next they got a change of their main line down the Columbia River and up to Puget Sound and the branch line by the Cascade Mountains—whereby, as I indicated some time ago, they are now claiming, (and they have actually received patents for 3,000 acres) the land upon the branch road from Tacoma to Kalama, which Congress allowed them to build expressly on the condition that they should have no lands for it. That is what they got on May 31, 1870, and they got the privilege in addition of commencing their work on the 2d of July, 1870, six long years after the original grant.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator to say that there was an express provision in the legislation that they should have no land?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; and they got it by a legislative trick, as these railroad men always do when they set themselves about it. From Tacoma to Kalama they got the privilege of building a branch road with the express provision that they should not have any land for it. In this act of May 31, 1870, they got the main line run around by Portland, and then when they got to Kalama they took up that branch, and on that branch, now being the main line, they claim land by virtue of the original charter.

Mr. McPHERSON. Getting it by a change of line?

Mr. GEORGE. Making the change so as to embrace the branch.

Mr. McPHERSON. And calling that the main line?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator understands that the road was constructed after the passage of both acts, does he not?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOLPH. The road was not constructed when the last act was passed.

Mr. GEORGE. They had not done anything up to that time. They never struck a spade until they got all the rights and all the privileges which the American Congress could be induced to grant them, and Congress granted all they asked for.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senators on this side did not hear what the Senator said, and would like to have it repeated so that we can have the advantage of it.

Mr. HARRIS. It will be seen in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. They had a little fight over that. The last extension, which was opposed, I believe, only by the Senator from Ohio who now occupies the chair [Mr. SHERMAN], went through without even a call of the yeas and nays; but when they came back six years after the grant of the charter demanding all these rights and all these privileges of the American Congress some of its members began to think they had had enough. Then there was another Senator from Ohio here, described recently in this Hall by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as the greatest and honestest Democrat in all this land; and, sir, if his title to that depended alone upon the magnificent defense he made of the rights of the American people against this railroad company on that occasion no man could deny it to him.

They came, and in addition to what I have stated, wanting a change in the line, and, getting an additional grant of land for 105 miles, they got their indemnity limits extended so as to embrace, with the various lines in Washington Territory, about all that Territory. On the western side of Washington Territory was the Tacoma branch, which they got covered in under this legislation; they had 120 miles there; and then a little higher up was the Cascade branch, and they got 120 miles there—240 miles in the Territory of Washington, one-half of which no American citizen could put his foot upon except as a trespasser against the soverign and sacred rights of this railroad company!

Now I want to show how this great Democrat performed his duty on that occasion. I want to show it because it contains an instructive lesson to us in the performance of our duty in relation to this grant. Mr. Thurman offered an amendment to that bill which I ask the Secretary to read, and to read a little slowly so that every Senator here can take in the full significance of the privileges and rights which that amendment secured to the American people and which the American Senate, only nine voting in favor of it, refused to accede to and to give to the people of this country.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. THURMAN. I now offer an amendment, which I will send to the Secretary's table, to come in at the end of the resolution.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

"And the rights and privileges hereby conferred upon said company and the grants of land hereby made to it are conferred and made upon the following express conditions, to wit:

"First. That the alternate sections of land heretofore or hereby granted to said company, except such portions thereof as shall be laid out by said company in town or city lots, and such portions thereof as shall be used by it for depots, ditches, water stations, round-houses, coal, wood, lumber, and cattle yards, sites for workshops and other buildings or structures necessary for said road or branch road, shall be sold by said company to actual settlers upon the same, and to no other person or persons; and no such settler shall be entitled to purchase more than 160 acres thereof, nor shall he or those claiming under him receive a deed therefor until the same shall have been actually occupied by him, or by him and them, at least two years.

"Second. The price at which said lands shall be sold by said company to actual settlers as aforesaid shall not exceed $1.25 per acre, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum upon deferred payments.

"Third. Such actual settlers shall respectively be entitled to purchase said lands as aforesaid in lots of 40, 80, or 160 acres.

"Fourth. All said lands for sale to actual settlers as aforesaid that shall not be sold by said company within fifteen years from the passage of this joint resolution shall revert to the United States.

"Fifth. Any mortgage or morgages of said lands, or any part thereof, that may be made or executed by said company shall be subject to the conditions aforesaid in favor of actual settlers or of the United States, and no foreclosure of any such mortgage or sale thereunder by any trustee or trustees, or under any judicial judgment or decree, shall operate to deprive such actual settlers or the United States of the rights and privileges hereinbefore specified; nor shall anything in this resolution contained be held to waive the conditions upon which patents are to issue, specified in section 4 of the charter of said company.

"Sixth. Within ninety days after the passage of this joint resolution said company shall file in the Department of the Interior its written assent to the foregoing conditions, and if it shall fail so to do this joint resolution shall become null and void."

Mr. GEORGE. These were the terms which Mr. Thurman proposed to make as an original condition to this new grant. They were about to lose their rights. They were only within a few days of the time when their rights would all be forfeited under the charter. Mr. Thurman had perceived, as the country had perceived, that this immense and profligate grant needed in the interest of the American people to be recaptured if possible, and so he proposed in the amendment which has been read simply this: That these lands should be sold only to actual settlers, to the hardy pioneers who built up this country, at $1.25 an acre, and that they should be sold in 40 and 80 and 160 acre tracts to suit the means of the poor man who, driven by adverse fortune or possibly following his innate energy, sought to better his condition and that of his family on the frontier. He made a splendid speech in behalf of this proposition, and it got the poor and pitiful number of 9 votes in its favor.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to a fact there?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly; if I make any mistake about facts I want to be corrected.

Mr. ALLISON. All the alternate sections, that is the even sections, within this range were open to settlement without the payment of any money.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course the United States could sell its own land at its own price, but the object of this amendment was to fix the price and the condition of the land granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quarreling with the Senator respecting his argument, but merely calling his attention to the fact that if people wanted to occupy these lands they could do so during these fifteen years, and can now, without the payment of any money.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, Mr. President, they could occupy one-half of their heritage, enjoy one-half of their rights, but Mr. Thurman's amendment was intended to secure them against this railroad corporation to the whole extent. It is not according to the grand principles of the Democratic party that the American people shall be shorn of one-half of their rights and one-half of their privileges in such an empire as this; and his object was to secure them. It was voted down. And right here I will notice the fact that there were two Senators from Mississippi on this floor at that time, one of whom, though the large majority of his constituents did not own an acre of land, voted against the Thurman amendment, and the other one representing that class which owned no land did not find it convenient to vote at all.

So the company got all they wanted. Their very last demand that they had the audacity to make on the American Congress had been liberally and fully met. Then what happened? This was on May 31, 1870. Then on July 1, 1870, just one day before the forfeiture of this land would have occurred by reason that they did not commence the work they did commence, and at the same time they put a mortgage on this land and this property for $30,000,000.

Mr. Thurman, in the speech which he made in support of the amendment which I have had read, predicted just exactly what did occur, that under the power to make this mortgage they would make default on it, the property of the company would be sold and bought by a ring. Let us see whether his prediction was not verified. No work had been done up to that time except a little digging in the frozen ground in Minnesota in February, 1870. They commenced a little work in July, 1870, and they made a mortgage; and here is the way they made the work and complied with their contract, complied with their promise, made in the charter by accepting the charter, to the American Congress and to the American people. Having got, as my friend from Oregon suggests, the land grant from Tacoma to Kalama, they commenced operations over there pretty soon, and the first work was from Thompson, Minn., to Red River, 228 miles, by the 1st of October, 1872, and then from Fargo to Bismarck, 196 miles, October 1, 1873. During this time they worked on the Oregon branch from Kalama to Tenino, and finished those 65 miles by July 15, 1873. Then the 40.1 miles from Tenino to Tacoma they finished by March 1, 1874. So altogether by the 1st of March, 1874, 529.1 miles, or in round numbers 530 miles, were constructed.

Then the curtain dropped again. We see nothing of the action of this railroad company from its report on March 1, 1874, for six years and four months, in which time 100 miles of road were completed by the 1st of July, 1880, and 50 miles more by the 1st of November, 1880; but in the mean time, after the report made in March, 1874, came that part of this grand drama of fraud and imposition upon the American people which the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, had predicted. I do not see in the report of the Railroad Commissioner the exact date, but prior to April 16, 1875, the railroad company had made a default on the interest upon the $30,000,000 of bonds, and on that date proceedings were commenced, as Mr. Thurman said they would be, to foreclose the mortgage, and they were hurried through with railroad speed. Commencing on the 16th day of April, on the 25th day of August or September—I have forgotten which—of the same year a lawsuit embracing this magnificent empire was carried through the courts to a final determination, and not only to that, but to final execution. It was six long years before they struck a spade in the ground. They refused to strike a spade in the ground until they had got every privilege which they desired. When they went to work they worked slowly and dilatorily; but when they came to that part of the performance which that old Roman, that old Democrat Thurman, had said would be the end and consummation of this proceeding, no lightning flash ever traveled with greater speed than they did. Under the swoop of the attorneys and agents of this railroad company these proceedings were hurried; and so in August or September of the same year –I have forgotten which, and it is not material—the thing had all been completed, the road sold and bought, and bought by whom? Bought as Senator Thurman had said, by a ring of bondholders.

This was in September, 1875. Then came reorganization; and how did they reorganize? With only 530 miles of road completed, this is the way they reorganized: they reorganized by issuing to the bondholders the $30,000,000 which had been spent on building these 530 miles of road in preferred stock guaranteed to pay 8 per cent. interest and $21,000,000 more of preferred stock—$51,000,000. Then what became of the balance? They could not give up this magnificent empire, and so they issued $49,000,000 of common stock to the old stockholders.

My friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] a few days ago told us something of the watering of stock by the railroads of this country. I do not know whether he referred to this company or not. If he did not, when he has occasion again to say as he did then in eloquent and strong pointed language anything about the watering of stock he ought to talk about this. All other waterings of stock were mere little dews falling on the morning grass to vivify and make it fresh; but here, when the stockholders had never paid a cent, as was charged by Mr. Thurman in his speech, and he challenged Senators on the other side to show that they had ever paid a cent, they turned loose a Niagara of water into the stock of this corporation—$51,000,000 of preferred stock and $49,000,000 of common stock, $100,000,000 to represent 530 miles of completed road!

Mr. President, that is not all. Here is $100,000,000 to represent 530 miles of road, just $25,000,000 more than the Commissioner of Railroads estimates as the cost of the whole 2,000 miles.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's line of argument, and I do not know that I shall say anything more on this question; but if he will allow me to make a suggestion or two in that connection——

Mr. GEORGE. Just a suggestion. I do not want to have a speech from the Senator from Oregon injected into the belly of mine.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to make a statement in regard to this reorganization. I have understood and seen it stated in a letter from Mr. Billings, the former president of the company, which I read some time since and have not now in my possession, that the amount of bonds sold for the four hundred and odd miles constructed at the time of the reorganization was $30,000,000. There was due on these bonds two years' interest at 8 per cent. In the reorganization, as I have seen it stated in the document referred to, the bondholders surrendered the bonds and took preferred stock at par, the interest on the bonds being included and three years' future interest on the preferred stock being included, making 40 per cent. on the $30,000,000, or $12,000,000; making $42,000,000. That was what the bondholders received. That was eleven years ago. These bondholders have never received since that time anything but a dividend of 11 per cent. in certificates which represented the proceeds of the land sold, which should have gone to pay dividends on the stock and were used in construction. They have never received a dollar in money.

Mr. GEORGE. Allow me——

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to finish the statement, having begun upon it, if the Senator will allow me. If the Senator does not yield, I will sit down.

Mr. GEORGE. I am willing to yield to any reasonable length, but I can not give way to hear all the apologies and all the reasonings and everything of that sort of a railroad company.

Mr. DOLPH. It is simply a question whether the Senator yields for me to finish my statement.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I will not. You can reply to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt the Senator from Oregon as a lawyer has had a great deal of experience in reference to railroad companies which would interest the people of this country, but as I am just now going on with the people's side of the case I ask him to wait until I get through. I believe I was talking about watered stock, about $49,000,000 of common stock and about $51,000,000 of preferred stock guaranted at 8 per cent. interest, all based on 530 miles of railroad.

Mr. CALL. How much did it cost?

Mr. GEORGE. Not that much. Here the first company made its exit from the stage of action; 530 miles of railroad and $100,000,000 of stock!

Now let us see what else they did. This $100,000,000 of stock, preferred and common, represented $188,698 a mile of railroad built. The line built was the easiest in the world. One Senator said they had nothing to do but to stick a spade in the ground and level it a little and put the cross-ties on, and the Commissioner of Railroads put the cost at $28,000 a mile. That left $160,000 of stock to each mile of the railroad for $28,000 a mile of actual expenditure.

That was not all. They were entitled on the 530 miles to a land grant and nobody proposes to take it away from them. That land grant amounted to 10,518,756 acres. At $4 an acre—and they sold their lands at that, and those 530 miles of road were in the best part of the country, as I understand—its value was $42,075,000, or at the rate of $78,000 a mile for a road which ought not to have cost and did not cost over $28,000 a mile.

A land grant worth over twice the cost of the road and $100,000,000 of stock were the proceeds of this first operation on the property of the American people; and yet we are told that we are bound in good faith or we are bound by some sort of generosity on subjects of this sort to waive the right of the American people in order that the men who captured 530 miles of this railroad and this enormous sum may capture still more. The company reported that it cost them $40,000 a mile to build the road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At what time was that report?

Mr. GEORGE. They reported that the first 530 miles cost $40,000 a mile.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow we right there to say that in 1872 there was an investigation ordered in regard to this road by the House of Representatives, if it is proper to refer to it.

Mr. TELLER. That was a past House. You can refer to that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In that investigation this question was put:

What has been the total cost of the work done, and the cost per mile; first, for the eastern division; second, for the western division?

This was to Mr. J. Gregory Smith, president of the Northern Pacific at that time.

Answer. The roadway and superstructure on 229 miles of the eastern end of the road cost $5,397,843 or $23,571 per mile; the same for the 25 miles on the west end of the road cost $714,000 or $28,560 per mile. All the elements of railroad construction cost more on the Pacific slope than on the Atlantic slope.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that their own report?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is the sworn statement of Smith, the president of the road in 1872.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt that was ample, and I was going further to quote the Commissioner of Railroads.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Allow me right there——

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir, I prefer to go on. I am very much disposed to oblige everybody, but I shall never get through if I keep on yielding; and I am getting weary, and I prefer to go on. I would yield to the Senator from New Jersey as soon as to anybody living, but I want to get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. They charge $42,000 a mile in the report. I will show you how they made up that charge. It appears that in this $42,000 a mile was $1,108,278.52 or $1,900 a mile for surveys. That is a good deal for surveys of 530 miles, and it would almost build the road. The equipment was put at $2,434,346, a pretty extensive equipment, indicating, if it was an honest and just amount, the doing of an immense business on the 530 miles of railroad. Then there was $2,728,346.25 which they expended for what they called "auxiliary railroad and water lines," which they had no right, as far as I can see, to expend.

I understand that stock represents money paid into the corporate treasury. Is that right, I ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]? He nods assent. Stock represents money paid into the treasury of the corporation. Then at the end of 530 miles, with all these magnificent land grants, they had $100,000,000 stock, and according to the estimation of the Commissioner of Railroads only $75,000,000 was necessary to complete the entire road for 2,000 miles.

I think that even these poor men who happened to be so unfortunate as to get all these magnificent grants from Congress ought to have been satisfied with the gains they had then made. But suppose we go on and give them all they ask, still let us see how they will come out. Their grant, as estimated by the Commissioner of Railroads, amounts to 42,000,000 acres of land, or 65,620 square miles—a little more than twice the size of the State of Indiana, about as large as the State of Indiana and the State of Ohio combined. An empire the size of these two great States is the game for which the Northern Pacific is playing now in the American Congress and before the American people.

The Railroad Commissioner estimates these lands in 1881 as follows: They had sold, up to the 30th of June, 1880, 2,600,000 acres of this land for $9,000,000, about $4 an acre. The rest of this land, estimated at $2.50 per acre by the Railroad Commissioner, amounts to $90,750,000; total, $108,750,000; and then the watered stock of $100,000,000; when the whole cost of the road did not exceed $75,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I want to put before the Senate and the country something about the character of this railroad. Gentlemen talk about its being built over mountains and through a vast desert plain and all that sort of thing, and tell us that the immense cost justified these enormous drafts. I will read from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1869:

The Northern Pacific presents as one of its strong claims to public attention its comparatively low summit levels. It proposes to cross the Cascade Mountains in Washington Territory by the Snoqualmie Pass, 3,000 feet above sea level, and the highest range of the Rocky Mountains by Cadotte's Pass, whose elevation of 6,167 feet may be reduced to 5,337 feet by a tunnel 2¼ miles long. Blodget's charts show that the respective points where the Northern Pacific and the Union Pacific pass the main range of the Rocky Mountains are on nearly the same winter isothermal parallel of 20° Fahrenheit, with about the same winter temperature on the adjacent plains and foot-hills, and with a summit level at Cadotte's Pass—

That is on the Northern Pacific—three thousand feet lower than that at Evans's Pass—

Which is on the Union Pacific Railroad. The Commissioner continues:

The Northern Pacific offers a pretty safe guarantee against these formidable obstructions from snow which the more southern route has already experienced. The Northern Pacific route claims to be the shortest and most central from the tributary waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Then, speaking of the company, he says:

The undeveloped resources of this company are attracting the attention of capitalists. Its landed subsidy is double that of the Union Pacific road. Comparatively a very small proportion of its line runs through an elevated region.

Governor Stevens was of the opinion that not more than one-fifth of the land from Red River to Puget's Sound is inarable—and that this is largely made up of mountains covered with valuable timber.

Not fit for cultivation—

Says the Commissioner:

It is evident that an immense agricultural area is here awaiting development. The great wheat-growing regions, on the left bank of the Upper Missouri, promise speedy settlement upon the opening of an avenue for the transportation of their products to market.

That is the kind of country, four-fifths of it arable, a great wheat-producing country. Of course now all this land is worthless! The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] said the other day that the land on the Cascade branch was of no value to anybody but the railroad company. It seems that these lands belonging to the American people, consecrated and dedicated by the fathers of our Republic for homes for the unsheltered families of this country, in the estimation of the American Congress are to be treated as of no value except to a railroad company.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the country somewhat to the reduction in the cost of building railroads since this charter was granted. The charter was granted when railroad iron was worth $126 a ton. It has kept steadily falling until it is now worth $35 a ton, about one-fourth of its original cost. I have a table made out on that subject by Mr. Smith, the superintendent of the document-room of the Senate, which I submit as part of my remarks:

Average prices of iron rails at mills in Eastern Pennsylvania from 1864 to 1886, per ton of 2,240 pounds.

[From American Iron and Steel Association Report, 1884.]

Year.	Average price.	Year.	Average price.
1864	$126	1876	$41¼
1865	98¾	1877	35½
1866	86¼	1878	33¾
1867	83½	1879	41½
1868	78¾	1880	49½
1869	77½	1881	47¼
1870	72½	1882	45½
1871	70¾	1883
1872	85½	1884	32
1873	76½	1885	27
1874	58¾	1886	35
1875	47¾		36

So, then, this delay, this dilly-dallying, this refusal on the part of the company to comply with its contracts and its conditions have all resulted in injury to the American people and in benefit to the corporation.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of the performances of this railroad company, which comes here before the American Congress and asks its bounty and favor. I hold in my hand a joint resolution reported by a committee of the House of Representatives which makes a charge in the way of an inquiry against this railroad company, and which I have the authority of the Delegate from Washington Territory for saying was substantially admitted by the president of the company. I ask the Chief Clerk to read on the second page of the joint resolution from line 5 down to and including line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chief Clerk will read as indicated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

First. If it did not in the year 1884, either directly or indirectly, through some of its officers, employés, or agents, lay out a town site in the Yakima Valley, in Washington Territory, called North Yakima, which town site was some 4 miles farther west on its Cascade branch line than Yakima City, an old-established town containing a larger population than any town within more than 100 miles therefrom, and, although running its trains directly through said Yakima City, refuse to establish any station in said town or to stop its trains therein, and further refuse to stop for freight or passengers at any point nearer to said town than its said town site of North Yakima, and by such action utterly destroy the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property, vested private interests, which were the accumulation of years of frontier privation, toil, and industry?

Mr. GEORGE. That was the first inquiry propounded; but the point is that the charge made in the inquiry was substantially admitted to be true by the president of the company before the committee of the House of Representatives; and what is that? These railroads are built; as I understand, the companies come before us here and ask large subsidies upon the ground that they propose to develop our country, to enrich our people, and to give them facilities which they did not possess before. Yet it appears that this road passed through a flourishing town in Washington Territory, the largest one in all that section already built, and refused to stop its trains there, and built up a town of its own 4 miles off, and in its greed for money, in order to build up its own town, destroyed and crushed the citizens of the other town; and I am further informed that they persisted in their refusal to stop at the old town until the courts of the country compelled them to stop there.

This is the corporation which comes here before the American Senate and asks of this body to surrender, not their individual property, not their individual rights, but the rights, the property of the American people, whose interest this railroad company in the manner I have pointed out have trampled under foot and despised. That is, the suppliant here for bounty asks this from the American Congress out of the public property for its private coffers.

Mr. President, another thought and I shall conclude. I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the very remarkable debate which occurred here a few days ago, in which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] alluded to the danger to our institutions from large aggregations of land in the hands of corporations and private individuals. The danger is great. I refer the country to his speech; I have no time to elaborate it now.

But here with our eyes open, with millions of acres of the public domain being captured by aliens and strangers, with millions more being put into mortmain, in the hands of corporations, what is our duty, representing the interests of the great mass of the American people? Shall we go on and by criminal neglect of our duties allow this railroad company to become the owner of the public domain, of an empire equal to two States as large as the State of Indiana, or shall we do what the American people everywhere, without a dissenting voice so far as I know outside of railroad circles, the people who own this property, the people whose treasure paid for it, whose blood won it, demand that we shall do? Shall we obey their voice and simply insist upon our legal rights?

Senators may say that the proposition to forfeit all this land from the date of the first failure is illegal and can not be enforced. This bill does not settle that question. The railroad company will have the right in the courts to acquire all the legal rights which they are entitled to under their charter. The bill is simply an assertion of a claim on the part of the American people. It settles nothing except to give the people of this country a standing in their own courts to assert their own rights.

It has been said that we have gone on and accepted various portions of this road after the time at which it was to be completed. That is a snare, Mr. President. Accepted! How accepted? Was there any gift of that road to us? Was there any tender of it to us? Not a bit of it. All that has been done is this, that the agents and trustees of the American people have stood silently by when this company in the pursuit its own business was building its own road for its own use, for its own purposes, and appropriating it to itself, and we have not told it "you shall not have the land."

In some instances they have obtained patents for the land, and I infer from what I heard the other day in the Senate Chamber somewhere that after the patent had been issued that was an end of the controversy. A patent, as every other act performed by a public officer, is valid or invalid as it is done or made or issued in pursuance of law.

Mr. MAXEY. It is not title; it is the evidence of title.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all. No man, President or Secretary of the Interior, has a right without the authority of law and in obedience to law to convey one single particle of the property of the American people to anybody else.

But then it is said that we have been negligent; that we ought to have spoken before; that we have been sitting here and have not asserted our rights, and the railroad company has built what? Its own railroad, not ours, and that because we, the trustees and agents of the American people, have not discharged our duty, a right has been lost by the American people.

Against such a doctrine I protest. It is not found in the Constitution, nor is it found in the laws of the land. If there is anything settled, it is that no negligence on the part of a public agent can prejudice the rights of the people. Their rights remain unaffected by the faithlessness and negligence of their trustees.

Upon that, sir, I plant this case, and upon that I urge on behalf of the millions of landless and homeless American people, in behalf of the millions of idle and striking laborers who are without employment and who are insufficiently paid, that this great domain, the heritage of the American people, shall not by our negligence, our failure to do our duty, be lost to them and their posterity.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is not as to the wisdom of the policy of granting lands to railroads or other public enterprises. The simple question before the Senate now is whether we will forfeit the land grant of one railroad company from a certain point to a certain point over which no road has been constructed. Then the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska comes in, and if adopted it will be equivalent to a declaration that we shall forfeit all the land unearned in the common parlance with reference to railroads; that is, all the land that is not conterminous to a completed road.

I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. I shall vote in every case I think—there may be possibly an exception, though I do not now know of any—where the railroad company has not completed its line, that the land conterminous to the proposed line shall be forfeited to the Government.

If I had been a member of this body when this grant was before Congress I am satisfied, anxious as I have been for communication across that section of the country with the Pacific slope, that I never should have given my vote for the bill. I repeatedly refused my vote while in this body to its extension, to a declaration by Congress that the company might continue to withhold the land from public settlement. I introduced years ago when a member of this body a bill to forfeit this particular land.

But this is not a question, as I said before, of the wisdom of the act of Congress making the grant; nor is it a question how wise or how foolish Congress may have been in standing by and looking on while they built the road without asserting the right of forfeiture provided for in the original grant. Neither is it a question whether the railroad company has treated the people of Washington Territory, of Montana, of Oregon, of Dakota, or of Minnesota properly in its intercourse with them, or whether it has built up some towns to the detriment of others. That is not the question. Neither is it a question whether the railroad company has issued more stock or bonds than it ought to have issued. Neither is it a question whether it has constructed the road economically and prudently in the interest of its stockholders. It is a simple naked question of law, whether you will go beyond the unearned lands or whether you will not. As I said, there is no proposition before the Senate to-day on the bill that I know of to forfeit any of the land conterminous with the constructed line of road.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that is the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and I know the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has had printed an amendment proposing to forfeit the first lands subject to forfeiture.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; that is merely technical. It can easily be done if it has not been done. I understand those amendments are not pending, but if Senators are going to present them I suppose it will be proper to do so.

I do not understand that this is a question of bounty; that the railroad company appeals to us to be generous with it. I understand that as to the earned lands, using a term which everybody understands, the lands conterminous with the completed road, it is claimed by the company that it is now the legal holder thereof and that the Government of the United States has not the power to take away from it those lands.

If these parties were addressing themselves to the discretionary power of Congress, if they were asking Congress to overlook a forfeiture, as they were in 1879 and 1880 and subsequent thereto, the argument of the Senator from Mississippi would be in place. It would be proper then to consider how well they discharged the trust imposed upon them by the Government when it made to them this great grant. The value of the grant, the expenditure of money and all that, might have been and ought to have been a question years ago for the Senate, but it is not now.

Years ago, in the early grants, in the good old times that the Senator from Mississippi is anxious as I suppose to see return, long before there had been a Republican administration, it was held by Democratic Attorneys-General, learned and capable and patriotic Attorneys-General, that a grant like that under consideration was a grant in præsenti, that the title was vested in the corporation by the grant itself, to be only definitely fixed when the line of location was established.

The Supreme Court of the United States in more than one decision has held that doctrine. I have heard that doctrine in later days controverted and questioned by gentlemen of both sides in this Chamber politically. It is a doctrine which never has been doubted by any lawyer in this country of either political party who has had any reputation unless he may have been stimulated and urged to it by the recent complaints of the people. Up to the time that the Supreme Court of the United States made its decision in Schulenberg vs. Harriman, in 1874, I venture to say that no public man having any reputation as a lawyer ever denied the doctrine laid down by that court. The court was sustained in it by Caleb Cushing, by John J. Crittenden, by Reverdy Johnson, by men whose reputation as lawyers was equal to that of any men who have lived upon this continent.

We must deal with the law. The Senate of the United States can not listen to appeals in favor of the people if the law is against them, because we are bound by the law. If the title has vested in a corporation by a failure of the Government of the United States to take advantage of the failure to complete the road within the time fixed, then it will be impossible for us to divest that company of their title by law. Any law that we may pass with that view will not answer the purpose, however good the intention may be.

The honorable Senator from Mississippi says it is a question for the courts. It is a question for the Senate, and the Senate should come up to it, not for the purpose of turning it over to determine what the courts may say, but let the Senate pass upon the question of law. If Senators think the Supreme Court has been mistaken, then I suppose it would perhaps be right for the Senate to act upon its own judgment. Is there any reason to suppose that a subsequent Supreme Court will change the rule laid down in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, which has been since reiterated in at least three cases ably and carefully considered?

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to see if I understand the point made by the Senator from Colorado. Does he understand that the decision of the Supreme Court is, that when the entry is made by the passage of an act of Congress upon the subject the forfeiture only takes place as to the rights remaining after the act passed; and does he deny that at any time after the entry is made or the act is passed, by well-settled rules of common law, the effect of the entry or act, unless limited by the statute, is to give to the United States all of its rights as if the entry had been made on the day the forfeiture took place?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I comprehend exactly what the Senator means, but I will state what I understand the court to have decided, and which I understand to be in accordance with the universal rule upon this question not only in this country but in England.

I understand it to be an elementary principle that a subsequent condition being performed by some one who is entitled to perform it is thenceforth forever gone. That is the language of the books. After the grantor has accepted the performance, or allowed the performance to take place, he can not take advantage of a condition subsequent. Such is the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the case I have mentioned, and such is the rule laid down in the elementary works. All elementary writers upon real estate, I believe without exception, have asserted that to be the doctrine.

The Supreme Court declared that that applied to the United States as it applied to an individual. In the case to which I refer the grant was made in 1856. The decision was made in 1874. The limit was ten years. There had never been a line of railroad built, but the Supreme Court said the grant is a grant in præsenti, and until there is a re-entry and taking possession, or what is equivalent to it, a judicial proceeding provided for by law, or a declaration by the law-making power of this country, the grant remains a grant in præsenti, and the title remains, notwithstanding the subsequent condition is not performed.

Mr. President, I need not go into any extensive argument. I ought not to be required to cite in the Senate of the United States elementary works. Yet going back and beginning with the very earliest writers upon the subject, it will be found that that has been the law for many, many years, as held by all the courts of Great Britain and repeatedly held by the best courts of this country long before the Supreme Court decided the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman.

So it is a question of law and not a question of generosity. It is true that if an act should be passed forfeiting the land back to the point where the road was constructed when the time fixed in the statute expired, the courts might say that Congress had gone beyond its power, and they might restore to the company the land; but what would be the condition of all that country during the years of litigation? With the titles unsettled and uncertain, no man would know whether he owned the land that he had bought, or whether he could buy a particular piece of land or not.

It is not any answer to the legal proposition to say that the grant ought not to have been made. It is not a lawyer-like proposition to say that because the grant was an extravagant grant, an excessive grant, because it was an unwise and foolish act of the Legislature, therefore we are to disregard the plain and settled principles of law.

I am willing to vote for the amendment, because I think the railroad company have had ample time to complete their road, because I think they should have used greater diligence; and if it was their misfortune that they could not complete the road they must suffer, because the right exists, and the appeal the Senator made to us to provide land for the landless and homes for the homeless is an appeal which always meets when it comes to me with a hearty response.

But I do not think the Senator from Mississippi needs to put it upon the ground he did, that prior to 1860 there was such careful provision made in regard to the public lands in the interest of the settler. I do not think that a careful examination of the history of the land legislation in this country will justify any man on that side of the Chamber in pointing with any degree of pride or satisfaction to the history of his political party with reference to the public lands prior to 1861. I wish to say to the honorable Senator from Mississippi that a careful examination of all the files of the Senate and of the House will show that these grants were never made by a political vote. The grant which he has characterized in terms as so extravagant and so outrageous a robbery of the people was supported upon the floor of the Senate by the par excellence Democrat Mr. Hendricks in an able speech, in which he insisted that it was right and proper to grant to this company exactly what was granted to it; and there is not upon the files of the Senate a dissenting vote as to that great grant by a Democrat that I am aware of. It was not a political question at all, and neither political party can assert of the other that it was the policy of either party to make these grants.

The honorable Senator said that up to 1860 the grants of public land had only been 30,000,000 acres. The Senator has not read carefully the reports of the Land Department or he would have increased the amount by at least 18,000,000 acres. Forty-eight million acres up to 1860 had been granted away for railroads and public improvements. Those grants found upon the floor of the Senate such able defenders as Mr. Calhoun, Stephen A. Douglas, and Benton, of Missouri. It can not be laid at the door of the Republican party that they inaugurated or initiated the system of land grants to railroads. I say to the Senator to-day that acre for acre we may have granted more under our administration than they, but in value, in worth, the Democratic administrations prior to 1860 granted fourfold what has been granted since. The railroads across Iowa, across Minnesota, across Illinois from one end of the State to the other received grants of the most valuable land that the sun ever shone upon.

What was the land on the line of the Northern Pacific of which the Senator speaks? Forty-seven million acres, one-half of it absolutely worthless, one-half of it incapable of supporting people at all, all the mineral land excepted; and it has been asserted by those who well know that of the 20,000,000 acres which can be found in Montana not 2,000,000 acres are capable of cultivation.

The honorable Senator says that the line of grant does not run over mountains; it runs in valleys. If the honorable Senator has been across that country he knows that it does run in valleys, but narrow valleys; and out of even the narrow valleys must come the Indian reservations which it traverses, which are always included in this great estimate of 47,000,000 acres.

The Illinois Central grant, of which Stephen A. Douglas was the author, supporter, and initiator in this body, was worth when it was made four times as much as the grant made to the Northern Pacific road, and that company held the land until they sold it at enormous figures; and that they more than built the road out of the land has been frequently asserted.

The grants made to railroads, canals, and other works of internal improvement amounted to a little more than 48,800,000 acres previous to 1860. In addition to that Democratic Congresses voted 61,000,000 acres for military and naval land-warrants. These 61,000,000 acres were not voted to the soldiers, because the land did not in one case out of a hundred go to the soldier. It was a debt that the Government undertook to pay by the sale of its land. It issued a warrant which passed from hand to hand, and under that thousands and tens of thousands of acres of the rich, fertile soil of the Mississippi Valley were aggregated by capitalists. There was no limit to the use of the warrants; they became money in the hands of the holders.

Further than that, Congress voted 75,000,000 acres to the different States as swamp lands, without restriction as to how many acres might be held by the purchaser. In addition to that it was the policy of the Government previous to 1860 to offer for sale all of the public lands. All of the public land practically was put in the market and offered to any man who was willing to pay $1.25 an acre, and then when it had been offered for two weeks at the local land office the record was returned to the General Land Office, and it was open to any man who chose to pay $1.25 an acre. By that system millions and millions of acres of land were disposed of, and whole counties of land were sometimes aggregated in the hands of one or two men. In the State of Illinois, of that fertile soil 40,000 and 50,000 acres passed at a single transaction to one holder, and the lands were held for years by those holders, and some of them are holders to this day.

Of all the land that has been deeded by the Government to railroads and to individuals, under every act which has ever been passed, the Democratic party are responsible for nearly one-half in the three items of which I have spoken—grants to railroads before 1860; grants for military and naval land-warrants; and the swamp-land act of 1850, to say nothing of the millions of acres that were taken under the cash-entry system, a system which, I wish to repeat, was in full force everywhere in this country until it was abandoned by the Republican administration.

When an effort was made in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives to require that no more land should be sold at public sale or allowed at cash entry until it had been surveyed for a period of fourteen or fifteen years, the Democratic party as a party stood solidly against that and voted it down, as the records of the two Houses will show. In 1858 and 1859, when it was proposed to give to the homeless and the landless in this country land free upon which the settlers might make their homes and raise their families, the Democratic party in both branches of the Legislature, with two or three exceptions in the other House, were found antagonizing the bill, and when it did get through the Senate and House and went to the last Democratic President previous to Grover Cleveland he vetoed it, upon the ground that giving to the people free land would demoralize the public and destroy the settlers' morals. He put it upon two grounds, first a lack of constitutional power, and secondly that it would be a demoralizing agency, as I have heard it said by some that a grant for school purposes would also be a demoralizing agency.

So it will not do for the Senator from Mississippi to throw any clubs at this side of the Chamber and assert that we have not been as anxious to preserve the public land as the other side.

I suppose the honorable Senator from Mississippi has not forgotten that more than five hundred thousand families have made homes on the public land under the homestead law passed by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President, the first Republican Congress and the first Republican President that we had. That was done the first time we had control of both bodies and the Executive.

I hold in my hand a list of the railroad land grants made previous to 1860, and the grants also made to canals previous to 1860, commencing with 1827. Some grants were made before that time which are not included in this list. I will ask leave to put it in the RECORD without reading it, it having been read by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] in his speech, unless somebody desires that I should read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement will be published in the RECORD as requested.

Mr. TELLER. When I was mentioning the illustrious Democrats who had advocated this system of grants for railroads and canals I forgot to mention Mr. Cass, of Michigan, who was always, I believe, an exemplar in the Democratic party. I might mention very many others also who were friends of this same system, and who were not simply silent parties but advocates of the system of land grants.

The honorable Senator from Mississippi has alluded to a claim which is made, he says, by some that the acceptance of these roads after the time provided for their completion was of such a character as to bind the Government of the United States. I wish to say to the Senator for myself, having carefully examined the subject, that I do not claim that the acceptance of a road by the President has any bearing upon the question of the right of Congress to forfeit the grant. If the right existed after the condition performed, an acceptance by the President can not take away from the legislative department of the Government that right.

Mr. DOLPH. It was an evidence that the condition was performed to that extent.

Mr. TELLER. As is suggested, it may be used as evidence that the condition was performed, in part at least, so far as the construction of the road was concerned. I think that is all that can be claimed for it. I do not pretend myself that the issuing of a patent precludes the Government of the United States. If the Government has the right of entry, if it has the right now of forfeiture, the patent can not stand in the way of action properly taken by means of judicial inquiry. If Congress determines that the grant ought to be forfeited clear up to the point where the railroad company commenced building after the time expired, it can with equal propriety, and it ought to, forfeit all the other grants, whether patents have issued or not, because it can readily provide that the Attorney-General shall go into the courts and ask to have the patents set aside as improvidently issued.

So far as I am concerned, I do not contend that there is any restraint upon the Government, except that which is put upon it by the fact that the condition was allowed to be performed without a step having been taken to assert the forfeiture. We are exactly where we would have been in law, in my judgment, if the President had never accepted a mile of the road or if a patent had never been issued. Not that I contend that we can practically set aside a patent by such a bill as this, but we undoubtedly can provide for the annulling of a patent by a proceeding in court; and I have no doubt the Attorney-General could, if he saw fit, upon his own motion take steps to test the question by that method.

Previous to 1874 it was the practice of the Land Office when the time had expired to cease to certify lands to the railroad companies for any road that might have been built after that time. When the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman came out the other policy was adopted, and from that time, under the several Secretaries of the Interior, with the approval of the several Attorneys-General, it was held that that established the doctrine I have contended for to-day, that until Congress had taken steps to forfeit a grant it was the property of the company, and they having fulfilled their condition, except as to time, and it being a question optional with the Government whether there should be a forfeiture or not, they were entitled to the lands, and the patents have issued, or certificates, which in some instances amount to the same thing. On some of the roads the act required certificates and not patents; a certificate of course having the effect and validity of a patent.

Such has been the course of administration under that view of the law. Of course it does not bind anybody, as I say. But fifteen railroads that were built out of time have received patents for their lands. Some of them have received all of their patents; others have received the greater part of them, and are, under the construction of the law given to it by the Supreme Court, entitled to the remainder.

I wish to say one word further with reference to this identical piece of property. The acts granting this land to the Northern Pacific provided that the Government of the United States should proceed to survey the land within the lines of the grant. I find by a report I have here made in the House of Representatives that up to the present time Congress has provided for the survey of less than one-half of that grant. So when we complain that the railroad company have been derelict in building their line, we ought to take into account the fact that the Government of the United States has not complied with its portion of the statute, which required it to make the surveys as fast as they could be made. Everybody understands that the surveys might have been made but for the parsimony of Congress in refusing the Department the means wherewith to make them.

I wish to say again that I do not believe those who are in favor of maintaining the doctrine as laid down by the Supreme Court will be influenced by appeals to their prejudice or their passion. It is a simple, naked question of law. The condition has been performed, and that is the end of it both in equity and in law; and such has been the rule of the courts, as I said before, for more than two hundred years.

I should like to take this opportuuity to read from a report made at the last Congress by a majority of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. I do not know that I am entirely versed in the parliamentary law as to referring to what has occurred in the other body. I understand the rule to be that it is improper to refer in the Senate to what has occurred in the other House during the present session, but I do not understand that it is out of order for me to refer to what happened in a Congress which has already expired. I understand that to be the distinction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair quite agrees with the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Therefore I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a report made by the House Committee on the Judiciary at the last Congress. I shall not read the whole of it, because there are some things in it not pertinent to this discussion.

This is a question propounded by a resolution to the committee:

Whether if said grant was earned by construction after the breach of condition but before forfeiture or re-entry by the grantor, any legal right to forfeit remains to the grantor.

That question the committee answered by a vote of 13 to 2, and I desire to read their answer, because I do not believe that it can be put in better shape, and I know that nothing I say will be as conclusive upon this subject as the report of the committee.

To the interpretation of the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871, it is now necessary to proceed. It reads as follows:

"SEC. 22. That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect by the most eligible route to be selected by said company with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands, per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California, to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from the market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption, upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

The first question in regard to this section is, what does it convey?

Its language is clear—that "in aid of its construction * * * there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns," so much land.

The case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wallace, 44) is complete authority to the point, that these words import a grant in præsenti (see also Railroad Company vs. Baldwin, 103 United States Supreme Court, 426; Grinnell vs. Railroad Company, ibid., 742-3).

Nor can there be any doubt of the right of the grantee company to assign the land grant. The jus disponendi is incident to the title granted, even if the word "assigns" did not imply such right, as it clearly does (Lewis vs. Lewis, 9 Mees. & W., 664; Bailey vs. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B., 186; Watson vs. Donnelly, 28 Barbour, 658; Furney vs. Ford, 22 Wisc., 173; Ball vs. Chadwick, 46 Ill., 32).

Whether the grant was absolute, or was upon condition subsequent, or was coupled with a trust enforceable by the grantor, depends upon other words in the section.

It was clearly not an absolute and indefeasible title and free from trust or condition.

The last clause of the section is in these words:

"Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

These words are appropriate to the creation of a condition subsequent, on the non-fulfillment of which the estate granted would determine upon the re-entry of the grantor for its breach. And there is no doubt in this view, that as there was a breach of the condition by the grantee company, the right of the United States to enter is unquestionable.

Before proceeding to discuss the relative rights of the Government and of the assignee company, under this view, it is proper to consider the alternative views insisted on for the assignee.

And first, it is claimed for the assignee that the seventeenth section of the act of March 3, 1871, is to be read and construed as affecting and modifying the provisions of the twenty-second section of the act.

That section is as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company shall commence the construction of its road simultaneously at San Diego, in the State of California, and from a point at or near Marshall, Tex., as hereinbefore described, and so prosecute the same as to have at least 50 consecutive miles of railroad from each of said points complete and in running order within two years after the passage of this act; and to so continue to construct each year thereafter a sufficient number of miles to secure the completion of the whole line from the aforesaid point on the eastern boundary of the State of Texas to the bay of San Diego, in the State of California, as aforesaid, within ten years after the passage of this act; and upon failure to so complete it Congress may adopt such measures as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion."

This section applies expressly and only to the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company. That company was chartered by Congress. Whether it was a grant in præsenti, upon a condition-subsequent, to be void upon the non-completion of its road within ten years, or was a retention by Congress of a power to take such steps in the use of the lands granted "as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion," is a question which your committee do not think it necessary to decide. It is sufficient to say that there is nothing in the language of the twenty-second section which refers in any such manner to the seventeenth section as to demand its incorporation into the twenty-second section, and that the condition subsequent found at the close of the twenty-second section should be qualified by the words of the last clause of the seventeenth section.

The grant by the twenty-second section was to a corporation chartered by Louisiana; that by the seventeenth section, to one chartered by Congress. Congress had no power, or certainly claimed none, to build the road in Louisiana, provided for by that State's charter. This accounts for the diverse language used in the act at the close of the two sections. Congress could construct the Texas Pacific road, if its chartered company failed to do so. It could not construct the Backbone road if the Backbone Company failed. It could use its own lands to construct the former, it could not do so to construct the latter. Its remedy, in the contingency of the failure of the Texas Pacific Company, was to use the lands granted to do what that company failed to do. Its only remedy as to the Backbone Company was to enter for a breach of the condition and reinvest its title to the lands granted by the twenty-second section.

The only words in the twenty-second section which place the Backbone Company on the same basis as the Texas Pacific are contained in the clause which gives to the former the same quantity of land as is given to the latter in California, and the clause which provides for the withdrawal, selection, and issue of patents and opening for settlement and pre-emption "upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company within said State of California." These terms, manner, and time are provided for in sections 9, 12, and 18 of the act, and do not relate at all to the contingency of a failure to construct by either company, or to the right of the Government in case of such failure.

There does not seem to be any reason why, if Congress intended to modify the proviso of the twenty-second section by the last words of the seventeenth section, the act should not have so expressly declared, or inserted the terms of the seventeenth at the close of the proviso of the twenty-second section. Not having done so, it does not seem to the committee that any canon of interpretation of statutes either requires or justifies it.

But there is a clause in the twenty-second section which may modify the construction given to the proviso at its close. That clause is as follows:

"And in aid of its construction from New Orleans, &c., * * * there is hereby granted to said company," &c.

And then comes the proviso—

"That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

Construing these clauses together, the question may be raised, does this create a technical common-law condition, or does it create a trust coupled with the grant?

In former times this question would not have been permitted. But the disfavor to forfeitures upon breach of conditions subsequent, in modern times, has given rise to the construction that the grant is charged with a trust rather than affected by a condition.

In the case of Wright vs. Wilken, in the Queen's Bench, and affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber (110 E. C. L. R., 232, Cam. Scacc., 259), it was held that in a will the words "upon express condition" should be construed to import a trust, and not a condition, upon a view of the whole will, as to the real intention of the testator. And the language of Lord St. Leonards in his great work on powers (Sugden on Powers, 122) is cited as high authority for the decision. His lordship's words are these:

"And in regard to its being an estate upon condition, we may observe that what by the old law was deemed a devise upon condition would now perhaps in almost every case be construed a devise in fee upon trust, and by this construction, instead of the heir taking advantage of the condition broken, the cestui que trust can compel an observance of the trust by a suit in equity."

If this modification of the common-law doctrine is now sanctioned in cases of devise, in order to effectuate the intention of the devisor, it might well be contended that a like rule should be applied to grants by the Government for great public purposes, and they be held to be enforceable as trusts binding on the grantee and not as conditions upon breach of which forfeitures will result, without securing the public benefit contemplated in the grant.

But conceding that neither of the alternative interpretations suggested are tenable, they are not without their weight in deciding the questions submitted to the committee, if the proviso in the twenty-second section of the act is construed as a strict condition subsequent.

It is undeniable that the condition follows the estate into whatever hands it comes. The assignee takes it cum onere. He is bound by and may perform the condition, in like manner as his assignor.

Any one who is interested in a condition, or the estate to which it is attached, may perform it, and when it has once been performed it is thenceforth gone forever.

That is the language of the authority that I think I cited. The reference here is to 2 Washburn on Real Property, second edition, page 10. The same may be found in 2 Crabbe, Real Property, 815, and the same may be found in Cruise and other works of that character:

If the condition be performed in substance it is sufficient. So if it be performed as near the intent of the condition as can be. (Comyn's Dig., Condition, L. 1.)

And conditions are not favored, nor are forfeitures for their breach. (4 Kent's Comm., 128, 129.)

An entry after a breach of the condition avoids the original title conveyed, and revests the title in the grantor, avoiding all intermediate alienations, for the assignees of the original grantee take subject to the condition.

I believe that is the doctrine I heard the Senator from Mississippi allege the other day on this floor.

And it was a principle of the common law that no performance of the condition after the day fixed for it could save the forfeiture from the power of the grantor to re-enter. (2 Cruise Dig., title 13, chapter 2, section 10.)

That was the common law.

This rule was prevalent three centuries ago in respect to bonds in a penalty defeasible on condition subsequent whether to pay money or perform a collateral act, to mortgages, and to conditions for re-entry for non-payment of rent by lessees and the like. But that rule is now obsolete in a great degree, and the victims of its rigor are now happily unknown, owing to the beneficent intervention of courts of equity and the action of courts of law in accordance with the just rules of those tribunals.

As early as Langford vs. Barnard (Tothill, 134), decided in 37 Elizabeth, the equity of redemption was secured by the chancery court to the mortgageor, whose estate was forfeited at law for non-performance of the condition at the day.

In 1598, about two years after this decision convulsed the kingdom by the fierce conflict between the rude common law and the public conscience, a poet companion of Lord Bacon and the lawyers of that day gave to the world a picture of the controversy in the immortal drama of the Merchant of Venice. The hard, unrelenting, and cruel Shylock, the impersonation of the common law, demanded the pound of flesh as his right by forfeiture for the failure to fulfill the condition subsequent within the fixed period of performance. In vain his victim tendered performance. It was too late. The day of grace was ended. No after performance could save the forfeited life. Such was the law maintained by judgment of a common-law court.

Portia, the impersonation of the court of equity, which had just asserted redemption as the right of the victim of forfeiture, put in the plea of mercy to temper the rigorous justice of the law. And ever since that day our jurisprudence has, with the poetic justice so wonderfully dramatized by the great master of the human heart, fixed it as a canon of right, that no forfeiture shall be enforced where the performance of the duty secured by a penalty is tendered in full by the victim of the rigid construction of his contract under the rules of the common law.

The principle has been extended to cases of penalties and conditions to do some collateral act other than payment of money; and where such can be compensated in money, when not specifically performed, forfeitures have been relieved against. (See Peachy vs. Somerset, 1 Strange, 477; Sloman vs. Walter, 1 Bro. C. C., 413; the leading cases commented on in 3 Wh. and T. L. C. Eq., 862, 895.)

Nor are these mere creatures of equity; for so far has the equity of redemption been upheld that it is now regarded as an estate in land subject to descent, devise, entail, custody, &c. (Casborne vs. Scarpe, 1 Atk., 603.)

But this is not all. Courts of law, taking the lesson which equity and poetry in the Elizabethan period taught it, administer the same relief from penalties and forfeitures for condition broken in many cases as courts of chancery do.

They do that to-day in nearly every State in the Union.

As early as eighth William III, without statutory aid, the law court, in Downes vs. Turner, cited in Gregg's case (2 Salheld, 597), staid proceedings in ejectment by a lessor, who entered for breach of condition to pay rent, upon payment into court of what was due by the lessee, thus relieving at law from a forfeiture arising from failure to perform the condition at the day. (See also Doe vs. Roe, 4 Taunt., 883.)

Mr. Justice Wilde, in speaking for the court in the cases of Atkins vs. Chilsm (11 Metcalf, 112) and Sanborn vs. Woodman (5 Cush., 36), reviews the English cases on this point, and confirms the doctrine that a court of law will stay the hand of the grantor who seeks to enforce a forfeiture upon one who tenders in court the performance of an already broken condition.

The legal right, therefore, of one who has incurred a forfeiture by breach of condition-subsequent to relief against an unwilling adversary, upon a substantial performance after the day, at law and in equity, and undoubtedly in the latter forum, can not be denied.

But one other point remains to be considered. After breach of the condition-subsequent, the estate does not determine ipso facto, but only at the election of the grantor by re-entry. And, therefore, if the grantor after such breach accepts performance of the condition tendered by the grantee, he waives the forfeiture, the condition is gone forever, and the estate becomes absolute.

In Dumpor's case (2 Coke, 119; 1 Smith L. C., 15) we find the basis of this principle. In Goodright vs. Davies (Cowper, 803) Lord Mansfield says: "Cases of forfeiture were not favored at law; and where the forfeiture was once waived, the court would not assist it." (See also Ward vs. Day, 116 E. C. & R., 337; Doe vs. Birch, 1 M. & W., 402; Croft vs. Lumley, 85 E. C. & R., 648; S. C. Cam. Scac., ibid., 682; Jackson vs. Barman, 7 Johnson, 227, and other cases cited in note by American editor.)

Ludlow vs. R. R. Co. (12 Barbour, 440) is a case where a railroad company failed to construct road within time prescribed by the plaintiff in a grant of land to it. It proceeded to do so afterward, under the eye and without dissent by grantor. It was held to be a waiver of the forfeiture.

The facts already set forth with sufficient fullness satisfy your committee that the substantial fulfillment of the condition has been met by the assignee company; that it was done under the eye of, and was accepted by the Executive Department under the provisions of the law of Congress; that all which Congress contemplated in making the grant has been realized, and that it was done by the company on the belief of having secured the grant, a belief based upon the assurance of the Department of the Interior, and upon the official action of the President of the United States in the examination of the work as it progressed, in his sanction of its sufficiency under the law, and in his order for the issue of patents for the land.

After all this the question is, can—and if it can, ought—Congress to forfeit the land grant to this assignee company? Your committee think both branches of the question must be answered in the negative.

I omit what does not affect the question we desire to discuss. That, I say, is in accordance with the rulings of the courts of this country everywhere. I shall be astonished if anybody can produce an authority when the condition has been performed that the grantor can intervene and re-enter, whether it be the great nation the United States or whether it be an humble individual. The Government of the United States has no greater right, when it comes to a question of law, than the humblest citizen of this great Republic. What I can not do as a man the Government of the United States can not do when it deals with a contract. The Government of the United States is bound, both in law and in equity, by its contracts duly made as I am bound by mine; and while it may have the power to pass an act, it will find that an independent and impartial judiciary will see to it that, whether it be a railroad company that is affected or whether it be an individual, the law shall be administered faithfully and justly and righteously, whether the Government be the plaintiff or whether the plaintiff be an individual.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I listened to the greater part of the argument of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I admit very freely that the railroad company have forfeited the right to their lands so far as they have not built the road.

I would not myself in any case vote to forfeit the grant where the road has been built, even when built after the time fixed for the completion of the road. Such a proposition would be so grossly inequitable that I think every Senator must upon reflection see that it would be unjust, for the rights of third parties have intervened after the completion of the road.

The Government might at any time after July 1, 1879, have forfeited the land granted to the Northern Pacific road. If I had been a member of Congress at that time I undoubtedly would have voted for that forfeiture, as I did before the extension of time in 1868. But Congress did not do it. At that time the Senate was Democratic and the House was Republican, and both Houses allowed the railroad to go on with their work and to complete the road after the time fixed for its completion, with the full knowledge that such continuance of building the road gave the company the right to the land granted so far as the road was built.

No one questioned that perhaps the technical right of the Government might exist to refuse to issue patents after the time had elapsed. Congress never asserted that power in behalf of the people of the United States, but on the other hand allowed the railroad company to go on and build their road, and not only allowed them to build the road but the executive authorities examined it with a view to fix the amount and limit of the land grant, and at the completion of every 10, 20, or 30 miles inspectors approved the road built, and thus the land grant to that extent became absolute and complete. It became subject to liens and mortgages to the people who furnished the money for bonds issued, which was used in the completion of the road. Their rights were perfected and completed and acknowledged by Congress and by the executive branch of the Government. It would be an absolute wrong to forfeit that land which has been earned according to the terms of the grant itself after the termination of the grant.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the Senator to say that after the 4th of July, 1879, Congress might have come in and declared the forfeiture of those lands for condition broken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt of it at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Now, I wish the Senator to answer this question: If the forfeiture had occurred and might have been declared at that time, has anything subsequently taken place by which the forfeiture which then occurred and which might have taken place, has been cured? I am not speaking of the question of equity, but I am speaking of the matter of law. If the condition was then broken has anything set it up; and does not the same right exist to-day in Congress, if it sees proper to exercise it, to declare the forfeiture that existed on the 4th of July, 1879?

Mr. SHERMAN. No principle of law is clearer than that a forfeiture is not favored in law, and if the party entitled to the forfeiture, whether he be a creditor, or a State, or the Government, fails to take the benefit of the forfeiture at the time it can be asserted, it can not be done afterward to the injury of other parties whose money has been expended upon the faith of the grant.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may be a very fine argument addressed to the equitable consideration of this case, but it is the legal proposition to which I was directing the attention of the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the legal proposition, and I know that no court in Christendom would hold otherwise.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That implies, then, that laches may be set up in defense against the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Government of the United States allowed private individuals to go on upon the hope or expectation of a grant that is lapsed, if you please, and to expend their money in pursuance of the law, and the executive officers of the Government recognize that fact and issue patents, and private people buy land thus acquired by a railroad company, and patents are issued by the Government and Congress with full knowledge of the fact allow this condition to go on, no people in the world would set up any mere technical forfeiture, even if the Senator is right; but I dispute his law. No court of equity, no court in the world, would allow a government or an individual to set up that forfeiture to defeat vested rights acquired after the time when the forfeiture should have been declared. But it is not upon that point I rose to address the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says it is an equitable estoppel. I have no doubt it is an estoppel in law as well as in equity.

Mr. VAN WYCK. One moment. I would like the Senator to explain how it can be considered as an estoppel against the Government when in 1876 this very railroad company came here and asked an extension of eight years to finish their road and Congress did not grant it. In 1878 the company came again to Congress and asked them to extend it eight or ten years and Congress refused to grant it, and from that time on Congress has refused to grant it and the matter has been in controversy in Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate, if I remember aright, shortly before I left the body as a member, passed a bill extending the time for completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, but it did not receive the sanction of the other House; it failed to become a law. That was before the term expired. So Congress refused to assert its right. The mere failure to pass a law after the grant was forfeited has nothing to do with it. It is sufficient to say that Congress having the right to forfeit this land grant after the 4th of July, 1879, not only neglected to do it but allowed these people to go on borrowing money from private citizens for which bonds were issued and the proceeds expended in the construction of the road, and it went on with the consent, the acquiescence of Congress and the executive department of the Government whose duty it was to execute the law. Thus was recognized this continued building of the road as a valid execution; the proper officers certified from time to time to the divisions of this road as completed, and lands were patented and lands were sold.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. On the 23d of April, 1878, the Senate passed a bill extending the right for ten years.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It did not pass Congress. Therefore Congress did not adopt it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that was not the point on which I rose to address the Senate. I had made up my mind to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], because I believe that where the railroad company have not earned their land grant it is entirely within the discretion of Congress to forfeit it.

But now another consideration comes in, and I beg Senators on the other side to look at it. This company has gone on and completed the Cascade branch, all but 75 miles, and the uncompleted portion is through the Cascade range of mountains, which is almost an impassable barrier. The company completed the road from the east end to Ellensburg and from the west end to the Cascade range. Within the present season the present executive government has recognized that as a valid completion and has issued the ordinary certificate of completion up to Ellensburg. A committee has examined the road, passed upon it, a certificate issued, and patents no doubt have been issued or are in the process of being issued now up to Ellensburg. That is within 75 miles of the point of the road on the other side of the mountain. So that there are but 75 miles to be built, and that in the very worst part of the road.

I have no doubt of our power, and I had made up my mind to vote for the forfeiture of that land grant in the mountains; but the land grant there is worth nothing, and the only effect of our action in including this branch in the bill is to justify or give an excuse to this railroad company for not making the connection there so as to connect Tacoma, Seattle, and all the important towns in Western Washington with the eastern branch; in other words, they will avail themselves of your very act to refuse to complete that portion which is a part of their contract and which they otherwise would be bound to complete.

I submit to Senators whether on the whole it is wise to include the Cascade branch in this forfeiture. I appeal to the Senator from Nebraska. I believe that his amendment will have a different effect from what he intends, that it will relieve this company from a burden they would be glad to have an excuse to be relieved from. Although I admit entirely the right of Congress and the equitable duty of Congress, if this grant was at all valuable to the company, to repeal it and to throw that part of it back into the public domain, yet it seems to me it is bad policy, and it would be better simply to take advantage of the forfeiture of the grant which runs parallel to the Oregon Transportation Company line and leave this Cascade branch to be completed under the provisions of the present law. If that be so, I think it would be better and wiser to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, although as a matter of law I can not deny the equity of it.

As to many other remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] I can see the force of them, but I can see also that as he is not very familiar with the operations of this corporation, he has made some grave mistakes.

The charter limit of the capital stock fixed for the original Northern Pacific Railroad I believe was $100,000,000. That is the amount they had a right to issue. If they could build the road without selling that stock, so much the better for them. If they could not, they could sell the stock or apportion it among the owners and borrow money on it. It belonged to the railroad company. They never have gone beyond $100,000,000, nor have they the power to go beyond that sum. In the progress of the road they undertook to build it under the plan of Mr. Jay Cooke and they broke down. Thirty million dollars of bonds were subscribed for by people in the United States and paid over for the construction of the road. Every dollar of that was supposed at one time to be lost by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co., in September, 1873, and those bonds got to be almost worthless. I remember that at that time they ran down in the market to 15 or 16 cents on the dollar, or perhaps less. It was supposed to be a failed corporation.

At that time General George W. Cass and some others of the most eminent railroad men who had been concerned in the matter, in order to save themselves from the general wreck, reorganized the company, as they had a perfect right to do; that is, the bondholders reorganized it, and they thereupon sold $51,000,000 preferred stock, part of the $100,000,000 of the capital stock, a controlling interest in it, partly to the persons who held the bonds and in payment of them, and this preferred stock to-day is not worth in the market the $30,000,000 actually paid in cash to the company and expended on the road.

The story of immense fortunes and great sums of money being made is simply fictitious. There were $30,000,000 of the people's money put into the Northern Pacific Railroad before the failure of Jay Cooke, and all the people who paid that money now hold as the representatives of their money is a part of the $51,000,000 of preferred stock outstanding which has borne no interest since that time and which to-day in the markets of the world is worth about 60 cents on the dollar. So that to-day the preferred stock is not worth as much money as had been put into the road prior to July, 1873.

Therefore this idea that these investors made money out of it is absurd. They have not made money, and the common stock, as it is called, which amounts to $49,000,000, has at one time been sold at a dollar and a half a share, and is worth now I think twenty-four or twenty-five. That is all it is worth, and that is based merely on the hope and expectation that in some dim time in the future it may be so advanced as to become a valuable property. It has never paid one single dollar of interest or of profit to the owners of it. All the balance of that road is represented by bonds sold at par, and most of the money invested in the building of the road has been put in since the time fixed in the charter for the completion of the road expired, and the $30,000,000 money put into the road before the failure of Jay Cooke is represented by the preferred stock.

Thus it is clear that to-day the Northern Pacific Railroad, with all its magnificent grant, as a commercial speculation has been a very bad one, a losing one to every man who has invested his money in it. All the statements of the Senator that great sums of money have been made out of it is a great delusion. But that is neither here nor there. It is sufficient to say that this land grant at its beginning was an improvident one. I voted against it and resisted it. But it was granted because there was an earnest desire by the people of that region of country and by the whole country that there should be a rival line built up on our northern boundary line to check and be a rival to some extent to the Union Pacific road then just about being completed.

That great region was then unpopulated and devastated for more than a thousand miles by the Sioux tribe of Indians and by the other tribes on the northern plains. At the time this grant was made and at the time this money was spent by Jay Cooke up to 1873, that whole region of country was in the possession of and infested by wild, savage tribes of Indians; and sagacious men would not go into the enterprise because they were afraid of loss. But there were people who subscribed and paid over $30,000,000 in money and paid it in. It was expended and they lost, and to-day their investment is not worth what it cost the bondholders. Those who have purchased bonds since the reorganization by General Cass and others under the authority of the United States courts have paid dollar for dollar for those bonds, and the bonds in the market to-day are not worth any more than they paid for them, while the stockholders who own the $49,000,000 own simply a hope, an expectation, with their stock quoted sometimes at a dollar and a half and sometimes at $25 a share. That is the condition of affairs.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the men who have built these great continental lines of railroad, with the exception of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, have lost money instead of having made money, and this land grant to them has been magnificent on paper but barren in results. It has been different, however, with the Union and Central Pacific Companies where large sums of money were made in the construction of the road. This was because of the direct subsidy of the bonds of the United States which rose rapidly in value and paid for these roads. The earnings without competition were very large, out of all proportion to the risk run and the investments made. No doubt large fortunes have been thus made, but that has not happened in all the cases, and this exceptional case is always pointed out as an evidence of enormous benefits conferred upon corporations.

As I said, the Northern Pacific Railroad with all this magnificent land grant to-day would not sell in the market for as many solid dollars as have gone into its construction, and the market price to-day, if you look at it, will show that the securities which represent the money that has gone into the Northern Pacific could be bought for less than the amount of money actually invested in the road.

Now, sir, if you forfeit the lands on the Cascade branch so far as it has already been constructed you violate the plainest principles of law and equity. The distance built is about 200 miles—do Senators here remember it?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The whole Cascade branch is near 300 miles in length.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator tells me that the Cascade branch is nearly 300 miles. All of that has been completed by money invested on bonds, except——

Mr. COCKRELL. Seventy-five miles are not yet completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say all has been completed except the 75 miles on which we have been commenting. Now, if we forfeit the land grant for those 75 miles through the Cascade Mountains, we reclaim land which is not worth 1 cent an acre instead of $4 an acre, which my friend from Mississippi figured up in his estimate of the magnificent grant; it is not worth a cent an acre in a wild, mountain region almost inaccessible. To earn this grant the railroad company will be compelled to make a tunnel I do not know how many miles long, one of the longest yet proposed, one of the greatest tunnels in the world, to get through the Cascade range. The effect of this amendment is to forfeit to the United States that which is worth nothing, and give to this company relief from executing the hardest and the heaviest task they have to perform.

I could not help smiling when the Senator from Mississippi was building up his magnificent fabric. I thought there was more water in it than in any stock-jobbing operation I ever heard of. He spoke about land out in the Rocky Mountains being worth $4 an acre. Mr. President, I rode over the Northern Pacific Railroad through about 500 miles, a region of country where there were high mountains on the one side, and the other part of the way winding around in the valley of the Snake River, up, up, up, higher and higher to the crest of the mountains. The land is not worth a cent an acre to anybody and never will be. In the valleys, in certain places, where a farm can be made, no doubt the company can sell a portion of the land grant; but the great body of it is a vast desert waste, which must always continue to be so as long as the Rocky Mountains stand and the Cascade range looms up with its snow-capped peaks looking out upon the broad Pacific. That land is not worth anything, and this movement, well intended, just and proper in itself, to forfeit this land grant is simply to forfeit that which is worth nothing and to relieve this corporation from an obligation that is very arduous, very costly, very heavy, one which will strain the last energies of this great corporation.

Under these circumstances, while I am inclined to vote with the Senator from Nebraska for the repeal of all unearned land-grants, I hesitate to do it when it will release this corporation from completing the only part uncompleted, only 75 miles long——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator will allow me. The exact statement in regard to that is this: the completed road of the Cascade branch is 187½ miles, and the uncompleted 75 miles.

Mr. SHERMAN. This company will under this amendment get the land grant for the 187 miles and be deprived of the land grant for 75 miles where it is worth nothing. Is that wise and sagacious in any view of the subject? It seems to me it is not, and therefore it will be better to take this bill as it came from the Committee on Public Lands; forfeit, if you please, all that is worth anything; but I would not give to this corporation if this bill passes, as I hope it will, an excuse to avoid completing the Cascade branch. I now record it as a prophecy to be quoted hereafter perhaps, that you relieve this Northern Pacific Railroad from the expenditure of four or five or six million dollars and you get back land that is not worth $10,000 all told in the market. They would be unlike other corporations if they would not take advantage of your mistake to relieve themselves from the great burden, and thus deprive the people of the Pacific coast and all the flourishing towns and cities of what they so earnestly demand, a connection across the Cascade range with that magnificent body of water, the like of which there is not in the wide world, the Straits of Fuca.

If the Northern Pacific on the other hand can be allowed to go on, if they can be encouraged to go on and pierce the Cascade range and take the iron horse to Seattle and to Tacoma and all that vast and magnificent harbor which some day in the next generation at least is to become the entrepôt of a commerce greater than that even of San Francisco, the result will be of surpassing benefit. Here is a more magnificent body of water than I have ever seen anywhere in the world, the like of which is not known anywhere except on the Northern Pacific coast. There the soundings are 500 feet deep over vast regions of country protected from the ocean's waves by the Island of Vancouver and a series of islands that stretch all the way up to Alaska.

It seems to me, therefore, that it is not wise in the Senate to carry this confiscation or this forfeiture further than can be justified by the interests of the people of the United States, and that when we undertake to go further than that and relieve this railroad company from completing the Cascade branch we make a grave mistake.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MILLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust I shall have unanimous consent to make a single observation about that. I should like to adjourn over to-morrow, but the Senate has been informed that at half past 4 o'clock there will be an announcement that will compel an adjournment, and I hope that for the benefit of other business on the Calendar and of this bill the Senate will come here long enough to vote on this bill to-morrow in case it is not completed to-day. If a vote can be taken on this bill before the time fixed, then I think it would be well enough to adjourn over, but if not I hope the Senate will meet here to-morrow in order to take a vote on the final passage of this bill, which stands in the way of other important legislation in which we are all interested.

Mr. HOAR. If we lose to-morrow we have to add a day in the middle of July.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I have given notice that I would at the proper time propose an amendment to this bill; and as it has been discussed I intend at this time, in advance of submitting it to the vote of the Senate, to make a few remarks in its support.

The amendment which I propose to offer is to the effect to declare forfeited all lands which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company claim to have earned since the 4th of July, 1879, which is the time limited by law during which Congress required that this road should be completed.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands have reported what they call a bill forfeiting the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and we are expected on this side or those Senators who agree with me not only to remain content, but to exult in this legislative triumph of the Senate of the United States for almost the first time forfeiting a land grant.

Now, Mr. President, I do not consider that in any sense a forfeiture of a land grant. I do not say that it is a fictitious forfeiture, for I have too much respect for the members of that committee who reported the bill; but I do say that it is a nominal forfeiture and not a substantial forfeiture of any land whatsoever of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. We might as well declare that the Treasury building belongs to the people of the United States, and expect them to be satisfied with that declaration, as to be content with this bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands which purports to forfeit lands to which that railroad company lays no possible claim, sets up no possible title, and does not pretend for a moment that that estate has ever passed from the Government of the United States to the railroad corporation.

That bill vindicates no right of the Government; that bill asserts no principle of action by the Senate of the United States; that bill declares no policy with reference to this great question and this great interest. That bill does not even assert the power of the Government to deal with those lands which are now claimed by the railroad companies; and as a counter proposition to that nominal forfeiture I have presented an amendment which proposes to forfeit 26,000,000 acres which the railroad company does claim, which the supporters of the bill of the committee assert we have no right to forfeit; and that is the question which is presented for the decision of the Senate.

In addition to that the amendment which I have proposed confirms all sales which have been made of these lands to any honest settler or any bona fide purchaser; and in addition to that throws open, subject to the laws of the United States, this vast public domain so as to allow the people of the United States to enjoy what we believe it is their right to enjoy, and to decide that this estate, this domain does not belong to this corporation but does belong to the people of the United States.

I was surprised to hear the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] take the position that because there had been inaction by the Congress of the United States from the 4th of July, 1879, to the present time, and because Congress by its silence had permitted this corporation to go on and build this road, therefore—he did not say whether in law or in equity—that conferred a title to this public domain upon this railroad corporation; and because the executive officers of this Government had countenanced and encouraged this corporation to go on and construct the road, and had accepted portions of the road as they were built, that that was also an argument going to show that this corporation had acquired these lands to the exclusion of any claim on the part of the Government of the United States.

Why, Mr. President, it is not for me to speak of the influence of these rich railroad corporations. I know their success in the past in repressing and preventing legislation. I will read an extract from a speech made in this body by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which depicts in vigorous and eloquent language the power and the influence of these rich railroad corporations, not only to obtain these favors from Congress, but to preserve them against any assault by Congress. He said, among other things:

> When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud.

I remember that in the celebrated contest in 1878, in that first and greatest and stormiest struggle on the part of some of the ablest and most distinguished statesmen in this country in this body to assert the rights of the Government of the United States as against the exorbitant pretensions of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] not once but repeatedly in his speeches denounced in very plain and vigorous terms the influence of the lobby operating upon this body to defeat that wise, just, and salutary legislation.

I remember that he, uniting his great talents and his great zeal with Judge Thurman, representing the interests of the people and of the Government, displaying equal devotion and equal earnestness, after many a discomfiture and many a defeat united in a common rejoicing because they had succeeded in passing a law in this body requiring that that railroad corporation should be held to a strict accountability in its financial relations to the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I deny as a legal proposition or a proposition of equity that any such plea as I have heard from the Senator from Ohio can be invoked in order to strengthen or validate a title in this railroad corporation. He concedes, in answer to a pertinent question put to him by the Senator from Delaware, that on the 5th of July, 1879, Congress had the power to forfeit this land grant. If that power did exist at that date, and that is conceded, I ask how can that power be destroyed or taken away from Congress except by an express declaration of its legislative will?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I tell the Senator how?

Mr. EUSTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the statement of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Van Wyck vs. Knevels, in 16 Otto, page 365.

Mr. EUSTIS. I can tell the Senator there is no use referring me to any decision. I have read all the decisions of the Supreme Court on this subject.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then we are to understand that the Senator is not bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. EUSTIS. If the Senator proposes to refer me to that decision, I save him that trouble by answering that I have read them all. Of course if I do not understand them that is my misfortune.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand the Supreme Court of the United States to lay down a doctrine adverse to that suggested by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to his opinion; but I notice one thing in this contest, which the supporters of this committee bill have unconsciously and unintentionally afforded us the opportunity of engaging in, and that is of presenting to the Senate a serious and a substantial bill of forfeiture, that we are constantly met with the statement and the assertion that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided so and so.

Now, Mr. President, I have read all those decisions, and I assume the responsibility of stating to the Senate as a lawyer that there is not a solitary decision that has ever been rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States which militates against or conflicts with the provisions of the amendment which I have had the honor of submitting. On the contrary, in the celebrated case of Schulenberg, which has been referred to, the Supreme Court of the United States expressly recognized the right of Congress to declare the forfeiture. They merely say that while there may be conditions subsequent the estate has passed, has vested subject to the forfeiture by Congress. If the condition be a condition—and it certainly was inserted in the law—you have no right to declare or to assume that that condition was not based upon some grave consideration of public utility and public policy. This property was subject to disposition by Congress; Congress chose to interpose and to insert that condition, and that condition can only be effaced either by its fulfillment on the part of the grantee, and then it ceases to operate, or by an express waiver on the part of Congress, and not on the part of any executive department of this Government.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. EUSTIS. I would prefer not to be interrupted, but I will listen to a mere suggestion to elucidate anything that I am stating.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am very anxious to get the precise view of the Senator on this question. I should like to ask him, suppose that in this particular case the road should be wholly completed, that is to say, it is wholly completed now, but it was not completed within the time specified in the act, and suppose patents had been issued for all the lands included in the grants all along that portion of the road not completed within the time as well as that portion completed within the time, and those lands had passed into the hands of third persons, would the Senator hold that then the Congress of the United States would have the power as a naked question of law to declare a forfeiture as now proposed by the Senator's amendment?

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator from Oregon should ask me such a question as that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to have an answer.

Mr. EUSTIS. I will tell you the reason why I am surprised. If, as I say, this be a condition, that condition attaches to all the transactions and all the proceedings which that corporation may have, and it enters into every contract that it may make, and the best evidence of that, although I was not speaking on that subject——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I take it the answer of the Senator is that the power exists then just as it does now. That is the logic of the Senator's argument.

Mr. EUSTIS. Of course where an estate is to be acquired by the fulfillment of a condition there can be no such thing as the fulfillment of that condition by implication; it must be a strict, full, and complete compliance with that condition, and if that does not occur there is no legal estate that passes from the grantor to the grantee. For instance——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does not the estate pass when the act is passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. EUSTIS. I will answer the Senator's question if he will allow me to do it. I do not know whether the Senator wants to hear my answer.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I had not finished the answer when interrupted. For instance, you would suppose that when the Government of the United States gives to this or any other railroad corporation similarly situated the power to mortgage the granted lands, that would be a waiver of the condition and would create an absolute estate because the power of mortgaging is one of the highest powers of ownership, it is one of the elements of the jus disponendi; and yet the law on this question, which I have endeavored to state and which I hope my friend from Oregon will understand before I finish, is so clear that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that there was no implication to be raised in favor of the grantee by reason of conferring that power by Congress, that even that did not pass the legal estate, and that any mortgage which was made under the authority of the act of Congress was made subject to the condition imposed in the grant and subject to the forfeiture by Congress, no matter whose interests were to be affected.

Mr. President, the position I take upon these questions is this: I am not indifferent to the motives and dispositions of those who voted for these grants, whether they were Republicans or whether they were Democrats. I can understand that it was a great object to be attained for the welfare of this whole country that the Government of the United States should lend its aid for the construction of these great railroads that were to bring in closer communication remote sections of our common country. I can understand that they looked forward to that great future development, that increase of wealth, that expansion of prosperity, and all those great and vast results which are visible to-day, and of which we ought all justly to be proud. I can understand that at the time these grants were made it was perhaps difficult as a matter of calculation to ascertain what these great railroads would cost.

But the reason I am in favor of asserting the power of the Government and of attempting to vindicate the rights of the people is this: These rich railroad corporations, after having received these great bounties from the Government and from the people of the United States by which millionaires were made as mushrooms grow in a night in this country, by which a syndicate of individuals could establish this as a system by which they would enrich themselves at the expense of the people of the United States—I say these corporations have not acted honestly and in good faith toward the Government and the people, but have chosen to stand upon their legal rights and to assert them and to defy the authority and power of Congress to deal with them. They having occupied that attitude, it is time for us to inquire how and when they have acquired these rights.

If a corporation having received a grant were to come before the Congress of the United States and declare that they have not been able to fulfill the conditions, "and we ask you to continue your indulgence, your favor to us; we are prosecuting this great work and endeavoring to accomplish it; but for causes over which we have no control we are unable to comply with the conditions which have been imposed on us by the legislation of Congress," I am not one of those Senators, if there be any in this Chamber, who would deal harshly or unjustly or ungenerously with any such applicant for legislative condonation and forgiveness.

It is by reason of their attitude of defiance to the Government, it is by reason of the fact that they challenge the power of the Government and defy the jurisdiction of Congress, that they have brought about this struggle in which we are engaged to-day and which will certainly attract the attention of the American people; and that is, whether the Government is superior to these railroad corporations or whether these railroad corporations are superior to the Government. After we have asserted and vindicated the power and the authority of the Government it will be time enough for us to adjudge any equitable matters that may be presented and to protect the rights of innocent parties.

But I say again, Mr. President, that the conduct of these coporations has been such as to have no parallel in the history of civilized governments that ever existed on the face of this earth—in the first place proceeding as though there were no conditions in the acts conferring these grants, in the next place duplicating and triplicating their capital, distributing this wealth among certain individuals, creating a fictitious capital in order to charge, not freight, for I do not call it freight—I call it an exaction, a tribute, a tax, an extortion from the producers of this country; and I say that it is a shameless and an unpardonable effrontery on the part of these corporations who have made such an exhibit of their exactions and extortions on the people to expect such persons as myself, however well they may be disposed, to treat them otherwise than I would treat adversaries who were litigants in a court of justice.

We have heard admonitions that we should heed from some of our greatest statesmen with reference to the condition of affairs touching the relations of the Government of the United States with these land-grant railroads. I listened the other day to an eloquent speech of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] wherein he read an extract from an address of Mr. James A. Garfield in which he stated that the condition of our society upon this question was analogous to the condition of society during mediæval times when the feudal lords and barons tyrannized and oppressed the people. Mr. President, if we have not heard louder protests on this question, if we have not been arrested by the thunder tones of popular murmuring and popular discontent, it is because we are a strong, a healthy, a young, and a vigorous nation, and that we are able as yet to stand such drafts upon our resources and to resist this blood-poisoning in our body-politic which under other conditions and at a later period would threaten the liberties of the people and give to the Republic's foundations a severe shock.

You may refer to the period of English history in the days of monopolies when a king would confer a patent upon the favorite of some prostitute and ennoble him, and when that alarming condition of affairs existed which Mr. Culpeper, in the house of commons, declared was so frightful because those leeches were sucking the substance of the people until the commonwealth had become hectical.

You may refer to that period of the history of France preceding the French revolution, when the peasantry were the abject slaves of the nobility that had been enriched by the favoritism of a profligate monarch; to that period of Roman history when the assemblies of the people were abolished and the Roman senate dispensed all the wealth and dignities of the empire so that the property of the country was owned by a few individuals and the mass of the people were paupers; I say that the history of no government shows such vast, sudden, and undeserved fortunes as have been accumulated in this country by individuals who have been the scheming beneficiaries of the legislation by Congress with reference to these land grants to railroad corporations.

If you estimate in money the value of these land grants Congress may be said to have donated to certain individuals a complete railroad; but in addition these gratuities have produced millions and millions of money which these same individuals have divided among themselves without expending, investing, or risking a solitary dollar of their own money. I say if we were not as young and strong a nation as fortunately we are, to read the history of these railroad corporations and their relations with the Congress of the United States would be like reading a page in the history of a degenerate and tottering government that was about to crumble to pieces and disappear from innate corruption.

It is because I do not believe that to-day I have a right to vote this land as a new grant and as a new beneficence to this corporation that I have proposed the amendment of which I have spoken. I consider it as a legal proposition, clear and incontrovertible—though I do not expect all others to agree with me—that the title of that property to-day is in the Government of the United States; that in order to complete the possession all that is necessary is an act of forfeiture by which the Government of the United States simply re-enters upon the estate and has the right of administering it and disposing of it, and it is as though it were an original proposition presented to me to-day, will I vote to confer upon this railroad corporation these lands which they have not earned since the 4th of July, 1879, and which in my judgment are to-day vested in the people of the United States as their property and their estate?

The Senator from Ohio who occupies the chair [Mr. SHERMAN] represented to us that these parties had been very particularly unfortunate. There is no doubt, however, that these figures are correct—I use them from the speech of the Senator from Mississippi—that on the 530 miles constructed they issued $30,000,000 of bonds secured on these lands from which they realized $30,000,000, and the highest estimate of the cost per mile of those 530 miles was $28,000, which amounted to $15,000,000, the actual cost of these 520 miles.

Let us suppose that this road instead of being 2,000 miles long had been 530 miles; according to the act of Congress these people then for absolutely nothing, never having paid a dollar, never having invested a dollar, never having risked a dollar, would receive this railroad as a mere gift from the Government of the United States, and in addition to that they would have to distribute among themselves, as an additional gratuity from the Government and from the people of the United States, $15,000,000. I believe that statement is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Entirely.

Mr. EUSTIS. Now, Mr. President, I ask in all seriousness, what sort of a transaction is this? The title of the act which conferred the grant is in aid of building a railroad. That presupposes an original contribution from somebody. That original grant was merely to aid these parties who were going to invest their money and build this railroad, and this land grant was something merely supplementary to that purpose.

Considering all these transactions and these proceedings, considering the fact that these people have enriched themselves when they are no more entitled to that wealth than any other persons in the United States, that they have chosen to stand upon their legal rights, and to deny that Congress has any power or any jurisdiction to hold them to any acountability whatsoever, I say that for these reasons I am in favor of forfeiting the land grant and restoring to the public domain and to the enjoyment and use of the American people every acre of that land which this railroad corporation has not earned according to the strict limitations and conditions imposed in the grant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, before this vote is taken, though I have spoken upon this subject already, I desire to submit a few additional remarks.

I regard this as the most important question that has or will come before the people of the United States. In my humble judgment it is of sufficient power to change the character of a government. The Senate of the United States, the Supreme Court of the United States can not resist the tide of public opinion which will continue to increase in force and volume until the clear and unquestionable right of the people shall be asserted in regard to the public domain.

The mere idea that there can be a question of law which limits the sovereign powers of the Republic to the detriment of the people on a question of public policy which concerns the people as a commonwealth alone is, in itself, a most extraordinary proposition; that when a law is made by the Government of the United States disposing of the public domain upon condition that the conditions attached by the sovereign legislative power are of no force and effect and are merely analogous to the stipulations in a contract or deed between private individuals, which may be avoided and annulled by the neglect or failure of public servants to execute and obey the law, has no warrant in reason, has no foundation in any authority or in the practice of any government or in the decisions of any courts that ever existed; and it would be in effect to say that the sovereign powers of legislation might be exercised by the default or negligence of the public servants or agents of the Government.

That the law may be rightfully set aside and made void and of no force or effect simply by disobeying it.

It was asserted by the Senator from Colorado that no lawyer of reputation had denied the proposition that an estate, a vested interest created subject to a condition, could not be revoked by the granting power, if it neglected or failed to revoke it, upon the failure of that condition; that the acquiescence or failure to act was a waiver of the condition created by the law. Why, sir, I very confidently state that the honorable Senator will not find a distinguished lawyer outside of those retained by railroad corporations that has ever asserted such an opinion.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] cited to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], while he was speaking a few minutes ago, the case of Van Wyck vs. Knevals, in 116 United States Reports. That case contains the express declaration:

> If the whole of the proposed road has not been completed, any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor, the United States, through judicial proceedings, or through the action of Congress.

This was a suit in which the court declared a patent void because it was not authorized by an act of Congress. In declaring a forfeiture because the road was not completed, the court could only so decide because the condition imposed by Congress had not been performed. It could not alter that condition or make a new condition and hold part of it good and part bad or of no force.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. CALL. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Did not the Supreme Court in that same case say this:

> So far as that portion of the road which was completed and accepted is concerned the contract of the company was executed, and as to the lands patented, the transaction on the part of the Government was closed and the title of the company perfected.

And did not the Supreme Court in the same case also make the statement:

> The right of the company to the remaining odd-numbered sections adjoining the road completed and accepted—not reserved—is equally clear.

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes; but it only evidences how weak is that character of reasoning which extracts from the decisions or the context a few words without reference to the character of the case, the facts of the case, and the general reasoning of the court. It followed these declarations by an assertion of the power and a reference to the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, and the forfeiture referred to was because of nonperformance of a condition which was an entirety, and not for non-performance of a part of a condition. The act contains no grant made on the performance of a part of a condition, but on a condition which is an entirety.

> If the whole of the proposed road has not been completed—

Following the words read by the Senator from Oregon—

> any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor * * * through judicial proceedings, or through the action of Congress.

Citing Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wall., 44):

> The doctrine of equitable estoppel or the abhorrence of forfeitures by the courts of equity has no place in enlarging the laws which confer privileges or rights in detriment or limitation of the rights or powers of the people; no place in restraining or changing the public policies declared and created by law. To give such a power is to vest in a grantee of a right or privilege the power to forfeit and destroy the public right and the public power by disobeying the law.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly, as to that portion of the road not completed. Unquestionably it could not refer to anything else from what precedes, it seems to me.

Mr. CALL. It refers to the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, and there is no difference in reasoning between that portion of the road uncompleted and the other which was not completed within the time required by the act. The condition is a whole one. The law is in every case and in every government that there is no laches; there is no waiver by the government; that time does not run against it. What does that mean? If the court be a body that reasons, if principles are determined which are to control its decisions and there can be no laches on the part of the Government in asserting its rights, if there can be no limitation of time, then those rights must remain unimpaired, and if unimpaired, then the law in every part is in force. But suppose regarding it as a question of policy you consider as asserted by the Supreme Court:

> All grants of this description are strictly construed against the grantees; nothing passes but what is conveyed in clear and explicit language; and as the rights here claimed are derived entirely from the act of Congress, the donation stands on the same footing of a grant by the public to a private company, the terms of which must be plainly expressed in the statute; and if not thus expressed, they can not be implied. (Charles River Bridge vs. Warren Bridge, 11 Peters, 420.)

Is there any grant here except on condition that the road shall be completed by 1879, and if this be true, and all the estate and interest created by the grant was instantly vested in the company would that change the interest vested into something not created by the grant, namely, into an unconditional grant as to time leaving all future time open for its performance? If not, when was the grant subject to forfeiture, and for what? If the time fixed in the act was not an essential condition, then it could never be forfeited whether any part of the road was built or not. That is the law everywhere. Grants in detriment of the public right must be construed strictly. They must be within the strict expression of the law, and there can be no implication from them. But, Mr. President, I undertake to say that neither by reason nor by precedent is there a single case in any high court or any body of law or any country—the cases have been examined by the committee of the House, who made a report at a former session, the whole ground has been examined by eminent lawyers, and there is not a single case, and no court could afford, and no legislative body can afford to deny the proposition that the public right can not be given away except in the clearest and most express terms.

It can not be given away by implication. Such a presumption can not arise from a negligence or a failure on the part of any legislative or executive body of the Government to assert the sovereign legislative rights created by the Constitution and vested in Congress for the protection of the people.

But, Mr. President, let us go a little further than that. Here is this grant of an empire of two States equal to Ohio and Indiana proposed now to be forfeited, and let it be either confirmed or forfeited. Let this question no longer remain open. Give to the railroad company all the land that it claims, if you wish to do so, but do not pretend to forfeit an insignificant portion of it, and make a pretense of satisfying the demand of the people. Settle the question and let it go before the people, for these devices of forfeiting small tracts of land are nothing but disguises to confirm the interests of the railroad corporation who are the grantees.

The question is now broad and distinct between the rights of the people and corporate power and corporate aggression; and it is not in the power of this Senate or of any court to destroy that issue except by maintaining the just rights of the people.

If the Senate believes the policy of vesting the title of an empire capable of sustaining as large a population as Ohio and Indiana in a few persons incorporated as a railroad company, with the power to demand of every American citizen who settles on the public land its own price for his land, and then to have the power to take from him any part of the products of his labor which it pleases in a tax on transportation, let the Senate so declare and submit their actions to the people, for this is what is meant by refusing to forfeit this grant.

I am not an enemy of corporate power. I am its friend, and always ready to do it justice. The enemy of corporations is he who will support their unjust claims and demands against the popular right. Their enemy is he who will confer upon these few individuals two States equal to Indiana and Ohio, capable of sustaining fifty millions of people with our modern improvements and with the processes of civilization and invention which are now coming into play. No surer method can be found to destroy them than to array against them the five millions of tenant farmers of this country who are to-day without homes for themselves or their wives and children.

The question is, shall we to the ruin of the people of the United States create and continue a monopoly of the land of the United States the like of which has never existed in the history of the world and vest in a few individuals by the direct action of Congress an accumulation of wealth in the shape of a perpetual right of taxation upon the settlers upon the public lands greater than was ever granted by any title of nobility or any proconsular power in the history of the world? That is the question now before the Senate and before the American people.

The consequences of such action by the Senate can not be estimated. In my judgment it will arouse an indignation among the people that can never be allayed. It will create the belief that this body is in the interest of corporate power and not of the people. It will be an actual denial of the policy of and repeal of the homestead laws, for with the confirmation of this and other railroad grants there will be but little more land for the people except at such prices and on such terms as the railroad grantees may choose to ask, and this the people will not submit to.

The idea that in a matter concerning the public policy, as was said by Mr. Garfield, the late President of the United States, in a matter concerning the transportation and the locomotion of the people, you can confer grants of great empires of public land far in excess of the cost of construction of those thoroughfares of modern improvement, and that you can limit the time when they are to be completed, and then that the Senate shall say that time is immaterial, that a century does not matter or ten years or twenty years, that the public policy which was founded on the idea of a highway within a short period of time to settle a great wilderness with laboring and industrious people is equally perfected by carrying it out when the country has become a settled and populous State, is of course a contradiction in terms as well as a denial of the truth.

Would any man now undertake to grant these great concessions to a railroad company to build a railroad in the State of Ohio with its millions of population? And that is what the argument of those who deny this forfeiture means. The country of that grant has now become largely settled; its lands have risen from being worthless to being worth from four to five dollars an acre, in many places $10 an acre; and will any man deny the statement that the conditions upon which the grant was made, the conditions of public policy for which it was made, are not the same now as they were when this country was a wilderness, namely, that the public policy to be served is not the construction of a road after the settlement of the country, after immigration has made the country populous and the land valuable, but that it was to be done before that time, and that for this reason the time for its performance was limited.

The argument in all such cases is that there are certain grounds and purposes of public policy to be attained, and when the country has attained them you can not say that the public policy which dictated the original act now justifies or requires it when there is a totally different condition of things, when the country has become settled, and settled at a period of time beyond that fixed for the completion of the road.

But, Mr. President, before this debate closes I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the relations which this grant of two States, of an empire, to a few individuals bears to the general condition of the people of the country and the condition of the landed interests of the United States, and the question of landlordism, which now excites so much interest throughout Europe and which is so closely connected with perhaps even the preservation of our institutions and the happiness of our people.

We have heard a great deal said about Ireland and the ownership of all the land there by a few persons, and the evils of that condition of land tenure, but we have a condition of land tenure in this report equal to that of Ireland. We have as many tenant farmers, persons not owning land, as Ireland has, and if it be a public evil there it is a public evil here, only diminished in degree by the fact that our population is not so dense, and the avenues of employment of our people with this broad continent before them are much greater; but we must not forget that Europe is pouring her discontented and suffering people into our country.

As to the policy of the homestead law, it does not matter whether the Democratic party or the Republican party originated it, or whether one or the other was more responsible for the alienation of large bodies of lands in the past. It is the question of to-day that we are called upon to settle; and to-day the non-ownership of land, the vesting of it in large capitalistic hands is as great in the United States as it is in Ireland—greater than it is in England—and we shall soon be, according to the census of the United States, a people with our lands vested in a few hands to a greater extent than any people of modern times—greater than France or any other civilized country. This is a startling fact, and we should consider it carefully before we give away to a railroad company States equal to Ohio and Indiana.

I find in a very admirable summary of this question in the North American Review the following very striking figures and statements derived to a great extent from our last census. The writer says:

> No one can study the American land question and fail to have his imagination struck by the unexpected analogies that will appear between the agrarian concerns of the American Republic and those of ancient Rome. The Romans, too, had their public domain, of which they were exceedingly proud, with a free farm thereon (in theory) for every citizen, and so serene did this make them feel that until the agitation of Licinius Stolo, year of the city 378, they could not be got to seriously understand that there was such theory as a Roman land question. Now, nothing can be more remarkable in the United States to-day—year of the Republic 109—than the Roman serenity of the people and Government on all affairs relating to the land. Why should we bother ourselves about the land? they say, with an imperial gesture (exactly like the Romans in talking of their ager publicus); why should we be so silly as to anticipate trouble about the land in a country with a public domain like ours?
> But Rome found the ager publicus all too helpless to stem the progress of agrarian disease once it had fairly set in. Let us be sure that America is not already in the first stages of the very disease that Rome died of. "Latifundia"—that is its name in economic pathology, land monopoly we may translate it—"latifundia," says Pliny, "killed Italy." Why should it not kill America, too, if the remedies be not applied in time?

Again:

> Probably the history of constitutional government does not furnish a more one-sided scheme of legislation than the landlord and tenant laws thus manufactured in the Western States. They are implements for extracting rent, as simple, terrible, and brutally candid in their design as a revolver in the hands of a peremptory road-agent. At any rate they have resulted in fixing on the free soil of the United States a land system that belongs to the ages of barbarism. Its nearest surviving relative in Europe is the métayage of France, but is more like the zemeendaree and ryotwar of Britishized India than any land system now in existence.
> At the census of 1880 there were found to be 1,024,601 farms rented by tenants in the United States. That figure alone entitles America to take rank as possessing the largest tenant-farming class now furnished by any nation—a strange singularity for a nation, one of whose proudest boasts is that the old feudal institution of landlordism has obtained no foothold on her free soil! But to bring it nearer to the actual truth, that figure must be made bigger still. In the five years since the census was taken, it is a modest and well-considered calculation that the number of tenant-holdings has increased 25 per cent.
> This would raise the number of tenant-holdings at present in the United States to a million and a quarter. In Great Britain and Ireland, the countries that have clung most tenaciously to the aristocratic system, the number of tenant-holdings, according to statistics obtained during the late Parliament, is as follows: In Ireland, 547,222; in England and Wales, 414,804; in Scotland, 80,101; total, 1,069,127. Thus the United States, at the present day, possesses a quarter of a million more tenant-farmers paying rent to landlords than the three kingdoms and the principality together. It contains more than three times as many as England and Wales, and more than twice as many as landlord-ridden Ireland.
> In the State of Illinois alone, which is neither an old Eastern nor a Southern State, there are, with a less population, nearly twenty thousand more tenant-farmers than there are in the ancient feudal kingdom of Scotland. By the next time the census is taken the probability is the number of tenant-farmers in the United States, increasing in pace with the population, will be up to a million and a half. And from that onward, for reasons which will appear, the ratio of increase in tenancies will be greater than ever.
> Going a little further into the figures of the census, we find that the total number of persons engaged in agriculture in the United States five years ago was 7,670,493; of this number 2,984,306 are registered as normal owners of their holdings, the remainder being tenants paying rent to landlords and agricultural laborers. Thus, at the first flush, the census shows the popular notion that the agricultural classes of the United States own the soil they till to be incorrect. In France, on the other hand, where the feudal system is not yet eradicated out of a population twelve millions less than that of the United States, there are in round numbers 5,000,000 rural proprietors, each holding less than 20 acres (from 1 to 6 hectares apiece), and cultivating the land with their own hands, while there are 2,000,000 of a class comprising owners of holdings larger than 2[illegible] acres, landlords, and owners of house property in towns.
> It is a suggestive fact—to go no deeper than the surface of these figures—that France, with her expensive and restricted soil, has been able to place more than five million thrifty agriculturists in absolute proprietorship of their small holdings, while America, on her boundless virgin area, unhampered by title-deeds or traditions of past proprietorial rights, with her ever-growing population hungry for land, has been unable to establish quite three millions of proprietors, both great and small. And it is to be noted that the ratio of working proprietors of land in France is steadily increasing, and that of the tenants and landlords is steadily diminishing, while the reverse is true of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Meanwhile—

Says the article—

the settlement of the country proceeds at its own bewildering pace. America is still presenting to the world the phenomenon of a population that doubles itself in periods of twenty-five years. Emigration is pouring in from all quarters of Europe, and from over the Canadian border, at a rate never before surpassed. It is certain that at the next census the population will be found to have increased more since 1880 than even during the preceding decade. From figures issued by the Census Bureau the other day it appears likely that some of the Western States and Territories will go near quadrupling their population. Dakota has grown almost twice as populous in the five years since 1880, and Nebraska has increased from 452,402 in 1880 to 740,000 in 1885.

If there were still untold millions of fertile acres of public domain to be given away, and if a stop were put to the gigantic frauds by which the domain is now being swallowed up, it would be a matter of grave moment to consider how this population is to be accommodated on the land, and how it should be protected in possession of the nation's gift.

But it is no longer a question of untold millions of acres of public domain. It is no longer a question for to-morrow, it is a question for to-day. The pressure has already come. For all practical purposes of bestowing free farms on its growing population, the public domain of the United States is now exhausted.

According to the reports of the Land Office, the diminution of the public domain, by all methods, fraudulent and lawful, under the homestead and pre-emption, the timber-culture, the desert, and other land acts, is taking place at the rate of 20,000,000 acres a year. And according to the same reports there are just 5,000,000 acres of the public domain still left of a character that makes them available for settlers without capital.

Said the Land Commission, report of 1880: "It was estimated, June 30, 1879, that (exclusive of certain lands in the Southern States) of lands over which the survey and disposition laws had been extended, lying in the West, the United States did not own, of arable agricultural public lands, which could be cultivated without irrigation or other artificial appliances, more than the area of the present State of Ohio, namely, 25,576,960 acres." Of this arable land about 7,000,000 acres were taken up in the year ending June, 1880.

Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds the Chair will present a bill from the House of Representatives for reference.

The bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, in South Carolina, by the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RANKIN.

Mr. SPOONER. In accordance with the notice I gave yesterday I ask if it be the pleasure of the Senate that the message of the House of Representatives acquainting the Senate with its action relative to the death of Hon. JOSEPH RANKIN be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions of the House of Representatives of March 25, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of this House be suspended that suitable honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. JOSEPH RANKIN, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. RANKIN the country has sustained the loss of a safe legislator, a patriotic citizen, and an able and faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to his memory the House, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I ask leave to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. JOSEPH RANKIN, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Wisconsin, and tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the assurance of its sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. RANKIN a copy of the foreing resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, in offering here a tribute to the memory of JOSEPH RANKIN, late a member of the House of Representatives from Wisconsin, I do not come to the mere perfunctory discharge of a customary duty. My acquaintance with Mr. RANKIN commenced fourteen years ago, when we were associated in the legislative service of our State. He was of one political faith, I of another, but our friendship commenced with our acquaintance and ended only when his life went out.

The formal story of his life is soon told. He was born at Passaic, N. J., September 25, 1833, and died in the city of Washington on the 24th of January, 1886. At an early age he removed with his parents to Connecticut, and soon thence to Homer, N. Y., where he lived until he was twenty-one, receiving a fair academic education. His boyhood and youth were in no wise peculiar, except in the originality and strength of purpose which afterward marked his manhood.

In 1854, just of age, he sought, alone, a home and fortune in Wisconsin, then still one of the frontier States of the far West, settling at Mishicot, in the county of Manitowoc, which county, with little interruption, thereafter remained his home. Upon his advent to Wisconsin he entered a mercantile career, in which he was quite successful.

Early he developed an interest in, and an aptitude for, public affairs, and in 1860 he was elected a member of the assembly, in which body he served with credit.

The silvery notes of the war bugle quickly won him from the paths of peace, and in October, 1862, he bade good-by to the loving woman who had been but a little time his wife, and enrolled himself in the Army of the Union as captain of Company D, Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers. He, with his regiment, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and in many skirmishes and battles. From the date of his muster-in to June 30, 1864, he was, save for a month or two, present and in service with his company. He served as an acting assistant inspector-general from February, 1865, to August, 1865, when, with the rank of major, he was mustered out with his regiment.

He was a brave and skillful officer and dearly loved by the men of his command.

From the close of the war he resided in Tennessee until 1868, when he returned to Wisconsin, making his home at Manitowoc.

In 1872, 1873, and 1874 he was elected to the assembly, and in 1876 he was elected to the State senate, in which he served for six years.

He was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress and re-elected to the Forty-ninth.

Mr. RANKIN easily distinguished himself throughout Wisconsin as a legislator. In truth, the work of legislation seemed natural to him. He was not technical nor obstructive, but nothing in legislation escaped him. He knew from the beginning what some legislators seem never to learn—that niggardliness in public expenditure is wastefulness and that true economy lies nearly always in the direction of liberal expenditures for public purposes; but he was always alert and powerful to prevent extravagance. He was not known to study pending measures, but his remarkable power of quick analysis searched every measure, and, at the proper time, his objection to a loosely drawn or bad bill was sure to come, in a few crisp, sharp sentences, which went to the heart of the subject. His knowledge and mastery of legislative details seemed intuitive and complete. He was, during his entire legislative career in the State, a marvel in this respect to his associates. His grasp of public affairs and policies was broad, strong, and accurate. As a parliamentarian he was of great skill, and as a presiding officer he excelled. In no sense an orator, he was, what is of more value in the service of the people, a good debater, keen, incisive, fertile in resources, and quick at repartee. His memory was strong and retentive, and while he was not a student, somehow he was always ready, and well ready, to meet every call which duty made upon him.

He was independent and proud spirited; not obstinate, but firm. When he had decided what he ought to do no persuasion nor influence nor threat nor charm could swerve him a hair's breadth from the line he had marked out.

His integrity as a man and as a public servant was above suspicion.

Of fine presence, he was a delightful companion, cheery, hospitable, and full of generous impulses, but possessing withal a quiet dignity which never for a moment left him. From the early days of his Wisconsin life to the end he was known among the people as "JOE" RANKIN, and went by no other name. This popular familiarity was in no sense a belittling of him. It was simply a tribute to the qualities which compelled the respect and friendship of men, and it outlived him, for to-day, though "he sleeps the sleep that knows no waking," the old, familiar name is tenderly spoken from one end of the State to the other.

I never knew a man who would do more with alacrity and delight to serve a friend, nor one more loyal and steadfast in his friendship. He was not effusive or demonstrative, but his friendship needed no nursing. Absence did not change it. Adversity only strengthened it.

He was tender as well as brave. He would fight his way with sturdy blows through a score of men to avert an outrage or to right a wrong; yet the sobbing, half-clad stranger child upon the city street found him always a ready listener and a ready helper.

He was, too, essentially a modest man. Turn to the Congressional Directory and you will find descriptive of his army record and service only these seven words, "Served in the Union Army three years."

This was quite characteristic of the man. I venture to say that no one ever heard from him of any good deed he had done, although in his life there was abundance of good deeds and unobtrusive, unheralded charities.

By a kindly law of our humanity the voice of criticism is hushed at the new-made grave. But RANKIN'S life has left no stress upon his friends to invoke for his name and fame this protection, for while this strong man had, of course, his faults and weaknesses, they were forgotton even before he died, and were not such as, if remembered, would stand, unforgiven of men, against him.

He was a Democrat always, and a leader in his party, potential, as a leader should be, in its councils. At one time he was chairman of its State central committee and directed and led the party forces. As a party manager he was wary, devoted, tireless, and able. However hopeless the contest, he always contrived to compel the respect and attention of his adversaries and to give them great trouble and anxiety. While he never lost sight of the party flag nor allowed his troops to straggle, his warfare was honorable and his methods reputable.

He loved the truth and hated falsehood. The man whose word was not good in politics was to him unworthy of confidence in business. The "campaign lie" had no place in his armory of party weapons. Slander he thought the weapon of the coward. He could not tolerate even in the heat of a political battle—

Low-breathed talkers, minion lispers,
Cutting honest throats by whispers.

Once I knew him in a summary way, and in a close campaign, to stamp out with indignation well worthy of his manliness a slander which, while it was helping temporarily his party, was unjustly wounding in heart and home an opponent who was his bitter personal enemy.

He was pitiless in his detestation of pretense and hypocrisy, and a sham reformer of either party found in him an unrelenting foe.

With him politics never entered the domain of friendship as a disturber. I have heard him often quote with great delight the beautiful words of Garfield at Columbus, upon his election to the Senate, words day by day so happily illustrated in this Chamber:

I say moreover that the flowers that bloom over the garden wall of party politics are the sweetest and most fragrant that bloom in the gardens of this world, and where we can early pluck and enjoy their fragrance it is manly and delightful to do so.

And when the committee representing the Congress bore his dead body back to Wisconsin, of the thousands who gathered from far and near to join in the last sad rites about his grave there were no sincerer mourners than those who had fought against him in the vigorous party fights of many years.

Those of us who knew him well confidently expected that with his peculiar talent for legislation he would become, after a little time, conspicuous in the larger field to which the people had called him. But this was not to be. Shortly after the end of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress he was stricken with a malady slow but sure in its undermining work, and from then there was ever by his side, with almost palpable presence, the angel of death. And well he knew it. This man's character and strength were never better illustrated than by his sickness and death. He seemed to say:

If I must die, I will encounter darkness as a bride, and hug it in mine arms.

Calmly he set himself to guard with tender forethought the wife and children from around whom his strong arms were soon to fall forever. With patient skill he gathered together some of the fragments which in the generous days of his strong manhood he had scattered by the way. And when at length his task was done, it was well done.

Then, though he had no hope of life, he would not lay away the harness. Few who hear me knew him, but none I think will soon forget the pathetic story of his last journey to the Capitol. With high resolve, he traveled with wife and children and death from his distant home to take the oath as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress. Once again only he dragged himself to the Capitol, weary and weak, but nerved and inspired by the purpose to serve a friend who had once served him.

Then he awaited the final muster-out. Then this man, who with unflinching courage had faced death upon the field of battle and with the wild music of war ringing in his ears, calmly and as unflinchingly faced him again in the quiet of the sick-room. He sat and watched the lengthening shadows as peacefully as one looks from the window upon the sunset when the day is done. No murmur of discontent or revolt was heard from his lips. He seemed only intent to force the old-time cheeriness into his wan face, in the hope to lighten the heavy blow to the loved ones who watched about him. Considerate to the end, almost his last word was an injunction to his attendant not to let his dear ones know of the keen pain which he was suffering.

Then when he knew the time was come, that the journey was ended, with passionate love he gathered his remaining strength for the last embrace of wife and children, and in the agony of that parting there came to him—

The sinless, stirless rest,
That change which never changes.

He said to me not long before he died, thinking, I believe, that it would be my duty to speak of him in the Senate, "If you ever mention me, talk of me as I am." This, Mr. President, I have done. In a plain way, but with affectionate purpose, I have spoken of him as he was, as I knew him, as my honored colleague knew him, as the people of Wisconsin knew him, and as with tender pain he will be remembered in that State.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President, I second the adoption of the resolutions offered by my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 12, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 11, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. W. HADDAWAY, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPAIR OF LIGHT-HOUSES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Light-House Board submitting an amendment to the annual appropriation for repairs of light-houses; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General in response to a resolution of the House calling for information as to trust funds and unexpended balances in the custody of the several heads of Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House amendments of the Senate to the following House bills; which were severally referred as follows, namely:

The bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (H. R. 61) for the relief of Benjamin M. Simpson—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 4232) to reimburse the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for losses incurred through the failure of the Exchange National Bank of Norfolk, Va., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INCORPORATION OF NATIONAL TRADES UNIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1657) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In asking the unanimous consent of the House that the reference to a committee of Senate bill No. 1657, just submitted, be dispensed with, and that the House immediately proceed to the consideration of it, I desire to state briefly that the measure before you is identical with the bill which I had the honor of introducing in this House, and which was reported to this House on June 2, from the Committee on Labor, with the recommendation that it do pass.

It is merely to save time and to expedite the consideration of a measure which I am satisfied will receive the unanimous vote of this House that I depart from the regular order and ask at the hands of this House the immediate passage of a measure the want of which has been long felt and the demand for which has been of years' standing.

In this connection I desire to say that the request for the legalizing by incorporation of trades unions comes from the organizations themselves. A demand for the right of incorporation under the law is a prominent plank in the platform of principles of the greatest labor organization of the times.

When the Labor Committee had this measure under consideration there appeared before it the legislative committee of another powerful and thoroughly representative labor organization, the International Federation of Trades Unions of the United States and Canada, strongly urging the passage of the bill in its present shape, regretting as they did in common with myself that the scope of the law should, on account of constitutional restrictions, be so limited as in this case. The bill, however, aside from the great good it will accomplish even in the limited territory to which it applies, is representative of a sound principle, and sets an example which I have no doubt will be followed in many of the States.

At this day no one will pretend to deny that the tendency of organization is to improve the condition of the worker. Improvement of the condition of the working classes has always followed their organization. They now ask that they be given a legal habitation and a name, that the stability and position thus acquired may enable them to work still more good.

The recent and general discussion of the arbitration question in connection with labor troubles has brought the trades unions of the country to public notice, and the failure to peaceably and satisfactorily settle many controversies is openly attributed to the lack of legal status or form upon the part of both parties to the controversy.

This matter of legalizing of trades unions has claimed the attention of Hon. Charles F. Peck, commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics of New York, and the results of an extended investigation appear in his last annual report. I beg leave to quote from his summary of testimony upon the subject as follows, as answering the questions that may be raised, Do the trade organizations desire this legislation?

With a view of ascertaining the real sentiment of the working people upon this subject, each witness was asked if he favored the legalization of trades unions. But one witness in two hundred gave a negative answer. When to this is added the fact that hundreds were interviewed upon the subject during the year, and that they were of a like mind, the necessity of some action on this subject is apparent.

It must always be borne in mind that the large majority of witnesses testifying were prominent members of labor organizations. The arguments in favor of such legislation were brief and to the point; in substance they stated that it would place men upon a better basis financially, giving added security to their funds by making it a misdemeanor punishable with fine and imprisonment for an officer to run away with money intrusted to his care; giving them the right to sue and be sued; to hold property for their own use, and to invest in real estate where they had an accumulation of funds, thus securing a greater rate of interest than that which prevails in savings-banks. When it is remembered that the trades-union movement if still in its infancy in this country, and that in the nature of things these funds must accumulate, it is deemed advisable to make provisions for this contingency. One witness cited the example of the Amalgamated Engineers and Machinists Society of England, which had a reserve fund of over $1,000,000, which was largely invested in real estate.

In his message to the Legislature of 1885 the governor of New York State recommended the legalizing of trades unions in the following language:

> Facilities have been afforded by law to enable capital to incorporate and combine for its protection. Like facilities should be afforded for the organization of labor.

Again does the same gentleman say officially:

> I reiterate the recommendation, and in that connection particularly suggest the propriety of a general law especially providing for the incorporation of trades unions. It would strengthen the worthy organization of workingmen, enabling them the more readily to enforce their rights among themselves as well as between themselves and the public, and giving to their proceedings, when acting as a body, the sanction of binding and legal authority, and in many other respects the privilege conferred would be beneficial to all concerned, affording an opportunity to relieve such organizations from any objectionable features, and thereby increase their usefulness.

Hon. L. McHugh, commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics of Ohio, in an able report upon the subject of trades unions, says:

> All history proves that trades unions were a large factor in freeing labor from the slavery of the feudal system. They vastly improved and benefited English labor and brought about their industrial independence and enfranchisement.

That trades unions protect capital as well as labor is attested by the fact that nearly all the disputes between capital and the well-organized unions are characterized by an entire absence of violence and the destruction of private property, and where such outrages have occurred it can be traced directly to the unorganized and uneducated, of whom it may with truth be said "they have no part to conserve nor future for which to provide." Thorough organization of trades is the best preventive of strikes.

As an illustration of this the record of ten of the leading unions in England may be cited, namely: Amalgamated Engineers, Boiler-makers, Ship-builders, Iron-molders of Scotland, Steam-engine Makers, Amalgamated Society of Tailors, Operative Bricklayers, Operative Plasterers, and London Society of Carpenters. These ten unions number one hundred and fifty-four thousand men, and expended in the year 1884 over $1,250,000, of which enormous sum just 6 per cent. was expended for strikes. This is the record of a country where trades unions are legalized by law.

That societies having in their organization so much that is good have not before received the sanction of law for the protection of their funds is, to say the least, somewhat surprising.

From a large mass of correspondence that has reached the committee favoring this measure many strong and practical reasons are given why this principle should be embodied in a statute. It is urged that the incorporation of trades unions would prove an incentive to the very best class of men to join them. It would put more confidence in the men who have in the past been the victims of faithless officers.

One serious drawback to the growth of trades unions has been their inability to accumulate property as such. An organization which meets in a rented hall pays out in ten years for rent more than enough to pay the interest on the cost of construction of a fine building, the rentals of which would be a source of revenue.

The aims of these trade brotherhoods are in every way beneficial and ennobling, yet they are denied the rights extended to any secret society, whether social or benevolent. There is no reason why every city should not have its grand "trade temple" where the various unions and organizations of workingmen may meet. Every city has its Masonic temple, or Odd Fellows' temple, owned by the orders.

An organized trade union, under sanction of law, could enter the market and undertake contracts on the co-operative plan under direction of their officers.

This, Mr. Speaker, I consider one of the strongest points made in favor of the measure.

The rights to hold property and engage in business go together. To the gentlemen interested in the cause of labor who are giving so much attention to the subjects of profit-sharing and co-operative copartnership, I call attention to the possibilities of the workingman becoming his own employer under a system that gives a trades organization a standing in court.

Legalizing trades unions will give them a dignity and standing that will result in more equable relations between employer and employé, and thereby avert many troubles that now take the form of strikes and lock-outs.

Trades unions should certainly receive an equal recognition with any corporation, such as a merchants', produce, tobacco, cotton, or mining exchange. It is the legal status given such bodies that has permitted the growth of the system of arbitration boards under which nearly all commercial difficulties are settled, the courts being the last resort.

Mr. Speaker, I could enumerate many other reasons equally patent, but the facts are apparent. I only desire to assure the House that labor's own voice is asking this concession—no, not a concession, but a right, at your hands.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would ask the gentleman if it is proposed to extend this jurisdiction elsewhere than in the District of Columbia and the Territories?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read a first and second time, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (S. 130) for the relief of John Fletcher—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 148) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1084) to authorize the purchase of five manuscript volumes (being letter-books) of William Vans Murray, formerly minister at The Hague and at Paris—to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (S. 1094) for the relief of Thomas A. McLaughlin—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1150) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1256) for the relief of Thomas H. Norton and James McLean—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1278) to provide for the adjustment of certain accounts of Edwin A. Merritt, late consul-general of London, for storage and care of the archives at that consulate-general—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1286) to change the limits of certain judicial circuits, to establish a new judicial circuit, and for the appointment of a judge for the same—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1311) for the relief of the administrators of the estate of Isaac P. Tice, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1333) for the relief of William H. Randle, of Nashville, Tenn.—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Nathan McKay and the executors of Donald McKay—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1490) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1566) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 1862) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 1876) for the relief of Piromis H. Bell, administrator of Marcus A. Bell, deceased, and others—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1899) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie Maynadier Phelps, widow of Capt. Seth Ledyard Phelps, late minister of the United States to Peru—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1949) providing for the purchase of the portrait of General George H. Thomas, painted by General S. W. Price—to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (S. 1961) to amend section 3893 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The bill (S. 1962) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, regulating fees for exemplification of land patents, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 2037) for the relief of Mary Anna Egan—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2057) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Jackman and the legal representatives of Mrs. Martha Vaughn—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly, and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2158) for the relief of W. H. Ward—to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (S. 2166) for the relief of John F. Cadwallader—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2632) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of "A Digest of International Law," edited by Francis Wharton—to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (S. 503) relating to the supreme court of Montana Territory, and providing for the establishment of judicial districts in said Territory.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill identical with this introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has been unanimously reported. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up and passed instead of referring it.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BEACH. I think we had better go on with the regular order.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WILLIAM J. GAMBLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 505) for the relief of William J. Gamble.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this is the third time this bill has passed the Senate. It only appropriates $125, and I would ask consent that it be taken up and passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to William J. Gamble, late of Company K, Second Arkansas Cavalry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125, in payment for the running-gear of a six-horse wagon furnished by him and used by the United States Army.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORONNA, TAUSSIG & CO. AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be put upon its passage. It is a bill identical in its language with the bill which is reported favorably by the House Committee on Claims. A similar bill was reported favorably to this House in the Forty-sixth Congress by the Committee on Claims, also in the Forty-seventh Congress by the Committee on Ways and Means, and in the Forty-eighth Congress by the Senate Committee on Claims. This is a bill for the refund of certain taxes illegally collected, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Has this bill been considered by any committee of the House?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir; by the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. At the present session?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 9, 1886.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this request will be granted, and the Clerk will be directed to return the bill to the Senate.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OUTHWAITE, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HATCH, for ten days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BEACH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise for the purpose of the regular order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who is in charge of the legislative appropriation bill now pending desires to continue the consideration of that bill to-day; and therefore, in the interest of public business and at his request, I move to dispense with the consideration of private business for this day that the appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

Mr. OATES. I rise to a question of order. The RECORD shows that two bills reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad bill and the Mobile and Ohio Railroad bill, are now pending, with the previous question ordered on each of them. Is it in order that a vote shall now be taken on those bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that even although private business to-day should be dispensed with, unless some further order of the House should be made the two bills to which the gentleman from Alabama alludes would have to be voted on; for the reason not only that the previous question has been ordered on their passage, but that by order of the House by unanimous consent they were assigned for action this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a mistake that the previous question was ordered on either of those bills. The further consideration was postponed until last Friday, and they were made special orders to be taken up before the House went into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer to the record; but the recollection of the Chair is that the order which has been stated was made for the first Friday which followed their being reported; and when that day arrived by unanimous consent of the House it was ordered that the previous question should operate on both bills and a vote be taken this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was understood that the previous question should be moved, but it was not ordered so as to give them priority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consult the record. The action of the Chair will of course depend upon what occurred at the time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, while the record is being examined, I ask unanimous consent, with a view to the early completion of the legislative appropriation bill, that the House hold a session this evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, to dispose of that portion of the bill to which there is no objection. If that is done the bill can be completed, I hope, to-morrow. My colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, informs me that that committee is willing that this arrangement shall be made, provided the House will consent to hold a session to-morrow evening for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions are entirely willing to have this arrangement made if we can have to-morrow evening substituted for this evening for the consideration of pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that a session of the House be held this evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, what is the object of the proposed session this evening?

The SPEAKER. To consider the portion of the legislative appropriation bill to which no objection shall be made.

Mr. BRADY. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BRADY. I object. This is pension night.

The SPEAKER. It is proposed to hold a session for pension business on Saturday evening instead.

Mr. BRADY. Then I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he will not consent to fix some limit to the evening session. The rule which provides that we shall adjourn at 5 o'clock every day works so admirably that I think it desirable to fix an hour for the adjournment of the evening session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to agree that the session shall not extend beyond 11 o'clock.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to inquire whether the House has the right and power to thus limit the legislation that may be transacted at a session held under such an order.

The SPEAKER. The House may make an order that it will adjourn at 5 o'clock, or at 11 o'clock, or at any other hour.

Mr. KELLEY. But may it make an order that it will consider no other business than that for which the session is specially held? The point has been made within a week and pressed with zeal that the House has no right or power to make such a limitation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is a question which would be properly presented when it was proposed to transact other business than that for which the session was ordered, and is not one which the Chair ought to decide at this time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Supposing this unanimous consent is given and the Clerk proceeds this evening to read the legislative appropriation bill and he reaches a provision of the bill to which an objection is made, under the rules of the House in regard to reading the bill by sections will he then pass over that and read the next section and then the next, and when we come to consider the bill to-morrow will we go back to each section objected to and discuss it with just as much freedom as if it were then reached in its regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be the order of business if the evening session should be ordered as requested.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is it a part of the understanding and agreement that the legislative bill shall be considered to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands; but the Chair does not yet understand whether it is proposed to dispense with the morning hour for the call of reports or not.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not object to the request, if it is understood that the remainder of this day is to be devoted to the consideration of the legislative bill.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, who asks unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Two gentlemen have asked unanimous consent. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent to devote the remainder of this day to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, and to have a session this evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, to be devoted to the further consideration of that bill, not to dispose, however, of any portion of the bill to which objection is made. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that a session be held to-morrow evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, for the consideration of business under the special order of the House heretofore made for Friday evening sessions, pensions bills and bills removing political disabilities; the evening sessions not to extend beyond 11 o'clock.

Mr. LYMAN. Will unanimous consent to this arrangement interfere with action on private bills to-day?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. LYMAN. Then I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5251) making appropriations for the repair and enlargement of the post-office and court-house at Des Moines, Iowa, and fixing a limit therefor.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The message further informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, non-concurred in by the House, requested a conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. MANDERSON, LOGAN, and COCKRELL.

REPORTS OF SOUTH AMERICAN COMMISSION.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the report of the South American Commission, as set forth in the accompanying resolution, have considered the same, and instructed me to recommend its passage.

The cost is estimated to be $8,415.

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the reports of the South American Commission, Executive Document No. 226, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, and Executive Document No. 50, Forty-ninth Congress, first session; of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRISON. Is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER (after examining the resolution). The resolution is confined to printing for the use of the Senate and House, and is privileged.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much is this printing to cost, according to the report?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that portion of the report again.

The Clerk read as follows:

The cost is estimated to be $8,415.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, there were—ayes 72, noes 26.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move to postpone the consideration of all private business until next Friday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a motion can not be made to postpone all private business. Any particular bill can be postponed when it is up for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I modify my motion and move to dispense with private business for to-day.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 89, noes 33.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, returned from the Senate with a message that the Senate had insisted on its amendm ents and asked a conference with the House thereon.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by that body.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the evening session fixed by order of the House for this evening be postponed until to-morrow evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the session ordered for this evening be postponed until to-morrow evening, at which time a session be held beginning at 8 o'clock for the consideration, as the Chair understands, of business designated by the standing order with reference to Friday night sessions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that to-night be set apart for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill under the conditions already named.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a session be held this evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, and not to continue beyond 11 o'clock, for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, no provision of the bill to be disposed of to which objection is made. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. COBB, as a privileged report from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with the amendments of the Senate the bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 1, after the word "way," insert "and the right, power, and authority given to said company to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material of earth, stone, timber, &c., for the construction thereof, including all necessary grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations."

Strike out all after "domain," in line 14, down to and including "act," in line 21.

The SPEAKER. What is the recommendation of the committee?

Mr. COBB. The committee recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. McRAE. Concurrence in these amendments is recommended by a majority of the committee, but with the understanding that the minority should have the right to be heard on the question. I have no objection to the consideration of the amendments now; but there are some observations which I desire to make on the question which will occupy some little time. If the House desires to take up this matter now, I am prepared to go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not my colleague [Mr. COBB] consent that this bill be passed over till Monday?

Mr. COBB. Under the act of 1871 this railroad company is entitled to all lands conterminous with the road so far as completed at the time of forfeiture. Therefore every mile of road which they may complete before the passage of this act will give them that much more land. That is the only objection, so far as I know, to postponing the consideration of the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be the loss of only one legislative day.

Mr. McRAE. It is impossible to consider this question in ten or fifteen minutes. The question is an important one, involving a large grant of land. While this is entitled a bill to forfeit lands granted to this company, I regard it as simply confirming to this company nearly all of this grant of 16,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. COBB. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was heard on that question before the House when this bill was under consideration. He then moved an amendment to forfeit all the lands, which the House held could not be done under the act of 1871; and as a legal proposition I have no doubt that is correct. The act of 1871, which gave this corporation the right to mortgage its lands to procure money to build the road, provided that the mortgagees should have a lien upon all the lands conterminous with the road so far as completed at the time of forfeiture. Therefore, I take it we are estopped by that legislation from the unqualified forfeiture which the gentleman advocated; and the House has so held on two several occasions.

At the last Congress it was so held, and it was so held on the passage of the bill at this session of Congress. The gentleman insists that we can forfeit the lands. The House has already decided that question, and I presume the House will not disturb its decision on that subject. We passed the bill with that one important amendment, as I regard it, and that is to give this corporation the right to take material to build the road from the public lands adjoining the line of the road.

Mr. McRAE. It has that already by general statute. To strike out the proviso in the bill as it passed the House is the important and dangerous amendment and is the one you refer to.

Mr. COBB. Which is that? In regard to the homestead law?

Mr. McRAE. No; the one reserving the right of the United States in lands not forfeited. When you strike that amendment out you concede to the railroad company everything they ask. It amounts to nothing less than an act of confirmation, and you can not raise in court, in Congress, or anywhere else any question on the act of the 20th of April, 1871.

I say, too, Mr. Speaker, that the report of the committee does sustain the position I take on the act of the 20th of April, 1871. The majority of the committee, although they recommend concurrence here in that report, have decided that we have the power to make this forfeiture. And I hold, and shall insist, and ask to be heard in the discussion of this amendment, that we have the power and ought to exercise it, declaring the forfeiture of the lands not patented to this company.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood this matter was to be postponed until after the pending appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was disposed of. I thought the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] asked that it be not taken up today.

Mr. McRAE. No; I do not insist on it, but I am ready to go on now, so far as I am concerned. They will not build much road between this and next Monday. If it be the desire to go on with the bill now, I am ready.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made a request, but there was no agreement.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest the further consideration of the subject be postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. McRAE. I do not object to that.

Mr. COBB. I can say this to the House, that I know my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] desires to get the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill out of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as early as possible. If this bill is going to take up considerable time I will not insist on going on with it until after that appropriation bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman wish to make to the House?

Mr. COBB. I move that it go over until Monday next.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MORNING HOUR DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to make a statement just in that connection.

Mr. WADE rose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

HELENA, ARK.

Mr. DUNN. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WADE] be permitted to make the report which he was prevented from doing yesterday.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not object, if there be unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNN. It would have been made yesterday, but a paper happened to be out of place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report will be received.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 74, a bill (H. R. 9376) for the erection of a public building at Helena, Ark.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move, by unanimous consent, the adoption of the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on Wednesday next the House shall at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted to business on the Private Calendar to which there may be no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask my friend from Illinois to so modify his order as that the evening session will be closed at some reasonable hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will modify it so that the evening session shall be closed at 11 o'clock p. m.

There was no objection, and the order as modified was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. What action will the House take as to the bill coming over from last Friday, "a bill (H. R. 5194) directing the Quartermaster-General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, and for other purposes?"

Mr. OATES. Representing this bill, I shall consent to its postponement until after the bill in charge of the gentleman from Indiana is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That would be too indefinite; the gentleman should name some day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that it be postponed until next Friday.

Mr. OATES. Then, with the understanding that the vote shall be taken next Friday, I move the postponement heretofore made be continued until next Friday morning.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the pending section.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I propose to amend the paragraph under consideration when the House adjourned on yesterday. In line 243, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "affairs," in line 247; and after the word "pensions," in line 248, strike out all the rest of the paragraph down to and including line 256.

I understood on yesterday from the gentleman in charge of this bill that there had been legislation which instructed the committee to make these clerks of the several committees which this amendment proposes to strike out annual, at $2,000 each.

It will be seen that this amendment proposes to strike out the clerk to the Committees on Agriculture, Claims, Commerce, District of Columbia, Foreign Affairs, Indian Affairs, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, War Claims, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, and the assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims. I see no reason why the House should not adopt the amendment. It may be, sir, that the Committee on War Claims ought to have an annual clerk; I am not sufficiently acquainted with the business of the committee to determine that question, but there is no reason why the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Indian Affairs, on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, on Military Affairs, and on Naval Affairs should have an annual clerk.

I think it is too apparent to the House to need any argument that we should not branch off in this kind of extravagance when there is no sort of necessity for it. The clerks of these several committees have no business to transact during the vacation, and if they draw $6 a day during the session of Congress it is ample compensation for the duties they perform; unless it be, as I have said, the War Claims Committee, and it may be that the assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims should be allowed.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to correct an inaccuracy of statement I made on yesterday. I said that these clerks were covered by resolution of the House. That is only true as to the clerks to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The others have been provided for by prior resolutions or by the action of the House.

These are the only two who have been appointed by the action of the House this session, and that is the only change I desire to make in the statement; the only difference being that my statement was broad enough to embrace all of these clerks, whereas it should have embraced but the two.

Mr. COBB. As to this amendment, it proposes to strike out the clerkship to the Public Lands Committee. Being a member of that committee, I desire to have a word to say upon that point.

The general law, as I understand it, provides for a clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands and his salary is fixed. Now I insist that the amendment, so far as that is concerned, is not in order. I will read the language of the statute upon the subject——

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will except from the operation of the amendment the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands. I did not understand that it was an annual clerkship.

Mr. COBB. Then I understand the gentleman excepts the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has had a permanent clerk for many years.

Mr. HERBERT. I make a point of order as to the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I understand that is also provided by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as modified will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 31, noes 55.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. THROCKMORTON and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 93.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COBB. I desire to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the appropriation for the clerk to the Committee on the Public Lands. This bill proposes to give him $2,000. Under the statute the pay of the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands is fixed at $2,484 a year. I make the point of order that this is new legislation, and I suggest that the bill be amended to conform to the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send the statute to which he refers to the Chair?

Mr. COBB. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state, upon an examination of this statute, that it was repealed by the act of 1873.

Mr. COBB. I was not aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may be mistaken as to the exact date of the repeal.

Mr. COBB. It must have been since 1878.

Mr. HOLMAN. The statute to which the gentleman refers was the act of 1872, which was repealed in 1873.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair may be mistaken as to the date, the Chair is clear in his mind that the statute has been repealed by subsequent action. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 31 clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $22,506.

Mr. CANNON. In line 258, I move to strike out "one" and insert "four;" so that it will read "for 34 clerks to committees," &c.

Mr. MORRISON addressed the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a word about the amendment I have offered.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to be heard before we pass from the other paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. We have passed from the other paragraph.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] was still on the floor when the Clerk commenced reading; and I had a suggestion to make before we passed from the previous paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] raised a question of order, and cited the statute. The Chair has ruled on the question of order, and stated that the statute to which the gentleman referred has been repealed.

Mr. MORRISON. Very well; I will say what I have to say after my colleague [Mr. CANNON] has been heard.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word about this amendment. At this session of Congress the House has increased the clerkships of committees by adding five to them. By another resolution it has made two of those clerks annual clerks, leaving three session committee clerks not appropriated for in this clause. If they are not appropriated for, then their salaries will be payable from the contingent fund; but there is no increase in the contingent fund; on the contrary, there is a decrease, so that there will be a deficiency next year to pay these committee clerks. I do not know what object the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had in failing to recommend the appropriation for the full number of clerks that are now being employed. I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MORRISON. By way of reply to my colleague [Mr. CANNON] I will say what I intended to say on the previous paragraph. I do not and did not intend to make any motion, but to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to a matter on which he can exercise himself in the interest of economy. There are numerous appropriations not fixed or limited by law but left to the legislative discretion—places where both the number and the pay of officers may be reduced. In these neither the rules nor the law restrain the economical tendency of anybody. By way of illustration, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] incorporated or copied in his remarks yesterday a table showing the effect of a strict enforcement of the rules of the House. His tables show that if the rules were enforced strictly and we were required to appropriate the full amounts fixed by law and forbidden to appropriate any increases over the amounts the law now authorizes it would make a difference of about $39,000 in this bill. This, he says, would be the cost of obedience to the new, and to him the objectionable, rules as applied to this bill.

The gentleman tells us, no doubt correctly, that the reduction made in the bill, as compared with the corresponding bill of last year, is $800,000; so that an enforcement of the rule about which he is complaining, which prevented him from making the necessary reduction, would affect or relate to $40,000 out of $800,000 according to his showing. I am glad to know that if even his apprehensions were justified, as they are not, the cost would not exceed $40,000.

What I desired more especially to call to the attention of the gentleman from Indiana was that in this paragraph from which we have now passed he has made a mistake I presume in allowing to the assistant clerk of his own committee $1,600, which is $400 more than is allowed any other committee having an assistant clerk. There was no law, no rule of the House, nor of propriety, nor point of order, nor anything else preventing him from making the necessary reduction if he saw fit to make it. A motion from him would, I doubt not, have received an almost unanimous vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to the matter my friend from Illinois has last referred to, he would have shown his usual fairness—and I always listen to him with satisfaction—if he had said that we took the amount of the appropriation for this employé from the present law. It has been the law for several years. It is not a new provision. We are simply appropriating what has been appropriated for that employé heretofore.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, an excessive and extravagant abuse which you have been continuing from year to year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Touching the other matter to which the gentleman referred, I stated distinctly yesterday, but do not seem to have been heard by my friend, that the examination was but partial; that as far as the hasty examination in the few hours allowed went there were one hundred and thirty-eight officers whose salaries had been reduced by appropriation bills within the last ten years containing the clause that the sum appropriated should be received in full compensation. I do not indulge the slightest hope that that list embraces any large per cent. of the number of officers affected by this provision. Nothing but a more searching examination will tell how far-reaching the effect will be if this bill shall become law, leaving all of the employés whose salaries have been reduced within the last ten years unaffected, with the right to go into a court to recover whatever difference there may be between the amount appropriated and the amount of the salary as fixed by law. But I indulge the hope and belief that before this bill shall come to be a law my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] will cordially co-operate with the Committee on Appropriations to save the Treasury from the drain that this ruling—necessary, perhaps—would impose upon us.

Mr. REED, of Maine, addressed the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask to be allowed a single moment in reply to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has just said. I want to say to the gentleman he shall have my cordial co-operation, and I had just indicated to him where I could co-operate with him in making a small reduction in a matter very near to himself—as near as his own committee, where he justifies unreasonable compensation because it is only continuing an old abuse.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am perfectly willing the gentleman should go back in the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not want to go back to outdo you in a matter so appropriate for you.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman to do so, and no point of order will be made.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Indiana says this $1,600 was in the bill before. That is true. But he has been here two or three days trying to convince us that he was prevented from making reductions by the rules, and I have indicated where he could make one reduction, if not a very important one, and where the rules did not restrain him.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is my friend quite certain that that salary should be reduced?

Mr. MORRISON. Do you think it ought to be continued at $1,600? That is $400 more than you allow any assistant clerk except yours.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it ought.

Mr. MORRISON. I am not asking you. You are not an economist up to the standard of the gentleman from Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me answer the gentleman. I have said so often that all our salaries are greatly above what they should be that it is hardly necessary for me to repeat it now. The gentleman can make no motion for the reduction of any salary that shall not have my cordial support and co-operation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the gentleman mean to say that he would vote to reduce the salary of an Indiana official? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; with great willingness, if it was proper.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Indiana says that there are hidden away in this bill numerous reductions which have not come to the surface in the statement I produced here yesterday, which I obtained through the courtesy of the clerk and which turns out to be a copy of the table or statement to be found in the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana made yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why do you not use my very words, or something near them?

Mr. MORRISON. Well, the gentleman uses so many words and such elegant words, that I can not use them all. [Laughter.] I have already said, Mr. Chairman, that the paper I produced yesterday was furnished me by the clerk of the gentleman's own committee, and no doubt it shows the reduction correctly, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] tells us that this clerk of the Appropriations Committee who furnished the information ought not merely to have the salary of $3,000 a year which he now receives, and which is $500 more than any other clerk receives, but that he would be willing to give him $5,000 a year in his own business. I presume, therefore, that the statement is entirely correct, except that a few increases may have been overlooked. I know of one increase that is not noticed. I do not know whether any reductions have escaped him or not, but I have no doubt that the statement is substantially correct, as correct as he could make it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. CANNON] by striking out "one" and inserting "four."

In listening to this talk, which is in itself very interesting and instructive, the merit of the amendment of my colleague is liable to be overlooked. I insist that we ought to have a session clerk for every committee that we constitute. For the last three sessions of Congress I have had the honor and the misfortune to serve upon the Committee on Accounts. At every session there have come before that committee propositions to pay additional clerks out of the contingent fund, clerks not provided for in the annual appropriation bill. That is work which should not be put upon the Committee on Accounts. This House knows that every committee it constitutes ought to have a clerk. That, I believe, is the public sentiment of the House, and therefore I hope that the amendment of my colleague increasing the number of clerks from thirty-one to thirty-four will prevail. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, let me say in connection with what my colleague has just said that my amendment does not increase the present number of clerks. It only appropriates for the number provided for by the resolutions of the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Then it simply comes nearer to what should be done?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I trust there will be no increase. The number in the bill is as large as the number provided for by the existing law and we are paying two permanent clerks in addition. I trust that every gentleman on this floor understands that the number of clerks provided for by this bill is more than is necessary.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if it is not true that there are now three more clerks in the service of committees of the House than are appropriated for here?

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be the case, but, as the gentleman knows, the number is too large.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will be frank with the House and tell us what the fact is. Are we appropriating here for three clerks less than the number actually in the service?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is of course correct in his statement. There is no question about that; but I am adding the fact——

Mr. DUNN. Do you name these clerks that are not appropriated for?

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not name them. That matter is left to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DUNN. But what clerk is to lose his salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. That matter will be determined by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DUNN. What committees have we heretofore authorized to employ clerks?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, nearly all the committees of the House. The number ought to be reduced one-half.

Mr. DUNN. But this is not the place to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 258 strike out "one" and insert "four;" making it read "thirty-four clerks to committees," &c.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. As I understand, this is an attempt on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to nullify the resolutions passed in each case by this House.

A MEMBER. The amendment does not do that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. So I understand. But this bill as reported is an attempt on the part of the committee to nullify the various resolutions by which the House authorized clerks for these several committees. It is admitted here that the House has by resolutions appointed more session clerks than the Appropriation Committee proposes to provide for in this bill. Now what is to be done with these clerks for whom the bill does not provide?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that the provision here is for session clerks; but we do not determine whether a clerk shall be assigned or not to any particular committee. That is done through the action of the Committee on Accounts. This bill provides for exactly the number authorized by law.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But, Mr. Chairman, after the House has passed upon the propriety of giving session clerks to these committees, are we to go over this fight session after session? I think the House ought to respect itself; it ought to respect its own resolutions; and we ought to require this Committee on Appropriations to respect the resolutions of the House. I do hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] providing for these three clerks whom the bill does not provide for will be adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not agree with the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] that because there are a certain number of clerks of committees during this long session we must have the same number during the short session of the ensuing fiscal year. There is a great deal more business in committees at the first session of a Congress than at the second. I will give an illustration. The Committee on Claims has been allowed two clerks; one was an annual clerk, the other was by special resolution allowed for this session only. We have made no objection to this limitation upon the employment of this second clerk, because the business of our committee will be much lighter at the next session than it has been at this, so that we can then get along with one clerk. Other clerks that were authorized for this session were authorized with the understanding that they would not be needed at the next session.

The truth is, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has said, that we have too many of these clerks already; and there should be a large reduction instead of any increase. At the beginning of this Congress I proposed an amendment to the rules which would have dispensed with various unimportant committees, reducing the committees to twenty-one and the number of committee clerks to sixteen.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But the House refused to adopt that proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House refused to adopt it; but the course of business here has shown that the House then made a mistake; and I hope it will not continue this mistake any longer.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me a single question? He says there are sixteen too many clerks. Now, will my friend move to reduce these thirty-one clerks by dispensing with sixteen?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said there were too many committees; and if we would reduce the number of committees the number of clerks would be reduced. I maintain that a committee which has no clerk is useless and ought to be abolished. I wanted first to abolish the unnecessary committees, and the reduction of clerks would have followed as a matter of course.

Mr. CANNON. Then it was mere profession in which the gentleman was indulging.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. This item in lines 258 to 260 applies, as I understand, to clerks of committees not specified in the preceding paragraph. Now, I want to inquire of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] whether this is intended to embrace the clerks of all the committees of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. All the session clerks. It is only the session clerks who are paid out of this fund.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. This, then, will require the payment of a clerk whether there has been a meeting of his committee or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague is mistaken. These clerks are assigned at each session through the action of the Committee on Accounts; and if we can get rid of a part of these clerks so much the better. The question is not now, however, as to how the thirty-one clerks are to be employed, but my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] wants to increase the number of the clerks here provided for to thirty-four.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Before this question is voted on I want to say that to my knowledge there are committees of this House having clerks which committees have not had a business meeting during the session.

Mr. FELTON. Were the clerks authorized by resolution of the House?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I suppose so. Before we provide that these clerks shall be paid it is right the House should understand that there are committees that have clerks who are performing the duties of private secretaries to the chairmen of the committees, while there has not been a meeting of the committee since this Congress met. I mean a business meeting. Apart from the organization of the committee and the appointment of the clerk, there has not been a meeting of the committee since.

A MEMBER. Name any such committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department is one.

Before this vote is taken I want the House to understand that the chairmen of these committees have never called their committees together except when they were called together to organize and when the clerk was appointed. They notified the committee that they would give them notice when they wanted a meeting; and they have not met since that time.

Mr. FELTON. Now, who do they act for as private secretaries?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, Why, for the chairmen of the committees.

Mr. FELTON. Very well, let that be known.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question recurred on Mr. CANNON'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: For Doorkeeper, $3,000; and for hire of horses, feed, repair of wagon and harness, $1,100; assistant doorkeeper (George A. Bacon), to be employed in the document-room, $2,000; clerk for Doorkeeper, $1,200; janitor, $1,200; superintendent of the folding-room, $2,000; three clerks in the folding-room, one at $1,800 and two at $1,200 each; superintendent of the document-room, $2,000; chief assistant in the document-room, at $2,000; document file-clerk, $1,400; assistant document file-clerk, under resolution of December 19, 1881, $1,314; fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll, under the control of the Doorkeeper, at $1,200 each; nine messengers, including messenger to the reporters' gallery, at $1,200 each; nine messengers, at $1,000 each; seven laborers, at $720 each; ten laborers, during the session, at $60 per month each; one laborer, at $600; for the two laborers now in charge of water-closet, at $720 each; six laborers in charge of cleaning the Hall of the House, known as "cloak-room men," at $50 per month, during the session; for the two "cloak-room men" now longest in the service of the House, at $600 each; for one female attendant in ladies' retiring room, $600; two messengers, during the session, at $67 per month each; for one employé (John T. Chancey), $1,500; one Department messenger (C. W. Coombs), $2,000; for labor in folding books, speeches, and pamphlets: one foreman, $1,500; one messenger, $1,200; one folder in the sealing-room, $1,200; one page, $500; one laborer, $400; ten folders, at $900 each; five folders, at $840 each; three folders, during the session, at $67 per month each; and fifteen folders, at $720 each; two chief pages (A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle), at $900 each; and for thirty-three pages, during the session, including two riding pages, one telephone page, and one telegraph page, at $2.50 per day each; rent of additional folding-room, $1,000; one night watchman, $900; one driver, $600; in all, $118,416.50.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making several points of order on this paragraph of the bill. The House will bear in mind that this paragraph undertakes to deal with the employés of the Doorkeeper, who under the rules of the House has the appointment and control of his own employés and subordinates. Now this committee, not willing the Doorkeeper shall have the right or be responsible for the appointment of his subordinates under the rules of the House, by this paragraph undertakes to make itself the appointing power of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order? The gentleman has not stated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not concluded.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No point of order has as yet been made by the gentleman from West Virginia. He is debating the question and not stating any point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am making my point of order, I think, as clear as it can be stated to the House.

Mr. STORM. It should be stated and not debated.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am stating my point of order in my own way. If other gentlemen desire to make them in their way they can do so when I have concluded.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If no point of order is made, and discussion is allowed to proceed, then under the ruling made by the Chair yesterday we would be cut off, and that is the reason why I called attention to the fact that the gentleman from West Virginia had not stated his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from West Virginia raised the point of order this was a provision in the bill in violation of the rules of the House taking from the Doorkeeper the power to appoint his own subordinates.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I thought, Mr. Chairman, I was making my point of order clear enough to be understood by anybody. I was going on to say that in this paragraph the rules of the House are being violated by this committee in making appropriation to carry on the business of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In what respect?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in this paragraph there is a violation of the rules in this respect: "Assistant doorkeeper (George A. Bacon), to be employed in the document-room." They not only appropriate for this assistant doorkeeper, but specify that George A. Bacon shall be this assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. BAYNE. What rule is violated?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why, sir, the rule giving the Doorkeeper the right to appoint his own subordinates. It is also a violation of the rules of the House by being legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. BAYNE. No.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes; it is a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. STORM. It is according to a resolution of the House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. He is one of the assistant doorkeepers of the House, and the Doorkeeper has a right to appoint his own subordinates. Here an assistant doorkeeper is not only appointed and the salary fixed, but George A. Bacon is appointed to fill the place.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me correct you.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me go on and state my point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. This place has been provided for by resolution of the House itself.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will yield to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. For what purpose?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. To correct him.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This assistant doorkeeper is placed on the roll by name under a resolution of the House, and he is not under the control of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. He is therefore in the appropriation bill here under existing law.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That does not correct this bill, whatever was done before; this is a bad precedent and should not be followed.

But let us go further. In another part of the paragraph there is a provision for the appointment of two laborers. It not only provides for the two laborers in charge of the water-closet, but it specifies they shall be the two laborers now in charge of the water-closet. Why should the committee undertake to go into the water-closet and nose around and take away from the Doorkeeper the power which the rules of the House give him to appoint his own subordinates?

Not only that, but they go further. They go into the cloak-room and undertake to provide for "two cloak-room men now longest in the service of the House." They go still further, and in line 302 provide "for one employé (John T. Chancey)." And in line 304 "one Department messenger (C. W. Coombs)."

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chancey is appointed here by law, by name.

Mr. RYAN. By a resolution of the House.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. By a law of the last House, permanently; and he can not be removed without the action of the House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand all that; but it does not alter the proposition I make. The Appropriations Committee has no right, in making a general appropriation for the employés of the House, to make it for them by name specifically.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The truth is, then, the Doorkeeper's power is higher than the power of the House. Is that it?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir.

Again, on line 314, the two chief pages are named, Pickens and Lyle, in this bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that, these men having been employed by a rule of the House, does not affect the point of order I make, that the Appropriations Committee in making its appropriation have no right to make specific assignments to these particular places by name. These men hold a general public office. They have been appointed by a rule of the House. They are holding a general office, and they get their pay under a general appropriation bill. They should not be named here. The others are all mentioned generally, and to name here one or two, I hold, is entirely contrary to the spirit of the rule.

Mr. BAYNE. What rule is violated?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The rule that you should turn the rascals out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. I ask what rule of the House is violated?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The rule giving the Doorkeeper control of his subordinates.

Mr. BAYNE. What is the rule?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, a word further, not immediately in reference to this subject but to do justice to myself. On yesterday, during the debate and in the heat of it, I was led to make a not very courteous or called-for answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and I desire to make him now the amplest apology for it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, in the first place the gentleman from West Virginia is mistaken in supposing that the Committee on Appropriations is seeking to make appointments for this House. The Committee on Appropriations has no such power either by inserting in the bill the name of the party to be paid or otherwise. The committee can do no more than merely suggest the name to the House, and it is for the House to say whether it shall be retained in the bill and the party appointed or not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What right has the Committee on Appropriations to suggest the name of an officer of the House?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will wait until I get through I think he will see the force of the point I make.

The gentleman is arguing in favor of the one-man power. I am contending for the power of the House against the one-man power. He wants to lodge in the hands of the Doorkeeper alone the power of saying whom we shall appoint to serve us here. The Committee on Appropriations wishes to put it in the power of the majority of the House to say whether they do not prefer John T. Chancey or George A. Bacon, instead of being governed alone by the action of the Doorkeeper; and the names of John T. Chancey and George A. Bacon were put in by resolution of the House for the purpose of taking these two appointments out of the hands and power of the Doorkeeper. How did they get here?

John T. Chancey was made an officer of this House by a resolution introduced in 1877 by Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia. That resolution recites that he shall occupy that position, naming him, until otherwise ordered by the House. His name is on that roll under a continuing order of the House, and in my judgment he can not be removed except by the action of the House. It has to be done by a resolution of the House; and when the Committee on Appropriations was called upon to make provision for the position it was the duty of that committee to take notice of the mandate of the House that a certain sum should be appropriated for a man whose name had been embodied in the resolution—that is to say, John T. Chancey.

The case of George A. Bacon is identically the same. I will read the resolution under which he was appointed. It was introduced in 1881, having been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

This is the language:

Resolved, That George A. Bacon be authorized to act as second assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, to receive the same pay as the present assistant doorkeeper of the House, until otherwise ordered.

He is there, sir, by order of the House, and will remain there until the House itself shall otherwise order.

Mr. OATES. Does the gentleman think that is of any binding force except upon the Congress that enacted it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do, sir. If you will take the rules of the House you will discover that we have put in a provision declaring that these rules shall operate upon all succeeding Congresses until they are changed.

Mr. OATES. It would have no legal effect whatever.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That question has been gone over time and again. In my judgment that resolution has the force and effect of law, for the reason that the Constitution has given the House the power to choose its own appointees, and it has exercised the power under the Constitution of determining how they shall be chosen. It is there then under the ordinary processes of law, which have been declared in manner and in effect in the rules, that the officers appointed by the House shall hold their offices until they have been succeeded by the action of the House itself.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I wish the gentleman from Illinois to answer me a question. Will he point now to the resolution of this House appointing the present employés in the water-closet and the cloak-room?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not discussing that now.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am making a point of order which is general in its character.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I trust I may have the attention of the Chair, for I am addressing myself alone to his ear. No matter whether the ruling of the Chair hitherto upon these names be correct or not, no matter how it may be with reference to those whose names have been stricken out, I say the names of George A. Bacon and John T. Chancey stand on an entirely different footing. The names of the others have been inserted in the bill on the motion of the Committee on Appropriations. These names are here by mandate of the House of Representatives, and stand on an entirely different footing. That is the point I want distinctly to press on the mind of the Chair, that this is not to be governed by the principles governing the other names on the list.

A word or two as to the reason why these names are here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. My motion does not affect John T. Chancey and George A. Bacon at all. It leaves them where they are, as employés of the House. It simply affects the Committee on Appropriations as to the manner in which they make the appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from West Virgina makes no point of order on the names of George A. Bacon and John T. Chancey I have nothing to say, because my argument is addressed to this one point, that George A. Bacon and John T. Chancey stand on an entirely different footing from any others whose names appear in the appropriation bill. A word or two as to why these names appear here. John T. Chancey was appointed on the motion of the late Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia. The object he had in view was—it was a Democratic House—to accommodate our Republican friends by furnishing them with an official who might attend them in their caucuses. It was regarded as a graceful act on the part of the Democratic party that we should concede to them the right to select one of their own party. Another reason was this, that John T. Chancey has been in the service of this House for years and years—I do not know how long.

Mr. KELLEY. Why, he has a prescriptive right. He was a venerable officer of the House when I came in in 1861. I have never heard a fault found with him, or heard that one had been found before I came into the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say, in pursuance of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just said, that John T. Chancey has shown himself to be so efficient and so invaluable, in fact, to the members because of his long experience here and his long knowledge of such services as we need from a messenger, that those who are acquainted with him—and doubtless all are—know it would be very difficult to fill his place with any one. So that on account of his efficiency in the performance of those duties which we are needing every day and every hour in he day while the House is in session it was believed proper that the control of his appointment should be taken out of the hands of the Doorkeeper and lodged in the hands of the members of this House.

Now, why was George A. Bacon appointed? He was appointed in the Forty-seventh Congress, when our Republican friends got control of this House. George A. Bacon was a Democrat. He was a distinguished soldier in the Army, colonel of one of the Illinois regiments. He came here in the Forty-fourth Congress, I believe, mainly through the influence of my colleague, Colonel MORRISON. He came here and proved himself to be one of the most efficient men we have ever had in the document-room. There is not a man here that can step in and take his place. He is familiar with all the documents, reports, and resolutions there.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I rise to a question of order. I submit the gentleman is not confining himself to a discussion of the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am doing so, as much so at least as any one who has preceded me in the discussion of the point of order, recognizing the efficiency of this man's services, also recognizing the fact that it was due to the Democratic minority of this House in the Forty-seventh Congress that they should have one officer who could attend their caucuses, our Republican friends did the same graceful act toward us that under the leadership of Alexander H. Stephens the Democratic House had done to them; and on the motion of my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] George A. Bacon was under the then Republican administration of this House appointed a second assistant doorkeeper.

The office was created for him and for him alone, and if he should die or resign it was intended that the office should lapse. That was the intention and the purpose of this House.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from Illinois give me two minutes that I may re-enforce his argument?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have said about all I wanted to say.

Mr. LONG. I wanted to re-enforce your argument.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. I understand the only ground on which this point of order can be sustained, if at all, is that the Constitution provides that the House shall elect its own officers; and if the result of this is that we elect George A. Bacon as second assistant doorkeeper, then it is unconstitutional and subject to a point of order.

The presumption is that no committee will report and that no House will adopt an unconstitutional provision, and if there be any interpretation which we can put upon these words which is consistent with the Constitution they should have the benefit of the presumption in their favor. Now, what is the clear purpose of putting in these names "George A. Bacon and John T. Chancey?" Recognizing the fact that the House will elect its own officers, by adopting this provision we simply suggest to the Doorkeeper that he appoint Mr. Bacon as second assistant doorkeeper and Mr. John T. Chancey as an employé. That is a fair and reasonable interpretation of the words; and if the other interpretation is an unconstitutional one the presumption is that it was not intended. Let us take it for granted that the Committee on Appropriations in putting in this provision intended it simply in the nature of a suggestion. The moment the House adopts this clause it becomes the action of the whole House, and the whole House suggests to the Doorkeeper that he retain these employés. That is a perfectly fair interpretation, and nothing more is meant.

Mr. MILLS rose and was recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I had not finished the point I was making when the gentleman from Massachusetts interposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not regard debate on questions of order as indefinite.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I just want to state one other point, and I will state it very briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed, then.

Mr. MILLS. Did the Chair recognize me as entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did recognize the gentleman from Texas, but the gentleman from Illinois said that he desired to state one other point, and the Chair suggested that the gentleman from Texas would allow him to do so, and would then follow him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yesterday I understood the Chair to hold that the bill of the current year was in the nature of a law, and that therefore no change could be made in the law of the current year, or the bill making appropriations for the current year, without running counter to the rule which has been recently adopted. Now, in the bill of the current year the names of Mr. Chancey and Mr. Bacon do appear. Therefore, if the Committee on Appropriations had stricken out those names, as I understand the ruling of the Chair yesterday, the committee would have violated the rule which forbids any change of existing law.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the Constitution authorizes each House to select its own officers. The language of the Constitution in reference to the House of Representatives is that it shall choose its Speaker and other officers. It is contended that this is an act of legislation, because the Senate has to act upon it; but it seems to me that it is almost too late to make that point when we see in the very first chapter of the Revised Statutes a Doorkeeper, a Postmaster, messengers and clerks, and all the other officers of this House provided for by law.

I am satisfied that this House has the authority under the Constitution to antagonize this method of legislation and to select its own officers, because the Constitution is the supreme law of the land; but we have given our consent to this manner of selecting the officers of the House ever since the Government was organized, and to-day every officer of this House is selected by law. This House has a right to say to the Doorkeeper of the House, "While we select you as Doorkeeper of the House, we give our opinion that this man or that man should be retained in the service of the House." This House knows who are efficient officers——

Mr. MCMILLIN. But, if the gentleman will allow me, the point is that the House is not reserving its right to select these officers, because the Senate and the President also have a voice in it when it is done by legislation.

Mr. MILLS. What I have said is that we have been doing it that way for a hundred years. There have been officers provided for the House of Representatives by law ever since the Constitution went into operation, and it is too late now to make the point. Every officer of your House is appointed by law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Appointed by name?

Mr. MILLS. The office is created by law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The office is created, but the officer is not designated.

Mr. MILLS. That does not make any difference.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] a question. Suppose Mr. Chancey should die, what would be the result?

Mr. MILLS. The power of the House is always in existence to appoint his successor.

Mr. FINDLAY. But we are appropriating here for a specific individual.

Mr. MILLS. The House can appoint another person whenever it pleases. In contemplation of law Congress is always in session, and, if it became necessary, by reason of the death of a subordinate, to call Congress together, the power is in the President to bring us here. It is too late now to make the point that the House abdicates its power of election by designating in this manner an officer whom it wants retained, and I hope the point of order will be overruled.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it will be conceded, I think, that the resolution of a former House does not bind this House. I think it will be conceded also that this House has the right to select any man for any place in its service, but by its rule it has prohibited itself from doing it in this way. No doubt this House has a right to appoint all the employés of the House instead of delegating that power to the Doorkeeper, but it can not do it on an appropriation bill. There is now no law requiring the appointment of these men. The argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that this is a mere suggestion that these men shall be retained is not, I think, sound.

If this bill passes with these clauses as reported, this money can go to nobody but the men here named. It is therefore a change of law.

I am making no argument against the appointment of Mr. Chancey or Mr. Coombs or anybody else; but under our rules as we adopted them (and I voted against them) this is certainly a violation of the rules, because involving a change of the law.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask the attention of the Chair to a single proposition. It seems to me that we are assuming a state of facts that does not exist. Mr. Chancey is now on the Doorkeeper's roll; but it would not vitiate this proposition if every other officer of the House who now holds an appointment were named, on the assumption that those men would hold during the next fiscal year. Mr. Chancey, under appointment by the Doorkeeper, is now on the list just as much as any other officer of the House, and to assume that his position is different from that of any other subordinate in the House is an assumption unwarranted by the facts.

Mr. LONG. It is to be remembered that this clause of the pending bill does not undertake to appoint John T. Chancey or George A. Bacon at all; it simply provides means for their payment.

Several MEMBERS. That is it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Can the money be paid to anybody else?

Mr. LONG. No matter whether it can be or not, the provision of the bill does not appoint the persons named and does not compel the Doorkeeper to appoint either of them. It simply provides money for their payment if they be appointed. It does not control the discretion of the Doorkeeper in the appointment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me call the attention of the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this discussion has continued for a reasonable time and is prepared to make his ruling.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Before the Chair announces his decision I want it distinctly understood so that I may not be misrepresented, that I am not fighting at all these men who are here named. So far as concerns Mr. Chancey, I am ready to vote now for a resolution to continue him just where he has been. I have no desire to put him out or anybody else who is here named. My object is to prevent a breach of the rules of the House by any of its committees and to stop a bad practice.

I call attention again to the fact that my point embraces the name of "George J. Bacon," in line 274; also the clause in lines 294 and 295 "for the two laborers now in charge of the water-closet;" the clause in lines 298 and 299, "for the two cloak-room men longest in the service of the House;" the name of "John T. Chancey," in line 302; the name of "C. W. Coombs," in line 304, and "A. H. Pickens and H. T. Lyle," in line 314.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly content not to argue this question, because I conceive the Chair decided it yesterday when he held that in the absence of other law the appropriation for the present year is "law" within the meaning of the rule. Each one of these employés, the provision for whom the gentleman from West Virginia seeks to strike out on a point of order, is designated in the appropriation act for the present year just as in this bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I will not detain the committee more than a few moments. If the insertion of the name is new legislation, it has no place on this appropriation bill. If it is not new legislation, then these men are subordinates either of the Clerk or the Doorkeeper, and under the rules of the House we have given to those officers, until we change the rules, the appointment of their own subordinates.

As to the resolution to which my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] refers, which appointed these men, why, sir, that was a resolution appointing them for that Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Oh, no; it says "until otherwise ordered."

Mr. MORRISON. "Until otherwise ordered" by that House, that Congress; it can have no effect beyond that, or on any other Congress.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No House can bind a future House.

Mr. MORRISON. Of course not; so far as I know nobody ever thought so but my colleague. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. MORRISON] why was the provision inserted in our rules that those rules should continue in force for successive Congresses until changed?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Because some past Congress did not know any better.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then the present Congress "did not know any better," because the present Committee on Rules reported the rules to this House with that clause included and this House so adopted them.

Mr. MORRISON. Well, an experienced interpreter of our rules—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]—with others of like experience, has said that that clause was put in because the rules and practices of the House were the best exposition of the common law governing legislative assemblies.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, that provision is in the rules.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly, and I have stated why; but any House can undo what a former House did in the matter of making or unmaking rules.

Now, a little about the history of this transaction. No one thinks of Mr. Chancey, Republican, going off the rolls. How did he get on? As a matter of courtesy, when the Democrats got possession of the House they thought the opposite party should have an officer who could attend them in their caucuses and conventions. Then by some sort of misfortune in the Forty-seventh Congress things were turned around, and with equal courtesy my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] proposed that Mr. George A. Bacon, Democrat, should go on the rolls. Then Mr. Chancey was kept on by the Doorkeeper.

Now, my two colleagues, Messrs. CANNON and TOWNSHEND, on the Committee on Appropriations, and by that sort of amicable arrangement—I do not wish to say by any improper arrangement, because my friend from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] would get angry, but these two men put on by courtesy, one at one time and one at another, by convenient arrangement of this Appropriations Committee, have managed, both of them, to keep on the rolls contrary to the original purpose, which provided we should have one only, and he should belong to the minority side of the House.

That is the way we got these two assistant doorkeepers. The arrangement increased the officers of the House and added one assistant doorkeeper, because the Committee on Appropriations took upon itself the continuance of both.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the resolution of the former House has no binding force on this, and I repeat, if inserting this name is new legislation it can not go on the appropriation bill. If the persons named are officers of the House they belong either to the Clerk or the Doorkeeper's department. Both are of course under the Doorkeeper, to be appointed by him. Then, of course, the rule—I forget the number, it has already been read, and provides that the Doorkeeper shall appoint his own subordinates and the Clerk shall appoint his own subordinates—forbids while the rule is in force any such change or appointment as is proposed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and he desires to say in the beginning he sees a difference between the designation of an officer in a former bill and the creation of an office itself and fixing the salary therefor. The Constitution gives to each House the right to select its own officers. The rules of this House prescribe the mode of choosing its officers here designated, to wit: The Doorkeeper shall designate his subordinates. It is done by virtue of the Constitution and has the full force of law, which will be disputed nowhere. Therefore the Chair thinks it is not in order to attempt on an appropriation bill to change a rule of this House.

There is a way of changing the rule, and only one, which is in order. Rule XVIII prescribes:

> No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, preference being given on the first Monday to individals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

The Chair thinks it is not in order in this way to change a rule of the House. It has been shown that Mr. Bacon, for instance, might be designated in this way by virtue of the following resolution adopted by the House in 1881:

> Resolved, That George A. Bacon be authorized to act as a second assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, and to receive the same pay as the present assistant doorkeeper of the House, until further orders.

The Chair can not understand that in any other way than as it related to that House. It can not be believed the purpose of the resolution was to be perpetuated in other Houses in violation of the Constitution, providing each House should appoint its own officers.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order on all portions of the pending paragraph against which it was made in designation of names of those who are to hold the positions for which appropriations are made.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is a marked difference and great distinction between the names alluded to. The name of Mr. Coombs is inserted.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Coombs is in the bill.

Mr. BURNES. His name is inserted in this bill, and it is also in the current appropriation bill for this year pursuant to a resolution adopted by the House several years ago, during the Forty-seventh Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that his ruling has been based on the information of all these facts and the right of the House to select its own officers by virtue of the Constitution; and under that power, having adopted a rule that subordinates of the Doorkeeper shall be designated by the Doorkeeper, it is not in order to insert it in an appropriation bill. The Chair has decided, and directs the Clerk to proceed.

Mr. BURNES. I must call the attention of the Chair for one moment to a fact I think which he has overlooked. If he will pardon me, I wish to call attention to the fact that Mr. Coombs is not an officer or appointee under the Doorkeeper. He is a messenger of this House, and the Doorkeeper has no control over him. He is not an officer the Doorkeeper has the right to appoint. He is appointed by the House; he is a messenger of the House, and does not come under the control of the Doorkeeper at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels it is his duty, having decided the point of order, to direct the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. COBB. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. COBB. I will do so with pleasure. I have been trying to do so for an hour. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Many gentlemen have been desirous of offering amendments, and the Chair could not recognize all at once.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 273, "first assistant doorkeeper, $2,000."

Mr. COBB. I desire to say that I presume the amendment will not be objected to, because this has evidently been left out of the bill by mistake.

Mr. MORRISON. I believe we can not go back. That has been passed.

Mr. COBB. We have had for seventeen years an assistant doorkeeper, and for the last ten years, to my knowledge, he has performed his duties well. Why it has been left out of the present bill I can not conceive, except possibly by a mistake, and I would like to hear some gentleman controlling the appropriation bill explain whether or not this is true.

But before I sit down I may be permitted to say that I have given this question all the legal research that I have been able to bestow upon it in the brief time at my disposal; and in my judgment this is fixed by a general law, a law which I find in the Revised Statutes, according to the best information I have been able to gather upon the subject this morning; and that is the present law of this House and of the land. That law provides for an assistant doorkeeper and fixes his salary; and whether that be so or not I offer this by way of amendment, so as to comply with the action of the House for seventeen years past. If it has been left out by the Appropriations Committee through a mistake or from any other cause, I am satisfied they will remedy the defect when their attention is called to it; for I insist it should be put upon the bill. It must have been omitted by an error. The present assistant doorkeeper should remain. Mr. Bacon is provided for as assistant doorkeeper by name.

Mr. MORRISON. The name has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. COBB. But it has been provided for two or three sessions of Congress heretofore; and the assistant doorkeeper, who is provided by law, is not appropriated for in the bill at all.

Mr. FINDLAY. Whom do you want to provide for?

Mr. COBB. The assistant doorkeeper of the House.

Mr. FINDLAY. But who is he?

Mr. COBB. Mr. Warder or anybody else the Doorkeeper wishes to appoint.

Mr. FINDLAY. I only wanted to know the issue.

Mr. COBB. That is the issue, the assistant doorkeeper. The Doorkeeper for seventeen years, by the action of the House, has had the service of this officer. Now, I want to know why he should not be continued. I am informed by the Doorkeeper himself that he is an important assistant to him, that he could not get along well without him. He has stated that it would be almost impossible to do the duties of his office as well as they ought to be done without the assistance of this officer.

Now, I insist that we ought not cut down the force which we have had for so many years, especially in view of the fact that the business of the House is not diminishing. It is increasing largely. There are many more members here than there were seventeen years ago, and if this officer was needed at that time I can see no reason why he will not be much more needed during the coming year. In justice to itself and to him the House should not impose upon an officer double duty not heretofore required to be performed, when his duties are larger and more arduous than they have been before. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will give some reason at least for this omission from the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Have we not passed from this section of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order was raised upon it and the reading of the next section was suspended until the question of order was decided.

Mr. MORRISON. I only wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that we have now provided for an assistant doorkeeper by reason of the Chair sustaining the point of order. Of course no one can anticipate now whether that will be Mr. Warder or Mr. Bacon or somebody else. That is a matter within the control of the Doorkeeper under the present rules.

I have already alluded to the history of the proceedings by which we came to have an extra or two assistant doorkeepers, first one was given to the Republican and then one to the Democratic side, and afterward the Committee on Appropriations for economy continued both of them.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him. The bill provides for an assistant doorkeeper to be employed in the document-room only.

Mr. MORRISON. The words "to be employed in the document-room" went out with the name of Mr. Bacon, and he is, or whoever occupies the place will be, an assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. COBB. Well, he is now performing the duties of the Doorkeeper in the document-room only.

Mr. MORRISON. Under the operation of the bill he will perform the duty of assistant doorkeeper, whoever may be appointed.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that provision was retained in the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. That was included in the point of order which was made upon the name and went out with it.

Mr. COBB. The law provides that there shall be an assistant doorkeeper, and the bill provides for an assistant doorkeeper for the document-room.

Now he could not be compelled, I take it, under the law to do general duty as a doorkeeper; whereas the assistant doorkeeper that has been heretofore provided for by law has had general duties to perform and has performed them. I understand the Doorkeeper to say—I know he says—he can not get along without him.

Mr. RANDALL. He never made any remonstrance against the change to the committee.

Mr. COBB. I presume for the reason that he did not know anything about it.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, he did.

Mr. COBB. I know only what he stated to me, that he could not get along without him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. Has an amendment been proposed to this section?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 373, insert "first assistant doorkeeper, $2,000."

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time. The amendment has been proposed and debated.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the question was whether we should go back.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no question about going back.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood that was the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the facts as the gentleman from Illinois does, or he might rule as the gentleman suggests. The recollection of the Chair is that while the paragraph was being read the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] or some other member wanted to interrupt the reading to offer an amendment, and the Chair suggested the reading of the paragraph should be concluded. When that was done a question of order was raised. That was decided. Then the gentleman from Indiana was recognized to offer an amendment, which has been debated, and it is now too late to raise a question of order on it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to oppose the amendment. This amendment is simply to create a new office.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, it is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The amendment provides for a "first assistant doorkeeper." We have an assistant doorkeeper in the bill. The name of George A. Bacon has been stricken out. If the bill passes we shall have a Doorkeeper and an assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. GALLINGER. As we have always had.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now there is a proposition to create another assistant doorkeeper. It is simply a proposition to create a new office.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the gentleman will permit me, I was laboring under a misapprehension as to his statement. We have had a Doorkeeper and an assistant doorkeeper for seventeen years; and this proposition of the committee is to dispense with one office, which I think we can not do.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not advised how long we have had this position of assistant doorkeeper filled by name in the bill. I think it was a very recent innovation; that it does not go back seventeen years, as suggested.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will state that the appropriation for the current year is as follows:

Assistant doorkeeper, $2,000; second assistant doorkeeper (George A. Bacon), to be employed in the document-room, $2,000.

Now this bill drops out the words "assistant doorkeeper, two thousand dollars," but leaves in "assistant doorkeeper"—not two assistant doorkeepers—George A. Bacon. The name of George A. Bacon goes out on the point of order; so that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] makes no more assistant doorkeepers than in 1886.

Mr. MORRISON. And if not adopted the bill makes one less.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to their being all struck out.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we may get along with one less. We might try it, at least for the short session.

Mr. MATSON. The law for many years has provided for an assistant doorkeeper. That office is now filled by Mr. Warder. A resolution was adopted four or five years ago providing for a second assistant doorkeeper. That has been incorporated in appropriation bills and may be called a law to that extent. The law was read a moment ago by the Chair. The law in relation to Mr. Bacon was in relation to a second assistant doorkeeper; and this bill provides an appropriation for the assistant doorkeeper, but leaves out the second assistant. So it will devolve upon Mr. Donelson, the Doorkeeper, or whoever may occupy that office, to decide whether he will turn out one man or another. The second assistant doorkeeper, Mr. Bacon, is not provided for in the bill. The assistant doorkeeper is, and that place is filled now not by Mr. Bacon but by Mr. Warder.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is not the object of this to legislate Mr. Warder out of office? Is it not an attempt on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to do that by indirection which the House failed to do directly? I ask the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether that is not the prime object of this change in the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no, sir; it was very manifest, and has been for a number of years, that the office held by Mr. Bacon was filled as an act of courtesy to certain gentlemen on this floor. Every gentleman knows that but one assistant doorkeeper is necessary, and that one is provided for by the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. When did you discover that? Never until this trouble came up about Mr. Warder. That was the first time you or any one else discovered it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the gentleman correct about that? Is there not a change in the rules of the House? Was it not manifest to every gentleman that provisions in regard to individual names would necessarily be omitted, so that the bill would come right back to its former condition?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me remind the gentleman that the resolution appointing Mr. Bacon only appointed him second assistant doorkeeper, and you propose here to promote him to the position of first assistant and turn out the present first assistant.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all. We simply dispense with the office.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Would not the natural construction of this provision be that Mr. Warder was to be legislated out of office?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that my young friend from Kentucky or any other member on this floor can, consistently with the duty that he owes to this Government, indulge in mere personal considerations in legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the bill does.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly we ought to be able to rise above that. This bill provides for a Doorkeeper and an assistant doorkeeper, and it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that no more doorkeepers were necessary.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You never thought that until this session when we have got Democratic employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that the Committee on Appropriations in leaving out the provision for the pay of an officer who has served this House for seventeen or perhaps twenty years past were actuated only by motives of economy. I do not suppose that they meant to make an assault upon any person. I assume that Mr. Warder was not considered in connection with the matter. But I want to call the attention of the House to a provision which it is somewhat surprising to find in this bill if the object of leaving out the first assistant doorkeeper of the House was merely economy. At line 80 of this bill I find a provision of this kind in relation to the Senate:

Assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; acting assistant doorkeeper, $2,592.

Here are two officers of the same kind, whose duties, as I understand it, are the same as those performed by Mr. Warder here provided for in the Senate at an increased cost in each case of more than $500.

It seems to me a little strange, therefore, that if the sole object was economy the effort should have been made by omitting this officer of the House. What are the duties of the assistant doorkeeper of the House now discharged by Mr. Warder and discharged by other persons for the past fifteen or twenty years? The assistant doorkeeper has charge, in the first place, of the floor of the House; he has charge of the galleries; he has charge of all the pages here; he has charge of the messengers of the committee-rooms, and in the absence of the Doorkeeper he serves in his place and performs his duties. It seems to me, therefore, if this be a correct statement of the case—and I am informed it is—that this office is a necessary one, an office which ought not to be dispensed with upon the mere ground of economy unless the services are really unnecessary. I believe that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. COBB] is one that ought to commend itself to the good judgment of the House. I repeat what has been said by some other gentlemen here, that it is a little strange that the Committee on Appropriations should attempt to strike down this office as a measure of economy. The office has been in existence fifteen or twenty years, and it is singular that if it is so unnecessary that fact should not have been discovered before this time. Although I acquit the Appropriations Committee of having an intention to make an attack upon anybody, yet it is clear that this proposition should not come here at a time when the man holding this particular office was lying under grave charges before this House. This bill was reported to the House at a time when he was on trial here, and it does look like an effort to accomplish by indirection the dismissal of Mr. Warder from the service of the House.

There have been, as my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] very well knows, two assistant doorkeepers for a good many years past. The point of order which was ruled upon by the chairman this morning, striking out the name of Mr. Bacon, goes only to the name of the officer, but the duties of that assistant are by the bill confined to service in the document-room, whereas the duties of the assistant doorkeeper who acts in the House are such as I have described. I hope the amendment of my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not know what were the motives of the committee in their action on this subject. Whether they were governed by motives of economy or by motives of extravagance does not matter the toss of a penny, so far as the present question is concerned. The committee has reported in favor of dropping one of these men, which will leave us with one assistant doorkeeper instead of two.

If any justification is needed for what they have done upon the assumption that they were influenced in their action by personal motives, we can certainly find such justification in this Warder case. This House has passed a resolution convicting one of its officers of a "gross impropriety," yet it proposes to appropriate money to pay that man for further continuance in office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it do that?

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it say this man?

Mr. FINDLAY. Oh, if you are making such a point as that——

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the way the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] construes it.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Warder is in this position: The contention on the part of his friends is that the object of the committee is to rule him out; and I take it for granted they know the object as well as the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly they do.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is the way they construe it; and therefore the converse is true, that the object of gentlemen opposing this proposition is to keep him in.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is an assumption.

Mr. FINDLAY. In what position does this House put itself on this question? By a solemn resolution it has found Mr. Warder guilty not merely of an impropriety but of a "gross impropriety." What is a "gross impropriety?" What is the line between a "gross impropriety" and a crime? It seems to me we sometimes do not appreciate the force of language. I recollect the case of the Frenchman who did not understand altogether the force of our language and who when he heard of his mother's death said he was "very much dissatisfied." [Laughter.] This House finds one of its officers guilty of a "gross impropriety," yet it deliberately proposes in this appropriation act to continue that man in office by the payment of his salary. I say, without looking into the motives of this Appropriations Committee——

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Is it not true that if this appropriation be made for the continuance of this office it will be competent for the Doorkeeper to appoint whomsoever he pleases at any time?

Mr. FINDLAY. I should say in answer to that question that when the Doorkeeper, having had notice even from the imperfect resolution of this House that this party was guilty of a "gross impropriety," has not turned him out, I would not trust him to turn him out in the future.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I hope he never will turn him out for that matter.

Mr. FINDLAY. It was his duty to turn him out when this House had put its seal of condemnation upon him; and he would doubtless have done so if the House had not involved itself in a contradiction by saying in the latter part of the resolution that it had not found the case of sufficient magnitude to justify dismissal. In other words, the House found this man was guilty of "gross impropriety," but he was good enough for the House! [Laughter.] That, I must say, puts the House in very much the same category before the country. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, it will be conceded that the proposed dropping of the assistant doorkeeper of the House is not based upon the ground of economy. It will not be contended, I think, that this has been the motive of the Committee on Appropriations in omitting the provision for the continuance of this office. I find upon examination of the law that this office was created in 1867—nineteen years ago. Congress after Congress has come and gone since that period; yet at no time has any man raised his voice against the continuance of this office. Five years ago provision was adopted for a second assistant doorkeeper; and since that time there have been two of these officers.

I submit, then, it can not be successfully maintained that this proposition to get rid of the assistant doorkeeper and impose the duties upon the second assistant doorkeeper is based upon the ground of economy. Now, if this matter is to be settled upon the other question, whether Mr. Warder is a suitable man for this place, I want the House to understand what it is voting upon. After the House has refused, when the question was directly presented, to dismiss this man from office, I want to know whether we are going to brand him in this way by legislating him out of office indirectly when the House declined to do it directly. Gentlemen may say what they please on this question; that is not the proper way for a fair, courageous man to act. A man who has the courage to stand up to his convictions of right does not undertake in this cowardly way to strike a man down. When I want to fight a man I look him in the white of the eye; I face him like a man; I do not sneak around and undertake to attack him in an indirect way.

Now let the House vote upon this question understandingly. If any one argues this matter upon the ground of economy, I want to remind him that this bill provides a much larger force for the Doorkeeper's department in the Senate than for that of the House, appropriating for the former nearly $10,000 and for the latter a little over $5,000.

That shows what we thought of the necessity of these doorkeepers. Tell me a committee would come and report a bill giving four to the Senate of seventy-five members, and then get up and look a man in the white of his eyes and say three are not necessary with three hundred and twenty-five members! If this House wants a vote on this question whether Warder should be turned out, why did you not do it like men? Why do you want to throw out an honorable citizen when the House refused to do it in a direct manner? I say I do not believe the House will do it. I believe they will restore this man. The character of a man is worth maintaining. There is no individual so humble, so low, so degraded I would agree upon insufficient evidence to brand as a scoundrel or thief. Nor, Mr. Chairman, will this House do it, in my judgment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two. The gentleman from Indiana who has taken his seat has spoken of an office of second assistant doorkeeper being created in 1881. I am not aware that Congress has ever created the office of second assistant doorkeeper. When the Republicans succeeded in obtaining a majority in the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, at the request of some of my friends on the other side I offered a resolution here which authorized George A. Bacon to act as a second assistant doorkeeper. It was done simply as a courtesy extended to the Democratic side of the House for having extended a similar courtesy during the previous Congress to this side of the House in giving to it an officer who served here.

Mr. RANDALL. Allow me to say the concession was with a view to have an assistant doorkeeper of the same political sentiment with the minority of the House for the purpose of attending to that minority when assembled in caucus.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Certainly, but there was no intention to create any office particularly, but simply to extend an act of courtesy to the opposition on this floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. It made two doorkeepers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It did temporarily, and he was put in the document-room, which answered every purpose.

A MEMBER. And this bill puts him in there now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Yes, this bill puts George A. Bacon there now, and it is done under the resolution passed in the Forty-seventh Congress. I am not aware there has been any additional officer created other than is provided in the statutes. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote. We should pass from the consideration of this matter now.

The question recurred on Mr. COBB'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 59.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. No quorum.

Mr. COBB. I desire now to move to strike out, in line 274, "to be employed in the document-room."

Mr. HOWARD. No quorum voted on the last division. [Cries of "Too late!"] I rise to a point of order. As soon as the vote was taken I made the point that there was no quorum. [Cries of "Too late!"] No; it was not too late; I made the point as soon as the vote was announced.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The Chair understood the gentleman to make the point after the vote had been announced and after the result had been announced.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In justice to the gentleman I wish to state I heard him make the point in time. His voice is not strong, but he made the point, advancing down the main aisle all the time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I also heard him make the point of no quorum in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the gentleman himself that he made the point in time is satisfactory to the Chair. His statement is sufficient that he did demand a quorum.

Mr. COBB and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 91.

Mr. HOWARD. I withdraw the demand for a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COBB. I now insist on my amendment, Mr. Chairman, which has been read.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let it be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 274 and 275, strike out the words "to be employed in the document-room."

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that, if it has not been stricken out already on the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I now move to strike out, in lines 320 and 321, the words "eighteen," and also "four hundred and sixteen and fifty cents;" so that it will read, "in all $100,000," and insert:

And the number of employés shall be reduced so as to come within this appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a few words only on this proposed amendment. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the laudable and patriotic appeals of the gentleman from Indiana in charge of this bill to the House to stay the progressive increase in the expenditures of the Government, which he has shown us has been going on at a rate of increase three or four times faster than the increase of population and two or three times as fast as the increase of wealth in this country. There must be a stop to this some time. It can not continue always at this rapid rate of increase, for we will have reached that condition against which Mr. Jefferson warned the country in 1801; and I will read in this connection a single paragraph from his first annual message, for in my judgment no statesman of this country has surpassed Jefferson in the clear grasp of fundamental principles of government. He said:

Considering the general tendency to multiply offices and dependencies, and to increase expense to the ultimate term of burthen which the citizen can bear, it behooves us to avail ourselves of every occasion which presents itself for taking off the surcharge; that it never may be seen here that after leaving to labor the smallest portion of its earnings on which it can subsist, government shall itself consume the whole residue of what it was instituted to guard.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment wiser words were never uttered than these. We have only to go far enough—and it is not very far, either—with the increase in the expenditures of government to consume all of the net earnings of the people. In France a very large per cent. is taken, and but a small per cent. of what they create is left to the people. We are fast reaching that stage ourselves.

Bear in mind that with a population of 60,000,000 of people, say twelve millions of families, the gross earnings in the most favorable years do not exceed $1,000 per family. Now, how much are we appropriating by this bill for the service of this House alone, and how does the work done here compare with the work of the world or of this country which the same number of people must do?

I believe the Doorkeeper of the House, if required to perform the service of the House with a less force, as suggested by the amendment offered, can do it, and do it as well as it is done now. Where, Mr. Chairman, then, is there a better place for us to begin to lighten the load of government expenditures than right here in the House?

But, sir, I wish to add to what Mr. Jefferson said a few pertinent words from a distinguished economist of this country, Mr. Henry C. Carey:

Every measure that tends to lessen the expenditures of government tends to increase the power of production and to increase the proportion of the product that may be claimed by the laborer.

Second. Every measure tending to increase the demands of government tends to diminish the power of production and to diminish the proportion of the product that may be claimed by the laborer.

Therefore, necessarily, as the cost of government increases the power of production diminishes in every country, and the proportion left to the laborer is necessarily less.

The only fund for paying the cost of government is its annual produce; and the annual production of this country this year will not reach $1,000 per family, and probably not $800 per family. Yet the population must be supported, the Government carried on, and all out of this annual production, and if there be any net earnings left after these expenditures are met, they may be distributed. It is plain then to see that it is only neccessary to sufficiently increase the cost of government to absorb all the net earnings of the whole people. Indeed, if the cost of government in this country were doubled there would be little left besides a bare subsistence for the great mass of the people.

Since I have been in Congress I have seen a pressure that never lets up for the creation of new and more offices. Men are clamorous on all hands for new offices, for more places, and more expenditure from the public Treasury—places to be filled by friends or political workers; and as soon as one is appointed to a place then a pressure begins for an increase of the pay of those in office, the struggle being always for less work and more pay.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as being new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit it is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is not too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question has been discussed.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I submit I could not get the floor after the gentleman had taken it to state his amendment and proceeded to discuss it. He simply got up, read his amendment, and commenced speaking to the amendment, and I had no opportunity to interpose the point of order.

Beyond doubt it is new legislation, and I think the Chair will so hold. Does the gentleman doubt that it is new legislation; that it is an illegal proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. Waiving for the present the question of the time when the point of order is made, the Chair understands the amendment simply to change the sum. How is that new legislation?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It not only changes the sum, but it requires a limitation in the number of appointments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I submit there has been no discussion. Discussion means a controversy. If a gentleman gets up and propounds a proposition and makes his speech on it, it is not then too late to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the time to make a point of order is when the amendment is read, before it is dicussed on its merits by either the propounder or any one else. The Chair would have recognized the point of order if it had been made when the amendment was read even if it had the effect of taking the gentleman offering it off the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I offer as an amendment to the amendment what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "appropriation," in the amendment the following:
"And additional employés of the House shall not be authorized by resolution payable from the contingent fund of the House or other appropriation."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I make the point of order on that amendment, so as to stop discussson, that it is new legislation. The matter has been so thoroughly discussed that I do not desire to consume time upon the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] offered an amendment which was clearly subject to the point of order, but the point of order was not made in time. As I understand the amendment, after appropriating to these officers he cuts down $18,000 and proposes to force the Doorkeeper to decrease the number of officers by that much. Now, I am in harmony with that proposition, but I want it to mean something, and if it does mean anything I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, if he will give me his attention——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will; I always listen to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. It takes my amendment to give effect to its meaning. Because if his amendment were adopted, then in the next session of Congress or in the next fiscal year we could come and by a mere resolution increase, by the amounts they had been reduced, the number of these employés payable from the contingent fund. And if my friend from Ohio is hungering and thirsting for economy, if that side of the House is hungering and thirsting for economy, instead of this being mere dress-parade for use in the next campaign, let them accept my amendment, and take it out of the power of the House to increase the force.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the House will accept it.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have had two entire days of general debate on this bill. We are making no progress. The proposition is well understood and I hope it will be submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is now on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 311 strike out "three" and insert "twelve;" so that it will read:
"Twelve folders during the session, at $67 per month each."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAULBEE. On the 3d of April, 1884, a resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] and adopted by the House giving the Doorkeeper twelve additional folders. I find by examining the record and comparing that session with this that the speeches to be folded this session are slightly in excess of the speeches folded in that session. In that session there were 2,325,000 speeches folded, mostly on the tariff question. It must be apparent to every member of this House that if the tariff bill is to be considered there will be considerable discussion, which will necessarily increase that particular kind of work to be done during this session.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not my friend from Kentucky laboring under a mistake as to this? The appropriation does not affect the employés of the present session but those of the next. Those employed now under the resolution of the House will be paid out of the contingent fund. This has nothing to do with them. And the number is reduced for the reason that the number required in the short session is immensely less than those required during the long session.

Mr. TAULBEE. That may be true; and if it would be in order I desire to change my amendment so as to authorize the employment of these folders during the present session.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are employed now.

Mr. TAULBEE. They are not. There is a lack in that particular department; and while I am an economist, or think I am, I do not consider it good economy that we should curtail the force of this House, or that we should refuse to furnish sufficient men to perform the work of this House; this being work which pertains not to the business of the Doorkeeper, but to the business of every member of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. They can be employed under resolution if necessary. They are not necessary yet.

Mr. TAULBEE. I insist they are, and that that particular branch of the service of this House is now behind in its work. I am informed that there are sixty-five thousand books waiting to be folded in addition to the numerous books which have already been folded and placed to the credit of members of this House. That part of the Doorkeeper's work is far behind. In support of that statement I submit a table to be printed with my remarks.

Books not folded on hand:
Geological Survey, 1883-'84	7,000
Secretary of Treasury, volumes 1 and 2	4,000
Interstate Commerce	2,000
Fish Bulletin, volume 5	2,500
Agricultural Report, 1884	25,000
Ordnance of War Ships	7,000
Astronomical Observations	1,000
Senate Election Cases	2,000
Interior Department, volume 5	2,000
Interior Department, volume 4	3,000
Total books on hand	55,500
Duncan Eulogies	9,500
	65,000

In addition to this, the Agricultural Reports of 1885, 200,000, will be in the last of the month or 1st of July; also, the second annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, 35,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say to my friend from Kentucky that we have appropriated up to the estimates. The Doorkeeper has made no complaint to us on the subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am informed that the force now employed in the folding-room is not sufficient to do the work, and I have experienced some trouble myself with reference to the books for my district and other folding which I have desired to have done. I think the Doorkeeper of the House will sustain me in the statement that the force in that branch of the service is insufficient for the work to be done, and I think it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the emergency.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and I call for a vote.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman rises to oppose this amendment, I will remind the Chair that debate upon it is exhausted.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I move to strike out the last word. I am inclined to think that it is a fact that the actual number of folders employed in the folding-room is insufficient for the work that they are called upon to do in this busy session. But the difficulty is not, I think, in the want of a sufficient number of folders.

There are borne on the rolls of the House thirty-four folders. Of these only twenty-one are actually employed in the folding-room. The remainder are assigned to other positions outside of and apart from those duties. For instance, one folder is acting as a page in the House; seven are detailed as messengers and are employed in that service; three are employed in the document-room, and one is in the office of the House folding-room, making twelve in all who are on the folder's roll but are not actually employed doing duty as folders. I think, therefore, that the difficulty complained of can be very effectually remedied by having these men employed in the line of duty indicated by their position on the roll. These facts have come to my attention as one of the Committee on Accounts, which has had under consideration the question of the number of the employés of the House and the duties which they perform. I think that this difficulty of an insufficient force in the folding-room does not arise at all from there being an insufficient number of folders upon the roll, but from the causes I have stated. I think that the employés of the House should be engaged in the particular duties to which their places on the rolls of the House assign them, because otherwise great confusion arises in the minds of members, and therefore in the mind of the House collectively, as to whether there is a sufficient number of employés in any particular department. It seems to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] is entirely unnecessary. I think that the folders already borne upon the roll are sufficient to perform all the work, and that by calling in those folders who are now detailed to other duties the force in the folding-room will be increased to quite as great an extent as it would be by adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to state that the statistics will bear me out in saying that the employés of this kind this session of Congress are no greater than they were at former sessions. As to the duties performed by those persons whose legitimate duty would be in the folding-room, I am unacquainted with the facts. I simply know that the work in that particular department is behind, and that it is very important that it should be brought up. However, since ascertaining from the gentleman in charge of this bill that the amount appropriated here will not be available until the next meeting of Congress, I withdraw my amendment, hoping to bring about in a different way the result I have in view.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Postmaster: For Postmaster, $2,500; first assistant postmaster, $2,000; ten messengers, including messenger to superintend transportation of mails, at $1,200 each; seven messengers at $100 per month each, during the session; and one laborer at $720; in all, $20,020.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph, in accordance with the rulings of the Chair on yesterday, that it changes the law and the contract with at least three appointees under the House Postmaster. There are three messengers who were appointed for this Congress at a salary of $800 per session, and others were employed at the rate of $100 per month. This paragraph changes the places of seven at $100 per month, thereby depriving the three who were appointed at $800 per session of $500 each for the next session of Congress. Therefore the paragraph is a change of the law and of the contract. I understand that it was really the purpose of the committee to have changed that paragraph to make it conform to the former appropriation bill and to the law in force at the time when these messengers were appointed. Therefore if the point of order be sustained I ask that the paragraph be changed in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. There can be no point of order here. These are not officers created by law. The gentleman can not show a scrap of law relating to one of them.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Unless there has been a change in the law of 1878, these messengers are all entitled to a little over a thousand dollars a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is inoperative; that is a mere matter of appropriation.

Mr. DUNN. I know it has been rendered inoperative by appropriation bills merely.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the gentleman show the statute. But in any event we have a right to appropriate less than the amount stated in the law, if there is a law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to make the point that this paragraph fails to appropriate the amount of the salary provided by law?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir; in at least three cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Arkansas if it is not in the power of the House to fail to appropriate the amount of a salary fixed by law?

Mr. DUNN. If I correctly understand the ruling of the Chair yesterday, it was that no such change could be made on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That we were bound to appropriate clear up to the limit of the salary fixed by law?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly. If I understand the ruling of the Chair yesterday, that was the effect of it. If I am mistaken in that, then I shall offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). Of course the present occupant of the Chair would have to decide according to his own view.

Mr. DUNN. I understood the ruling of the Chair yesterday to be that the Appropriations Committee can only report the salaries as provided by the law of the date of the appointment. These employés were appointed for this Congress under laws then in force. They are to-day drawing their pay at the rate of $800 per session. Now I do not know whether we are one day to deny the Committee on Appropriations the power to change the existing laws and the next day allow them to do so. Yesterday the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole held that the Committee on Appropriations could not do this thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not consume time on such a point of order as this. Why does he not submit his amendment at once?

Mr. DUNN. I have no objection to submitting an amendment; but I supposed that the short road to the object was by a point of order, as one point of order of this character was sustained yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will have to reach the objection by an amendment.

Mr. DUNN. I do not wish to consume time, and will withdraw the point of order. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 326 strike out the word "seven" and insert "three messengers during the session at $800 each; four;" and in lieu of the sum proposed in lines 328 and 329 insert "$21,220."

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say that this amendment makes the bill conform to the law of the present year. It is for the Committee of the Whole to determine whether the bill shall be so amended.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say further that the Committee on Appropriations decided, I believe, that these salaries as provided by the law of the present year should be inserted in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Official Reporters: For one chief Official Reporter (John J. McElhone), $6,000; and four Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, at $5,000 each; messenger to the Official Reporters, $1,000; in all, $27,000. And wherever the words "during the session" occur in the foregoing they shall be construed to mean four months, or one hundred and twenty-one days.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. On this paragraph I make a point of order, similar to that which I have been making all along, that the name "John J. McElhone" must be struck out.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will withdraw the point of order. Mr. McElhone has been in the service of this House for thirty-six years——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And can no doubt stay in it as long as he wishes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, namely.

Mr. PRICE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 341 insert the following:
"Provided that no part of said sum shall be expended in connection with the conduct of funerals."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I did not hear the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the Chair to hold that there is no power in this House to prohibit any unnecessary expenditure of the money we appropriate? These expenses of funerals are not provided for by law. They depend entirely upon resolutions adopted from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Chair has ruled on the question. The Chair holds that a proposition of this kind is a legislative provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $30,000.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out "thirty" and inserting "ten," so as to make the appropriation in this clause $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] desire to address the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although this subject has been acted on by the Committee on Appropriations, yet it seems to me as the next session will be a short one, this appropriation might properly be reduced to $20,000; and on my own account, not as representing the views of the committee, I move that amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will inquire of the gentleman whether the committee had no sort of information that induced them to put in the amount named in the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; we had all the information that could be gathered; but of course it is impossible to tell in advance what number of inquiries by special and select committees will be entered upon. The next session being a short one, it seems to me it would be safe to reduce this appropriation to $20,000.

Mr. PRICE. When I offered this amendment the Chair made a suggestion to me, as I apprehend, for I saw him looking this way; but I failed to catch a single word that he said. The Chair has since been addressed by two gentlemen on the other side, and I have been unable to understand anything they have uttered. Therefore I do not know how this matter now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take pleasure in recognizing the gentleman from Wisconsin if he desires to address the committee.

Mr. PRICE. I offered my amendment in good faith and desired it to be voted on. If it is to be discussed by gentlemen on the other side I have a right to know what they say, and I have not yet heard a word.

Mr. HOLMAN. I merely suggested on my own responsibility, not as speaking for the Committee on Appropriations, that while the estimate of the sum which will be required is $30,000, that is, of course, purely speculative; and as the next session will be the short session, I thought it entirely safe to reduce this appropriation by making it $20,000 instead of $30,000.

Mr. PRICE. I accept the gentleman's proposition for $20,000, and withdraw my amendment proposing $10,000.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I offer as an amendment to the amendment, after the word "dollars," the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in paying the burial expenses of any Senator or Representative or employé of either branch of Congress.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I raise the same point of order on that I have raised heretofore, with the further point that the Chair has already decided the question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair). The Chair has not decided this question.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Do I understand the point of order has been made on this amendment?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; it has.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Then I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. What is the point of order?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The point of order I make is that it is new legislation; and the further point I make is that the Chair has already substantially decided the same proposition on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the point of order made against this amendment by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]. I submit, sir, the amendment is in order. Is it claimed that we are so hampered with rules that this House in making an appropriation of money for the contingent fund to be used by the House can not say how that money shall or shall not be used? There is no existing law as to how the contingent fund of the House shall be used. Will the gentleman who makes the point of order tell me what existing law the amendment repeals or changes?

If the House has tied its hands by any rule by which it is bound to vote appropriations especially for contingent funds, but is without the power to put any limitation on the purposes for which such appropriations shall be used, then the sooner we rid ourselves of such a rule the better it will be for the House and the country. [Applause.] No, sir, the amendment is in order and should by all means be adopted. It is out of this contingent fund by resolution of the House that the Sergeant-at-Arms is authorized to draw for the expensive Congressional funerals and burials that have not only attracted much criticism and attention, but have in my judgment come to amount to a national Congressional scandal.

I know, sir, of no abuse that has grown up in this House (and I grant there are many) that is more undemocratic and reprehensible than the custom of expending from three to ten thousand dollars of the people's money to bury Senators and Representatives, many of whom leave behind them estates amply sufficient to meet all the proper expenses of their funeral or burial; and it tends to build up in this country an office-holding aristocracy which is in my opinion one of the most dangerous tendencies of the times. When paupers die the county or municipality in which they live usually bury them at an expense of ten or fifteen dollars. To this I do not object, because they leave nothing with which to pay the expense of burial, and our common humanity accords them that, even at public expense. But, sir, when a Senator or Representative dies here, or while he is such, even if he dies at home, it matters not if he be worth his millions, he must be buried at Government expense, and with a reckless extravagance and disregard of the people's rights that is simply astounding. Just let me give you a few items from some of these funerals paid out of the contingent fund:

Embalming body	$75 00
Casket	425 00
Plate and engraving	18 00
Chestnut case, copper-bound, and copper-engraved plate	75 00
Forty-one pairs kid gloves, $2	82 00
Railroad fare, aggregate	1,619 86
Lunches	202 06
Twenty-four silk sashes and pressing	144 00
Cigars	14 00
Hats, &c.	9 00
Expenses of barber	34 00
Telegraphing	70 00
Hotel bill and rooms	264 00
Altering coats for livery	22 50
Hearse, carriages and cabs	286 00
Velvet buttons, &c.	19 35
Incidentals incurred and not included in other bills	153 00

You see how freely the money flows. In this last item I suppose the wine bill is included, as it has become somewhat objectionable to call that by its proper name in these bills. These are only a few items, picked out to illustrate the abuses that this practice tolerates. The big funerals have not been looked to.

I now ask the members of this House if you will go on making these appropriations, and of money wrung by taxation from the toiling masses of this country, and will not say that it shall not be squandered in this way? How can such a course be defended? What warrant have we in the Constitution to tax the people for any such purposes? I was elected to my seat here on the promise that so far as was in my power, I would see that the people were only taxed to raise revenue to support and carry on the Government economically administered.

Sir, others may do as they will, but so far as I am concerned I intend to carry out this pledge. Under it where do we find our authority for the expenditure of $10,000 for a funeral and burial? Sir, a dead Congressman has become a very expensive luxury to the American people. If we die paupers, we ought not to do so. We get a salary of $5,000 per year, with four times as much for mileage as it actually costs us and five times as much for stationery as we use. Any member here could save enough from his mileage and stationery account to give him a decent funeral and burial, but the people who contribute largely to pay these bills are those who toil from twelve to fifteen hours per day in all sorts of weather and can not possibly earn on an average $1 per day. Just think of it! We take a sum of money which represents the full gross earnings of sixty workingmen for a whole year to make a great show and bury a Congressman. What would or what should my constituents, who are composed largely of people who get their living by their sweat and labor, think of me if I sit here and fail to do what I can by my vote and voice against such measures?

I know I am rather fresh here yet; but when I get old enough in the harness to come, as some of you seem to do, to think such things right and to fail to protest against them, I trust my people will retire me, and I will be well satisfied if they do not do so before. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why I would stop these funeral excursions. They may amount to a formal show of respect; but, sir, to take, as is often the case, strangers to the deceased and send them off on a palace-car excursion, with all the luxuries that money will purchase, to have a jolly time and a frolic, does not, sir, evidence respect.

These sad and solemn duties are so trying on the solemn sympathies of the members, I fear that some who go on these excursions with fine cigars, lunches, dinners, kid gloves, hats, carriages, telegrams, crape, and other luxuries, having a good time generally, will never recover their wonted spirits. I see some of them about me now whom I fear have had their spirits subjected to such a severe test that "they will never smile again." [Laughter.] You often hear the question asked here of a member if he is acquainted with another member and he will say, "Oh, yes, I went with him on a funeral excursion and found him a real jolly fellow." [Laughter.]

I am not finding fault with the gentlemen who go, because the House orders it; but I submit it is wrong to impose these duties on members of the House and require them to be absent and neglect the duties for which they were sent here, to go on these pleasure excursions at Government expense. If a member dies I would not object to sending a messenger with his body home, and if any friend of his, who is a member of the House, wanted to go with the remains give him leave of absence and let him pay his own expenses, as other people do who attend the funerals of friends. Remember that people who help to pay these expenses are so poor themselves that when they die many of them must be carried to the potter's field by charity or public aid. Mr. Chairman, I trust I may live out my official career, but, sir, if He who rules our destinies and does all things well should order otherwise, I only want such funeral or burial as my limited means will allow. I do not want the people taxed for a funeral pageant for me. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Chair overruled the point of order, and the amendment was put to the House and lost.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The point of order I make is that there is no legislation upon this subject at all. There is no law; and hence any action on the part of this House will be the enactment of law, and being the enactment of law, it is legislation and new legislation, and can not be put upon the bill.

Mr. LONG. May I suggest to the gentleman from West Virginia that there is no existing law in reference to this matter to be changed. The rule provides against a change of the law. This is, therefore, a question merely of the scope of the powers of the committee.

Suppose it provided for the expense of special and select committees on railroad transportation. It would be in order to provide to exclude any expenditure for funeral expenses. For the same reason you might put in a provision for the expenses of special and select committees, excluding committee on funeral occasions. It is merely, therefore, in relation to the scope of the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. A word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must decline to hear further arguments.

There is of necessity in the accomplishment of the work of the House a contingent fund provided, the details of the expenditure of which can not be fixed in advance by law in every particular. Its expenditure rests upon the general necessities of the House. It is a fund set apart by itself. Hence in the appropriation of this fund the expenditures to which it is applied do not rest upon general law, but upon the necessities of the case; and the House applies the fund to meet such necessities as they arise. To limit the purpose of that expenditure would, therefore, be necessarily a change of the law which has heretofore prevailed in making provision for a contingent fund; and the Chair therefore submits the amendment to the committee.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee I wish to be heard for a moment upon the amendment for the purpose of showing that the Chair, I think, is in error in saying that there is no existing law on the subject, for there is an existing statute providing that the contingent fund can not be expended in a certain manner; and therefore by implication it is provided that it may be expended in another manner. There is law on the subject, and I would respectfully suggest to the Chair that the amendment is a modification of that statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The fund is set apart to meet exigencies as they arise, contingencies which can not be anticipated for the purpose of making appropriations in detail to meet them. It may be provided that it shall not be expended in a given way, but of necessity in the passage of a contingent appropriation you can not anticipate every purpose for which it may be expended.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is always in the power of the House to limit the application of an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must maintain the position it has taken, and submits the amendment to the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Before that is done I think it is due to the House that there should be a word said upon the subject of this amendment. I have seen a great deal in the papers that does not amount to the dignity of a discussion on the question. I have heard things said in this House that I think had better been left unsaid. There is no truth and no justice in any of these assaults that are made on funeral corteges and funeral escorts appointed by the House and the Senate. There is no government under the sun that takes its servants from their homes and when they lay down their lives leaves them where they are to be cared for by strangers. What is wrong in this House, if one of its body should die here, in undertaking to send him in a decent and respectful manner back to his home where he may be buried by his family? The presumption is that he is away from them among strangers attending to his duties. Is it not due to him that the Government should send him back to his home in a proper manner if he dies in the performance of his duties? It has always been the practice; and it seems to me that there are other abuses, if gentlemen want to correct abuses, that ought to be corrected, either in conduct or otherwise, in carrying on the affairs of government, instead of proceeding in this manner, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the point of order that my friend has already addressed the committee on this subject. I must insist upon this in order to get through with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 64.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a single word touching the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin as modified by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PRICE. Not modified by the gentleman from Indiana. I modified it at his suggestion.

Mr. CANNON. There may be some abuses as to the expenditure of the contingent fund, but this does not correct them by any manner of means. The result will be, if this appropriation is decreased, we go into the next fiscal year with a deficiency staring us in the face, or with an appropriation double the amount proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin. For this year there is a very considerable deficiency, and a larger one to come, running up, I apprehend, to between $50,000 and $60,000.

On the 1st of July this session of Congress will still be running. I apprehend it will run nearly a month, perhaps six weeks, longer than was contemplated when this estimate was submitted.

The gentleman from Indiana knows this; yet he says it is an uncertain item, and his great desire to decrease the bill makes him accept almost any amendment, notwithstanding that almost an immediate deficiency was staring him in the face.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For stationery for members of the House of Representatives, including $6,000 for stationery for the use of the committees and officers of the House, $47,625.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 352, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. PRICE. In support of this proposition I want to submit one or two plain facts. We have forty-seven committees. This sum, if appropriated, will give to each committee $128 worth of stationery. I have looked over the stationery accounts, and, without being able to state accurately, I will say that $28 in my opinion will about cover all the stationery that has been used or can be used at the present session of this Congress—$28 to each committee. If that be true, we have $100 to each committee more than it ought to have.

The only answer that can be made, and gentlemen will perhaps make it, is that this is only an appropriation and not an expenditure. To that I reply if you make the appropriation you will have the expenditure. I base that statement upon this fact: Last year we expended for stationery $48,297. Of that amount there was $41,625 for members, leaving $6,672 as the expenditure for committee stationery.

Now I know, and every man who has investigated this subject knows, that three-fourths of that whole sum was not used by committees; by whom I do not know. I only know this, that in the Committee on Agriculture we have not used half a dozen dollars' worth this year, and we have used all we needed. In the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic we had $42.50 worth of stationery brought to us, and on my motion the chairman directed the clerk to take it back. I went back two months later, and it was not taken back then. We have not used a dollar's worth of stationery on that committee. So it is with many other committees.

The appropriation is made and expended not for the use and convenience of the members of the committee in the discharge of public duty, but it goes and vanishes as the dew before the sun. The only way of stopping this petty larceny is to refuse to make the appropriation. Why do I say petty larceny? I do not know it, but I believe it, because I know we do not use this stationery on the committees.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If it be petty larceny, who are the thieves?

Mr. PRICE. I do not know that it is petty larceny, but I believe it. We do not use it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then is it stolen?

Mr. PRICE. I do believe it is stolen.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Who are the thieves?

Mr. PRICE. I do not know it is stolen; and of course, not knowing that it is, I can not give the name of the thief. If I could I would. If the gentleman has any other questions equally profound I will try to answer them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I merely made a suggestion, but it seems the gentleman has not the information.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the result of the vote just had on my amendment intended to suppress extravagant Congressional funerals shows to my mind that most of the members present expect to die in the public service and to have a gorgeous and enthusiastic burial at Government expense. [Laughter.] But I want to assure them that if such be their hope they had best die very soon or change their course on questions like this, for in my judgment this policy, if persisted in, will relegate many of them to private life before they get their funeral expenses paid. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there are many things in this bill which I would like to discuss, if the time allowed me would permit. In the general debate on the bill most of the time was taken up in the discussion of the civil-service rules and the practices of the two parties with reference to the civil service, the Republicans accusing the Democrats of trying to nullify the civil-service law so as to put in all Democrats and have a partisan service, and the Democrats retorting by telling the Republicans how they administered the law when they had power so as to put in and keep in all Republicans, and gentlemen on each side are reminded of what they said and did before power passed from one party to the other; but, Mr. Chairman, I agree with my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. He says that it is no good answer for the Democrats to say to the Republicans "You did it too." He says this is an age of progress and that we are progressing, and that the better thought of the present should govern us rather than the bad examples of the past. Yes, sir, we are progressing; the Republican party has progressed out of power and the Democrats have progressed in, and no gentleman should be held responsible for opinions and utterances expressed before this change took place. They have thought more about it and look at it from different standpoints.

I do not know that I can better illustrate this change of heart than by relating a little incident that occurred only a few years ago in the district I have the honor to represent on this floor. A friend of mine, Mr. Beach Mitchell, as good a man and citizen as lives in the district, was the treasurer of Alcorn County. He had held the office for two terms and had made a most acceptable officer, being scrupulously honest and correct. It was about that time that General Grant was being talked of for a third term, and our people were all in favor of the traditions of the fathers and opposed to a third term. Mr. Mitchell asked for a third term as county treasurer, and the only thing that could be said against him was that he had held the office two terms. Mr. Fred. Rory, another friend of mine and another good man—in fact, my friends down there are among the best people in the world [laughter]—concluded he would like to be treasurer, and he announced himself a candidate, his platform being opposition to a third term; and the race was made on this issue alone, and Mr. Rory was elected. Everything went on well till Mr. Rory had served two terms and the time was approaching for the election again. He must now overcome the third-term prejudice that he had himself invoked or retire to private life. This put him to thinking, and he came to town one morning and inquired of the boys if they had seen anything of Beach Mitchell, and they assured him Beach was in town. He then in all seriousness said: "I want to see him; I feel that I owe him an apology. Four years ago I ran against him for treasurer of this county, and I beat him on the issue that no man should have a third term. I was perfectly honest in it, but I had not thought much about it, and when you come to think about it as applied to the treasurer's office there ain't a thing in it [laughter], and I thank my God I am not a stubborn man, and when I see I am wrong, I have the manhood to acknowledge it." [Great laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we sit here and hear the Republicans pleading for a non-partisan service and see the Democrats trying to so arrange things as to get all Democrats in, we must conclude that both parties, after changing places, have thought more about it. The Republicans now see that when they had power and prostituted it to partisan ends that they were wrong, and they now have the manhood to acknowledge it [laughter]; while the Democrats have become convinced that many of the partisan practices which they condemned the Republicans for when they were in power were not so bad as they then thought, and they are ready to make their apology by doing likewise. [Renewed laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, who said:

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not applicable to the President. A change of condition seems to have produced no change of conviction with him, so far as the civil service is concerned. He seems to be as firm as a rock in his adherence to the pledges on which he secured the confidence and votes of the American people, and without assuming to be his champion I would like to suggest to some of my Democratic friends that if we would devote more of our time to a faithful discharge of our duties as members of this House and less to criticisms of the President it might be better for our party and the country. That there are inequalities in the distribution of the patronage of the Government I am well aware, and I hope at some future time to have an opportunity to submit some observations on this subject and the practice of Representatives and Senators besieging the Departments for places for their friends. I trust I am as loyal to my friends as most people, and I know I am as anxious to serve them, but it does seem to me that this practice tends to impair the usefulness and independence of both the members and Department officials.

Human nature is the same in office and out of it. The conduct and expenditures of all the officials who have been kind to the member and yielded to his requests and put him under obligations by putting his friends in office, may not receive that careful scrutiny that his duty as a Representative might require, or failure on his part to comply with the importunity of the Representative, might tend to make him more critical than he ought to be. And I am afraid on the other hand that the Department officials sometimes use their patronage to stop the importunities of or to influence members, I do not know which, but have thought I had seen evidences of favoritism born of this practice. Sure it is that this system is not working well, and there are within my knowledge a number of Senators and Representatives here who are unwilling to become hangers-on around the dispensers of patronage to the neglect of their legitimate duties, and as a consequence the more greedy and importunate get the advantage of them and modest merit is made to suffer. These things ought not to be, and I would be glad to see them corrected. So long as the Representatives and Senators are supposed to control the patronage, let it be fairly and equally distributed.

Mr. Chairman, there are other things in this bill to which I would like to give my special attention, if I had the time. The bill carries more than $20,000,000.

I believe, sir, if this Government could be administered on business principles, such as a prudent business man would adopt in the conduct of his own business, at least one-fourth of the money that this bill appropriates could and would be saved to the people. I am aware of the fact that when a Repesentative on this floor advocates the correction of any of the abuses that have grown up here, or votes in the interest of economy or retrenchment in the expenditure of public money, he subjects himself to ridicule and is accused of posing before the country as an economist or reformer. It is considered as ridiculous to talk of economy here as it is to speak of the Constitution. The rule with many seems to be not what is actually necessary to run the Government, but how much can we spend, and every conceivable scheme that can be thought of that will require money is proposed, and many of them, I am sorry to say, are adopted. I have voted and will vote for every reasonable proposition to amend the bill in the interest of economy.

I have heard gentlemen assert on this floor several times that there was no danger of bankrupting the Government. I am aware that with the taxing power the Government has there is no immediate danger of bankrupting it; but, sir, it is the people who support the Government for whom I am concerned. Many of them have been bankrupted already, and many more of them will be, unless we change many of our policies and practices. And I desire to say to my Democratic friends that in the canvass I made for my seat here, and I expect it was the case in almost every district that sent a Democrat here, we charged the Republican party with wasteful extravagance in the administration of the Government. I believed it, and we all promised that if the Democratic party was intrusted with power it would correct these abuses. Shall we keep this promise or go home and apologize? [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I now warn my Democratic friends that the country will not be satisfied with stump speeches made on this floor telling of the misdeeds of the Republican party, but they will demand that we make our showing in the appropriation bills or stand convicted of having obtained power under false pretenses.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Hear! hear! Good! good!

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, when I go home from here to face my constituents I intend my record shall be clear on this question, and, sir, as a member of the Democratic party, believing in its principles as I do, I would like to be able to point my people to some substantial evidences of our good faith in the keeping of promises made to them. In the remarks made yesterday by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] he gave utterance to some very sound doctrine. He showed that we were here in the capacity of agents for the people, and that we should be as scrupulously honest and careful in making our appropriations in pursuance of this trust as if we were working for a private individual and drawing our checks on his bank account; and he then proceeded to show that, tested by that rule, every man who votes all the items of this bill could be convicted of larceny or embezzlement, and I believe it is nearly true.

Mr. Chairman, this is a beautiful city, with its magnificent public buildings, its fine streets, its beautiful parks, circles, squares, and public grounds, its inspiring monuments, its flowers, its trees and grass, its fountains and gardens. Everything is exquisitely beautiful and grand, and I am proud of it all; but I can but think as I behold it of the sweat and toil it has cost the tax-payers of this country, and while I am willing to vote what is necessary to keep it up and support the Government, let us not waste any more than is necessary. One other thought that has occurred to me, sir, on the subject of salaries. If there were not so much difference in the salaries paid by the Government for the work performed and those paid by private interests, would not the pressure for positions under the Government be very much diminished and the scramble for office be somewhat allayed?

Sir, it seems probable that my leadership and my policy in the interest of the toiling masses at home is not likely to be accepted and followed by this House; but, sir, I will not give it up or be discouraged, but, like the "grand old man," the great statesman and friend of human rights across the waters, William E. Gladstone, I will appeal to the country. [Great laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to return my thanks to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] for giving me his time.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. PRICE, and it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of the Public Printer, $4,500; for chief clerk, $2,400; four clerks of class 4; one clerk of class 1; in all, $15,300.

Mr. MORRISON. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this is one of the increases in the bill which, under the point of order, might go out. I am not well enough informed as to the duties of this officer to know whether it ought to go out or not, so I do not make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary appropriated has been $4,500 for quite a number of years.

Mr. MORRISON. How long?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should think some six or seven years. On account of the importance of the office the committee did not feel justified in making a change; so they have simply reported the sum which has heretofore been appropriated. The office is regarded as important. The salary fixed by law is $4,000. I have no doubt a point of order would be good as to the extra $500.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law fixes $4,000 as the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order being sustained, there is no appropriation left in the bill for this salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that there is no appropriation for this salary remaining in the bill. The gentleman can move an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order was made as to the extra $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The point was made on the sum named in the bill, $4,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move then to insert $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Tke Clerk read as follows:

For Botanic Garden: For superintendent, $1,800; for assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $9,900; in all, $11,700.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 403, these words, "for three additional laborers at $1.25 per day each, $1,173.75.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been well considered by the Joint Committee on the Library, by whom I have been instructed to offer it. I spoke to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to-day in regard to it, and he suggested the insertion of $900, I believe. But I hope, sir, if the cheese-paring process is to be applied, it will not be applied to these laborers who handle the pick and shovel, while others who work in the shade all the while receive large salaries. We ask only that three laborers shall be allowed at $1.25 per day each.

Since the last apportionment we have had an addition of sixty members to this body; and if this garden is to be kept up in its present efficient state it is absolutely necessary, as we have found by examination, that these additional laborers should be provided.

Mr. COX. What have they to do?

Mr. SINGLETON. They have a great deal to do. I do not know whether the gentleman applies to the Botanic Garden for plants, &c., but it is very certain that the labor in this garden has been greatly increased, and unless you give these additional laborers you need not expect it to be kept in its present efficient state.

Mr. Chairman, I have never heard a single word said, so far as economy is concerned, against the management of the gentleman who has charge of the Botanic Garden. I believe him to be strictly honest. I think he uses the money intrusted to him to the very best advantage; and I never heard a word of reproach against him on that score. I know he is a Scotchman, and sometimes a little brusque; some members do not like him very well on that account; but I admire a man who is honest and economical in the management of the public money. I can put up with a little brusqueness on the part of a man who has these good qualities. I have never heard a word of reproach against him in this regard.

As I have stated, the Library Committee has carefully considered and investigated this matter, and if gentlemen want that garden kept up as it ought to be—and you know that every member of this House derives benefit from it—you should allow these three additional laborers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Appropriations have not had occasion to consider this question and are not at all informed as to whether this additional appropriation is necessary or not. The Botanic Garden is one of the most interesting objects in this capital. It is one of the few objects of taste which have received the favorable consideration of Congress. It is admirably well conducted. It is a school in botany to us all. As a member of the House I have always been in favor of fair and reasonable appropriations for this object. As to whether this appropriation is proper or not, we must depend upon the views expressed by the chairman of the Committee on the Library. In deference to the views of that gentleman and his committee, I, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, do not object to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. The amendment which has been adopted makes another mathematically and absolutely necessary, and I submit, therefore, in lines 303 and 304, to strike out "$11,700" and insert "$12,873.75."

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Clerk officially carries out the amount.

Mr. PRICE. I have no doubt the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana is worth listening to, but I did not hear a word of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The remark I made is, that the power in all these cases is left to the Clerk, and therefore the gentleman's amendment is not necessary.

Mr. PRICE. If that be so, then all right.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE.

For compensation of the President of the United States, $50,000.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the following, to come in at the end of line 411:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order that it is new legislation and changes existing law, and therefore, under Rule XXI, it is not in order. The civil-service law lodges the power of making and modifying the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission with the President. The entire discretion over this matter belongs to him.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to say——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is another point that I wish to make. It is that under the law the compensation of the President can not be changed during the term of office for which he has been elected. I have heretofore discussed these questions at length; therefore I will say nothing further now.

Mr. BAYNE. I am not sure the point of order is not well taken; but I wish to insist if this proposition can be placed anywhere in this bill and be pertinent to any proposition in the bill, if it is germane to any proposition in this bill, this is the one the proposition fits exactly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing to admit that.

Mr. BAYNE. The civil-service act provides that said Civil Service Commission shall act under rules and regulations made by the President. The sixteenth rule, which is ruled out by the proviso making appropriation for the Civil Service Commission, is one of these rules which the President has made and promulgated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Read the rule.

Mr. BAYNE. The purpose of the proviso is in regard to civil service, to compel a change of that sixteenth rule. The Civil Service Commission has no power to change that rule. It is not within the jurisdiction or authority of the Civil Service Commission to change it. It is a power within the control of the President to change that rule. He has the right to modify that rule so as to make it conform to the ideas of the proviso. Therefore I say if there is to be any compulsion on the part of the House of Representatives of an executive officer of the United States to do or not do a particular thing, that compulsion should be directed to the authority having power to do it. And the manly way to effect a change of this rule is not to lay it at the door of the Civil Service Commission, but directly to place the responsibility on the President, who under the civil-service law has the right and power to change these rules.

It is very true the President has the right and power to change these rules now if he chooses to do so and to include the very change in this proviso. But the President has not seen fit to do so. The Civil Service Commission could not do so because it has not the power, and therefore if anybody is to be compelled to do this thing let us compel the President to do it.

If this proposition be admissible anywhere in this bill, it is admissible as a coercive measure on the President nowhere else. Rule XVI says, and this rule was prepared and promulgated by the President:

1. Whenever any officer having the power of appointment or employment shall so request, there shall be certified to him, by the commission or the proper examining board, four names for the vacancy specified, to be taken from those graded highest on the proper register of those in his branch of the service and remaining eligible, regard being had to any right of preference and to the apportionment of appointments to States and Territories; and from the said four a selection shall be made for the vacancy. But if a person is on both a general and a special register he need not be certified from the former, except at the discretion of the commission, until he has remained two months upon the latter.

Now the proviso on page 19 of the bill under consideration——

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me proceed a moment. The proposition is to require that the names of all who have passed the examination shall be sent to the appointing power; not four names, as the rule I have read provides, but the names of all who have passed an examination.

Rule XVI was made by the President. It is the President's mode of ascertaining, for the various Departments of this Government where the civil-service law applies, who shall be appointed to vacancies that may occur. The President has the entire power in the matter. He has chosen to advise himself as to the competency and qualifications of the applicants by adopting rules for this Civil Service Commission; and has chosen to say, by the rule I have just read, to the members of his Cabinent and to the chiefs of divisions and heads of bureaus that they shall have four names sent to them out of which to choose an applicant to fill a vacancy, but that they shall not have a list of ten or twenty or forty or one hundred names. He has vested a discretion in the heads of Departments and the chiefs of bureaus and divisions in this respect, which discretion, as far as it has been exercised, has been perfectly satisfactory to the President. If it were not satisfactory he would change the rule.

So I propose this amendment in this connection, because it is the one in which it properly belongs if it has any relevancy to the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I now make the point of order that when the gentleman is discussing the point of order, and not limited in time, he should confine himself to the question of order and not to the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I have been discussing the point of order right along. I have been showing, or attempting to show, that if it is germane to the bill this is the place where it should be inserted.

Mr. HAMMOND. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he did not know he was out of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I say this, that if it is germane anywhere to the bill it is germane here and nowhere else.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

Mr. FINDLAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a legitimate subject of discussion here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOLMAN. I state in all fairness that until we reach the point where it may properly be discussed it is not admissible, that the Constitution is a barrier——

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FINDLAY. There has been enough said upon the other side of this question, it seems to me, in all justice, to permit a few words to be said upon this side of the question. I propose to use the brief time allotted to me, Mr. Chairman, in speaking of this anti-civil-service rider, and particularly of that provision of it——

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman shall confine himself to the question of order which is pending.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is just what I am going to do. This is to the point of order. The amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is subject to the point of order, and I hope my honored friend from Indiana will hold himself in peace and allow me to proceed in order.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand my friend from Maryland, he takes the position that this is not admissible upon this bill?

Mr. FINDLAY. I do. I am discussing the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and am putting it upon the ground that his amendment is not in order, and hence I am perfectly in order in the line of remarks I am about to pursue.

Mr. HOLMAN. Everybody agrees that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FINDLAY. Now I say that this amendment, whether presented in the form that it now comes before the House from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who offers it for a formal purpose merely, or in the regular form as presented in this bill, is a proposition conceived—I speak impersonally, of course—conceived in the spirit of the purest buncombe, for the baldest purpose of the most transparent demagogy. [Laughter.] That is a pretty bold proposition, Mr. Chairman, but I expect to maintain it.

In the first place, there is no man here who doubts that it is subject to the point of order, and therefore will be tossed out of the bill as an irrelevant and inpertinent intruder whenever the time comes to make the motion. In the second place, there is no man here who doubts, if such by any miscarriage should not be its fate, that when it goes before the Senate that body will trample it under foot with the scorn and contumely it deserves.

There is no man here who doubts that if contrary to all reason and precedent it should pass that body it will then confront a hostile Executive, who will give his approval only under the compulsion of a false situation into which he has been cornered by his own political friends and supporters. This House, and when I say that I mean the ruling responsible power of this House, the Democratic majority, has rudely turned its back upon one of the principal reforms in the currency of the country recommended by the President; and as if that were not enough it now proposes to knock from under him the very foundation-stone of his political creed and public success. And this is politics! And these are leaders!

Why, sir, if it were not so serious a subject a man might sit down and laugh at this old party preserving its succession in tradition and name, if not in policy and principle, through a half century of conflict and varying fortunes, fighting battles for twenty-five years only to lose them, without one break in the long chain of reverses, and then at last, after these cruel postponements, disappointments, mortifications, and defeats, when tardy victory has brushed aside the black cloud of disaster and revealed the silver lining to its ravished gaze, whether intoxicated by the spectacle or mad from excess of joy, the grand old party, unequal to the task of deliberate and constructive contemplation of its own splendid achievements, seeks to be dismissed in the very moment of its ecstasy on the very spot of its triumph. [Applause.]

You have voted down an honest dollar, and now you propose to tear away the safeguard of the most valuable law in the statute-book. Let no gentleman deceive himself. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], in response to a question I asked him the other day during the general debate as to what the object of this amendment was, replied, to use his own language, it was to deal out even-handed justice; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], in order to make the object of it still more plain, let us know that it was intended to give us a partisan instead of a non-partisan service.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. Not at this moment. Now, Mr. Chairman, I speak as to the particular provision which requires the certification of all the eligibles in the States as well as in the United States to the appointing power. And I say that this amendment will have the effect which I have just suggested, namely, to give us a partisan and not a non-partisan service. It is not a mere matter of conjectural speculation as to what will be the effect of the bill; but it is a matter of experience, demonstrated, boasted of, gloated over by a Baltimore postmaster. This ingenious young gentleman got the whole list of eligibles into his hands.

Mr. HENLEY. Is he a Democrat or a Republican?

Mr. FINDLAY. He is a Democrat. He was a Democrat in office.

Mr. HENLEY. Who appointed him?

Mr. FINDLAY. He was appointed by the present President of the United States.

Mr. HENLEY. That fixes his Democracy.

Mr. FINDLAY. That fixes his Democracy, I suppose, although that is a question of some doubt. [Laughter.]

He got the list of all the eligibles into his own hands. And now what use did he make of it? According to his own statement, made before the examiner of the Civil Service Commission who was in Baltimore, he made such good use of it that in less space than a year, according to his own statement and a statement that he boasts over—in less than a year he had turned out every Republican in that office and had put a Democrat in his place without missing fire once. [Loud and repeated applause.]

A MEMBER. Good for him.

Mr. FINDLAY. All right. Then your applause, gentlemen, is as to the effect of this amendment. Then you mean to say that the certification of all the eligibles will result in what you have applauded. Then you mean to say the object of this amendment is to give a partisan and not a non-partisan service. Applaud it just as long as you please. Neither hisses nor applause will deter me from the discharge of what I consider to be my duty.

I say, sir, that he boasted that with the list of eligibles in his hand, in violation of the object of the law, and in plain violation of Rule XXIV adopted by the Civil Service Commission, which requires that the appointing power shall not discriminate on account of politics—in violation of both, this ingenious young gentleman, with the aid of more expert manipulators, still boasts if he had only been spared a little longer in his place he would have turned over a Democratic civil-service reform post-office to his successor. Now, applaud that again. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FINDLAY. I was speaking to the point of order. I was not limited.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no diversity of opinion upon the question of order touching this proposition; therefore I ask that a decision may be made. The Constitution intervenes here.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, if I am recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. As I made the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] did not confine himself to the question of order, I think it my duty to make the same point against the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], who plainly is not discussing the question of order.

Mr. FINDLAY. I am discussing it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman has not alluded to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland have five minutes' additional time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINDLAY. Gentlemen, let us not misunderstand the legal bearings of this case. I take issue with my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] upon this question.

Mr. COMPTON. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. Not while I am on this point. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] offered an amendment here providing that the salary of the President should be conditioned upon his requiring such rules to be made as would result in the certification of all the eligibles, and he insisted, for the purposes of his argument, that that was an amendment germane to the bill. I deny that it is germane to the bill. The Chair has not yet decided the point of order. Of course it is competent for the Chair to decide the point, and when it does so I shall be off my feet, but the Chair has not yet decided the point of order upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am arguing against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] to be heard on the question of order.

Mr. FINDLAY. And that is what I am on. I insist that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is not germane to this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. We all agree as to that.

Mr. COMPTON. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. Not just now.

Mr. COMPTON. Just one question.

Mr. FINDLAY. What is it, then?

Mr. COMPTON. I desire to ask my colleague this question: How many Democrats did the officer to whom he has referred here find in office under the operation of the civil-service law when a Republican was conducting that office?

Mr. FINDLAY. That is a question I have never inquired into, and I do not care to inquire into it now, because it has no pertinency whatever to the question at issue here.

Mr. COMPTON. I will answer it for you if you will allow me.

Mr. FINDLAY. No. The only answer I care to make to it is the one I have made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the Chair has reached a conclusion as to the point of order, I desire to know if it is not proper for the Chair to dispose of that question in order that we may proceed with the business of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no such announcement.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I say if the Chair has reached a conclusion——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will choose its own time for announcing its decision.

Mr. FINDLAY. May I proceed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. FINDLAY. Very well. Now, let us dismiss the question as to the effect of the certification of these eligibles. There is not a man in this House who does not know what the effect of this amendment is intended to be, and if any one had any doubt about it before that doubt would now be dispelled.

Let us come to some of the objections that are made against the civil-service law. It is insisted that the law is undemocratic and un-American, and England is referred to, with all the prejudice which that reference is supposed to carry with it, as the seat of this modern heresy in regard to the manner of making appointments to office.

Do the gentlemen who speak of England know that prior to the adoption of the civil-service law in that country all the appointments, or almost all, were made by the nobility, by the aristocracy, and that that system of filling the public offices of England went down under the hard knocks of the democracy of England claiming that—

> The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
> A man 's the gowd for a' that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where is the point of order? [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. As I have said, the appointments to the public service in England were controlled by the aristocracy. It was their younger sons, it was their dependent relatives, it was the personal favorites of the nobility who received those appointments. These were the only classes from which appointments were made, and the establishment of the civil-service system in England had its origin in the revolt of the democracy of England, or, if you please, the commons of England, against that condition of affairs. Now, sir, we have had the counterpart of that system in this country. We had no dukes or marquises, but we had their counterpart, so far as political control was concerned, in the shape of the ward "rounders" and "heelers," without whose recommendation or favor no man could be appointed to a public office.

A MEMBER. If not a count, he was a counter.

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes; he knows how to count very rapidly, and to make a false return after he counts—true according to his own count but false according to the facts.

Why, sir, in this country, although we had not an aristocracy that made appointments to the offices, we had a sort of feudal system. We had our tenants in capite, and the whole system running down through every stage of subinfeudation and the remotest relation of dependence. No man could get an office unless he had been recommended by some of these people who had control of the "machine."

Now I ask which is the more democratic of the two, the system which permits either a man or woman in this country to apply for office and, if qualified, to get into office——

A MEMBER. This civil-service system does not do that.

Mr. FINDLAY. Every man with influence or without influence has the opportunity to be examined and to qualify for the office; whereas under the other system no man can get into office unless he comes bowing and begging under the wing of some political scoundrel to whom he is under such obligations as must cut his very manhood to the bone.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COMPTON. I move to amend by striking out the section. Mr. Chairman, I have already expressed to this House the views which I entertain upon this question of civil service. I do not propose to repeat them; but I deem it proper to make a brief response to the remarks which have fallen from the lips of my distinguished colleague [Mr. FINDLAY]. Sir, the assault which he has made upon the late postmaster of Baltimore city is as undeserved as any that one man ever made upon another. Who is this man? Sir, he is the peer of my colleague or any other gentleman on this floor or anywhere as a man of character and intelligence and a Democrat. He is a man who, for the first time within the history of the country since the party came into control of the Government, has had it in his power as a Democrat to administer Federal patronage in the State of Maryland. He administered it under the eye of the authorities here in Washington; and when he was about to conclude his administration and of his own free will deliver up that office this same Civil Service Commission sought by indirection, by every effort and every means which they could employ, to cause it to be believed by the world that he had violated the laws of that service. Why? Because he had removed from office a lot of political scalawags, a lot of unprincipled political scoundrels, the associates——

Mr. FINDLAY. Were the soldiers he removed——

Mr. COMPTON. The associates of my colleague in last fall's campaign when he sought to defeat the Democratic ticket.

Mr. FINDLAY. I deny it.

Mr. COMPTON. I mean to say——

Mr. FINDLAY. Were the soldiers who were removed "political scalawags and scoundrels?"

Mr. COMPTON. I do not care whether they were soldiers or not.

Mr. FINDLAY rose.

Mr. COMPTON. I do not submit to interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will come to order.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. COMPTON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understood him to say that all the persons discharged from the post-office in the last year by the postmaster of Baltimore were "political scalawags and scoundrels."

Mr. COMPTON. No, sir; not all of them.

Mr. FINDLAY. Well, I understood you to say so.

Mr. COMPTON. Not all of them; I never intended to say so.

Mr. FINDLAY. Then I want to know how many of them.

Mr. COMPTON. Take your seat, and I will go on.

Mr. FINDLAY. How many of them? I would like to have an answer.

Mr. COMPTON. You will get an answer when you take your seat.

Now, I assert again that it was sought to convict Mr. Veazey of a violation of the civil-service rules because he had removed from office, in strict conformity with the law and the rules, a lot of men who were unfit to hold office under any administration, and in coalition with whom, as I said before, my distinguished colleague last fall sought to defeat the regular Democratic ticket in that city.

Mr. FINDLAY rose.

Mr. COMPTON. I say they were unfit to hold office, because he knows, and I know, that those men, in connection with the officials of the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, have run Republican politics at the primaries in that city, ever since the party has been in power, by any and every means within their reach to control that organization and the politics of that city.

Mr. FINDLAY. I call the gentleman to order. His five minutes are out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to be recognized in order that I may yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing my colleague should have all the time he wants; but I do not propose to be misrepresented or to have my constituents misrepresented in this way.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair informs the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] that his time has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I can be recognized in opposition to the amendment I desire to yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COMPTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a strange sound to come from——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana calls for the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to inquire whether I was recognized in opposition to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana called the regular order. Under the rules debate upon any amendment is confined to five minutes on one side and five on the other.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to strike out the last two words and yield my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON].

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I say it is a singular sound to come from the lips of the gentleman from Maryland, who was elected to this Congress as a Democrat, to charge, as he has charged, that the purpose and object of Mr. Veazey in making removals was to institute and create a partisan force to carry on partisan affairs within the post-office of the city of Baltimore.

I am ready to say to him here and now if that is a partisan organization he will find, I believe, that it is an organization of competent, honest, efficient, and faithful public servants, who will render unto the Government its full and complete due; and when the primaries shall come they will be found exercising the privileges only of free American citizens and not of partisans.

And when the post-office of that city, under a Democratic administration, or the custom-house under a Democratic administration, seeks as has been done in the city of Baltimore under a Republican administration to control the politics of the State of Maryland, I will be found with him for turning the rascals out. [Laughter and applause].

But, Mr. Chairman, turn the rascals out! Whence springs and how comes this new-born zeal of my distinguished colleague, and of other Democrats on this floor, for retaining the rascals in office? Sir, for twenty years he and all of us have made the welkin ring with the declaration that if power came into the hands of the Democratic party they would use it to turn the rascals out.

Mr. FINDLAY. I most emphatically deny that, as far as I am individually concerned. So far as turning the rascals out, yes, I agree to that; but when you go to the extent of making a clean sweep, I say no, that is another thing.

Mr. COMPTON. I say, sir, that in spite of the declarations of reform as proclaimed by my colleague, all his purpose to-day seems to be to try to keep the rascals in. [Laughter and applause.] I am against it, sir. I am as honestly and earnestly in favor of an honest and earnest administration of the civil service as he dare to be, and he knows it.

Mr. FINDLAY. No, I do not.

Mr. COMPTON. You do not?

Mr. FINDLAY. No.

Mr. COMPTON. Well you do know this, sir, that I have got the record of an honest official in my State——

Mr. FINDLAY. I make no personal charges against him, nor did I wish to be so understood.

Mr. COMPTON. No, you could not do it.

Mr. FINDLAY. I have not undertaken to do it.

Mr. COMPTON. Now, I do not want to prolong this debate. I am satisfied with the position that the gentleman has taken, and am content to let the matter rest before the people if he is. I am content to let his declaration as to his position go before the Democracy of Maryland, and to be tried upon that issue. I am ready to stand with him on this record which has been so made up.

Mr. FINDLAY. I am with the real Democrats of Maryland, but not the spurious Democracy of Maryland.

Mr. SPRINGER. What Democrats of Maryland did you go with last fall?

Mr. FINDLAY. We have in our State real and spurious Democrats; Democrats who have corrupted and debauched the franchises of our State; that have made, through the agency of the President, led astray by malign influences here, too, on the recommendation of men who owed their offices to such influences, the very name of civil service a stench in the nostrils of the people. [Derisive laughter and applause.]

But I am in favor of civil service, honest civil service, not your "snivel"-service reform, as it has been carried on in more instances than one. I am in favor of genuine, honest civil-service reform.

Sir, this country has survived the perils of civil war. It has outlived the shock of commercial panic, pushing us to the verge of bankruptcy. It has witnessed the successive flashings of labor strikes all around the horizon, and ominous mutterings from the same disturbed quarter still admonish us that the danger is not over. But none of the trials through which we have passed have been too great for the heroism, the honor, or the justice of the American people. But, sir, whenever the impudent announcement that to the victor belongs the spoils receives a practical exemplification in the distribution of the immense patronage of this country, and a hundred thousand offices are put up for sale every four years to be knocked down to the successful bidder, then let the danger-signals be hung from every station, for on that day and in that hour the country will be called upon to confront the most dangerous enemy that has ever yet assailed its peace or threatened its integrity.

And now, sir, I want to close this discussion by having read an account of this Baltimore post-office, and the doings there, to which my friend from Maryland has alluded; and let us see Mr. Veazey's own account of himself. I ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk—that part which is printed in small type.

Mr. SHAW. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAW. What does the gentleman send to the desk to have read? From what source does it come?

Mr. FINDLAY. It makes no difference.

Mr. SHAW. Yes; it is a very important matter, and has much to do with it.

Mr. FINDLAY. I will state to the gentleman that it is an extract copied from the Baltimore Sun.

Mr. SHAW. The whole of it?

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir; I think the whole of it.

Mr. SHAW. And without comment?

Mr. FINDLAY. Without comment so far as I am aware.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Veazey began the discussion by saying that on the question of changes there was no room for opinion. It was a matter of fact, and easily ascertainable from the records whether true or untrue. As to obtaining a copy of the list of eligibles, he had the express authority of Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, the synonym of civil-service reform. If any crime had been committed, it was gratifying to have such excellent authority. While that was true it was unimportant, as he (Mr. Veazey) had the names of all applicants before the examination, and those who passed brought him their notices and their standings themselves.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Eaton was not the commission.

Mr. VEAZEY. He was the chairman of the commission and the most experienced, and regarded by many as the whole commission. I regarded his sanction as abundant authority.

Mr. Lyman, after examining the books of the local board, said he observed that all on the list of appointments were regularly certified to, and he said he could find no such proceedings as charged at the civil-service meeting. He saw a number of instances of many certifications in one day.

Mr. VEAZEY. That is true and perfectly legal.

Mr. LYMAN. I concede that it is legal, but you must have had a purpose in doing it.

Mr. VEAZEY. My purpose was, so far as consistent with public interest and in conformity with law, to select for appointment none but civil-service Democrats. The result of this is very gratifying to me and annoying to my enemies.

Mr. Lyman asked Mr. Veazey if he had not received recommendations from persons prominent in politics for the appointment of those who had passed the examination. Mr. Veazey replied that he had tried to inform himself as to the character and efficiency of eligibles, and had received recommendations and information from all classes, including politicians, merchants, lawyers, doctors, and even some of the most sublime types of civil-service reformers. He had allowed himself to give consideration to both politicians and civil-service reformers. He found himself obliged in a few instances to appoint Republicans to conform to the law, and when they had fairly entered the service he had promoted them. With these few unfortunate and unavoidable exceptions his selections had purposely been from the Democratic party. He said also that, judging from the result of the examinations held at the post-office since the law passed, it was safe to say that under a Republican administration few Democrats applied for examination, and vice versa. Therefore the appointing power was seldom called upon to discriminate, except as between those of the same political faith.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The formal amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For compensation of the Vice-President of the United States, $8,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that item might as well be stricken out, leaving it to the Senate to make such provision in lieu of it as they may think proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana submit a motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand, the Chair sustained the point of order on my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was sustained.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate, as I have suggested, will make such provision as it thinks proper.

Mr. ROWELL. Why should this be stricken out, if it is a proper appropriation?

A MEMBER. There is no Vice-President.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 38, noes 39.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of no quorum. Gentlemen must see that this is a matter which it is proper for the Senate to arrange.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think it would save time if I should be permitted to say a word in explanation. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 54.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point as to a quorum having been withdrawn, the ayes have it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not understand that the point as to a quorum has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana withdrew it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask unanimous consent to make one moment's explanation. We have already appropriated his regular salary as Senator to the Senator presiding at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. REED, of Maine? Where?

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the head "Senators," on the first page. The Vice-President being dead, the thing that ought to be done is to strike out these lines and insert:

In addition to the pay already appropriated to him as Senator the sum of $3,000 is appropriated to the President of the Senate.

That gives him the pay he is entitled to. The statute says when there is no Vice-President the compensation of the President of the Senate shall be the same as that of Vice-President.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand that the language of the statute is that he shall have the compensation which is provided by law for the Vice-President. Now, is there not the difficulty, if it is not put in the appropriation bill, that it will not be the compensation which is provided for the Vice-President?

Mr. HAMMOND. No; for this reason——

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is out of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understood unanimous consent was given me for an explanation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If this is stricken out it forces upon the Senate an increase of appropriations by adding one which the House ought to make.

Mr. HAMMOND. If this provision remains in the bill as it is the President of the Senate will get $13,000 instead of $8,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine renew the point of order as to no quorum?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair announces that the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. When the Senate puts this on the bill I trust the Democratic stump orators in the next campaign will not charge it to us.

Mr. STEELE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 411 insert the following:

"For compensation of the President of the Senate, $8,000."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is recognized.

Mr. STEELE. I thought I was entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] did not take the floor to support his amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am willing to wait.

Mr. STEELE. Let the gentleman from Georgia proceed.

Mr. HAMMOND. We have already, on page 1 of the bill, at line 10, appropriated $5,000 as the salary of the Senator who has the honor to be President of the Senate. Now, if we pass this amendment giving him $8,000, he will receive $13,000. Nobody wants that done. The sum of money we have appropriated to pay Senators will be either $5,000 over what is necessary or he can draw $5,000 under that appropriation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the President of the Senate draws his salary as Vice-President, he will not draw his salary as Senator, and no auditor would audit such an account. I think we can come to an agreement about it.

Mr. HAMMOND. All we are trying to arrive at is to give Senator SHERMAN, as President of the Senate, $8,000. That is all we want to do. Now, we must either by consent retrace our steps and take away the $5,000 we have given him on the first page, or we must modify this amendment to read somewhat after this fashion:

In addition to the salary already given to the President of the Senate as Senator, $5,000, the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated to make his compensation the compensation of the Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have a substitute for the amendment which I think meets the case.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that if $8,000 is appropriated specifically there can be no difficulty, because it will be impossible to draw anything but the $8,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman does not take my other point, which is that if you appropriated the $8,000 here you leave $5,000 on the first page appropriated to nobody.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then it can not be drawn.

Mr. HAMMOND. But the bill appears to carry $13,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It has always carried it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Oh, no!

Mr. LONG. How is it at present by the law extending up to the 1st of July? Is not Mr. SHERMAN drawing his salary now under just such a provision?

Mr. HAMMOND. No. He is drawing it under a law which applied to the situation when there was a Vice-President. That Vice-President having died, the President of the Senate, under the statute, draws the same compensation that the Vice-President would receive.

Mr. LONG. Why not have the same provision for next year, then?

Mr. HAMMOND. Because we do not want to pay the corpse, and the President of the Senate does not want to draw his pay as the representative of the corpse.

Mr. LONG. But the law says he shall have the compensation of the Vice-President.

Mr. HAMMOND. No; it says that he shall have the compensation due to the office.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this provision changes existing law, and that therefore, under Rule XXI, it is not in order. That rule has been rigidly enforced against some amendments which, in my judgment, were very meritorious, and I insist upon its enforcement now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend will not do that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no law to-day authorizing the payment of any compensation to the President of the Senate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, yes, there is a very plain law.

Mr. HAMMOND. Here is the law in the Revised Statutes, section 36, page 6:

Whenever there is no Vice-President, the President of the Senate for the time being is entitled to the compensation provided by law for the Vice-President.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I propose that the committee adopt the amendment of my colleague appropriating $8,000, and simply reduce the appropriation for Senators to the extent of $5,000. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have a substitute covering that point, and if I can have it read I will ask its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take pleasure in having the gentleman's substitute read. The gentleman was not recognized to offer it, and the Chair did not know that it had been offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment as follows:

"Compensation of the President of the Senate in addition to his salary as Senator, $3,000."

Mr. BAYNE. No Senator will want to abandon his office and relinquish his right to represent his constituents even though he may be Vice-President.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This does not require that. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STEELE. I accept that.

The substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the Executive Office, including stationery therefor, as well as record-books, telegrams, books for library, miscellaneous items, and furniture and carpets for offices, care of office carriage, horses, and harness, $8,000.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 427, 428, 429, 430, and 431.

The effect of this amendment is simply to reduce an aggregate of $91,864 to $83,864. I do not expect to carry the amendment at all, but I want to take advantage of this opportunity to call attention to the vote which passed here a little while ago. This House has forty-seven committees, and I assert, and no man dare contradict it or pretend to contradict it, that the average current expenses of those committees for stationery does not exceed $28. This House has appropriated for stationery for those committees an amount which, if this estimate be correct, is $4,700 in excess of the amount really required for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend know how much is paid for parchment upon which to engross the bills of the House?

Mr. PRICE. No; and that has nothing to do with this question. I want to say to this House that there is not a single dollar of that $4,700 that is honestly expended. I want to say to you gentlemen that you are building up an aristocracy in this country that will trouble your children if it does not you, and if you do not address more conscience to the administration of your public trust the time will come, and the child is already born and half grown who will see it, when you will find yourselves in the condition of India, Ireland, Peru, and the other old countries where there are but two classes, the ruling and the ruled. This bill contains $5,000,000 which is to be spent in a way to hasten that day, and I, standing here under my oath of office as a Representative of the people, would be recreant to my duty if I did not try to trim these appropriations down, not to a parsimonious standard, but to a fair, honest standard of public expenditure. That is what I ask this House to do.

You are not doing it. Under this bill our Democratic friends are given an opportunity to take moneys which are not earned, and the standard of statesmanship on this side seems to be to let them do it in order to make political capital. Sir, in my opinion the best capital we can make to go before the people is by addressing ourselves to a calm, dispassionate consideration of every proposed expenditure—first to inquire whether the service is needed, and next what is it worth. If the amount proposed be too little, let it be raised; if too large, let it be cut down. But let us not spend days and days in talking about abstract propositions which have no necessary connection with the bill, and then, because it is popular to do so or unpopular to deny the right to do so, appropriate $5,000,000 for which no equivalent is to be rendered to the people from whom the money is collected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where is the $5,000,000?

Mr. PRICE. I can not tell all the items in a moment. I have shown half a dozen instances of unnecessary and extravagant appropriation. But gentlemen ignore all that is said in opposition to such expenditures. They shut their eyes, and swallow every proposition of this kind. I could point out numbers of such cases. I have already pointed out one case where the appropriation is $4,700 in excess of the needs of the service; but I might as well have pointed it out to a company of Hottentots. [Laughter.] My amendment was rejected. Yet there is no man on this floor who will dare to say that there is an honest dollar in that excessive appropriation of $4,700 for stationery.

Now, what is the propriety of voting $91,000 for the various offices and expenses connected with the Presidential Mansion? I tell you, gentlemen, if we desire to do our duty, we should reduce these various salaries. Even the President's salary—though we can not cut it down in this bill—might very well be $25,000 instead of $50,000; ay, even if it were reduced to $15,000 or even $10,000 we should have a better government, one more in consonance with the spirit of republican institutions. "But," gentlemen say, "the President must entertain." I say, no; he is under no more obligation to "entertain" than you or I or the humblest man on the police force. He may "entertain" with his own money, as you and I may do with ours; but it is not his constitutional duty, and he has no right, to spend the public money for entertainment. It is things of this kind which I say are building up in this country an aristocracy totally at variance with the whole spirit and genius and purpose of our republican form of Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PRICE, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one messenger, $840; and one laborer; in all, $21,400: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

Mr. MORRISON. I make a point of order against the proviso just read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that all members desiring to do so have leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the bill passed this morning to authorize the incorporation of trades unions.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask to be allowed to give notice that on next Thursday I shall move to take up the tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to give notice that the opponents of the bill will at that time resist the motion.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 275) for the relief of William D. Stewart and others;

A bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran;

A bill (H. R. 2418) for the relief of V. F. Gorrissen; and

A bill (H. R. 5251) making an appropriation for the repairs and enlargement of the post-office and court-house at Des Moines, Iowa, and fixing a limit thereto.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House now takes a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the previous order of the House made to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that, by unanimous consent, the ruling of the Chair, which I presume the Chair is ready to pronounce, be postponed upon the pending amendment until to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not understand the Chair is ready yet to rule upon the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as it has been thoroughly discussed I presume that the Chair is ready; but I ask that it go over, with the clause to which it refers, to come up for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to offer an amendment to the clause.

Mr. LONG. If the Chair is ready to rule, it might save time to have the ruling now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the order in reference to the mode of proceeding to-night read. If the Chair understood it at the time, it seemed to be that where there was objection to a paragraph of the bill it was to be passed over informally, the object being to read over the parts of the bill not objected to, and leave the other portions to which objection is made to be considered hereafter.

Mr. MORRISON. Then I will object to this, so that we may go on.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the paragraph on which the Chair understands the point of order is raised, he considers that objected to, and it will go over.

Mr. MORRISON. There are other points to be made to the clause in the same section and on the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair understood that where there was objection to a particular part of the bill it would be passed over and not voted on.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the understanding substantially. But I do not see that amendments may not be considered and voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For compensation of the Secretary of State, $8,000; First Assistant Secretary of State, $4,500; two Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each; for chief clerk, $2,750; for six chiefs of bureau and one translator, at $2,100 each; stenographer to the Secretary, $1,800; eleven clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; seven clerks of class 2; fourteen clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; and ten clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; one packer, at $720; ten laborers; in all, $114,150.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I simply wish to inquire if there is any increase of salary in that section. I do not understand that debate has been cut off by the order of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. No debate is in order. This provision is substantially the same as the present law.

But I wish for the present to raise a question on the second paragraph with reference to the First Assistant Secretary of State, which I wish to go over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. It will go over.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask whether the compensation of the chief clerk, $2,750 a year, is the compensation provided by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is the whole salary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought it was $2,500.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to submit an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 462, after the word "dollars," insert:
"To be paid only after the service shall have been performed by the persons holding said appointments."

Mr. TAULBEE. My object in offering that amendment is that this provision may apply to the officers named, following the word "dollars."

Mr. SPRINGER. It ought to follow the word dollars in line 468.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I am willing, at the suggestion of the gentleman, to offer the amendment to come in at that point, following the last word of line 468. After a little reflection, however, I desire to change the language of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks we had better now, at the commencement of the proceedings to-night, understand exactly what the order of the House was. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to ask that an evening session be held, with the understanding that wherever any part of the bill was objected to it was to be passed over, the object being to read and agree to such portions of the bill as might be unobjectionable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it was quite so broad. If any gentleman objects to a given paragraph being considered, without doubt it goes over. If he simply proposes to amend, and the object is not to insist upon a quorum, but to vote upon an amendment, that is no objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to state on that point that I do not object to a vote on the amendment, nor do I object to the amount of the salaries fixed in this paragraph.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But you do object to the paragraph as contained in the bill, for your amendment indicates it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to amend it so as to perfect it. Of course it will be necessary, as I understand the Chair, to offer the amendment which is to some extent in the nature of an objection. I do not suppose, however, the Chair would treat that as such an objection as would pass the section over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed until the Chair can get the order under which the House is acting to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the consideration of this paragraph to-night.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not wish to discuss the question, but suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the theory which the Chair entertains is the safest with all due regard to the business to be done to-night, and will save much valuable time by letting us get through with that portion of the bill to which no objection is made, and all parts which gentlemen desire to amend or discuss be passed over. We can get rid of very much of the bill to-night, and then to-morrow take up those portions which have been passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree in that view, except where a proposition is made there is no reason why a vote should not be taken, unless, of course, it be demanded that a quorum shall vote.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The trouble is every gentleman is either tempted to break a quorum or else for fear of an interference with the business of the House has to yield to an amendment that his judgment is opposed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. This order then will not save us any time.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I think the object of this evening session was to obtain a rapid reading of those portions of the bill which are not objected to, so as not to give rise to the question of a quorum; and as the Chair, I think, was of that opinion, I will bring it before the committee by making the point of order that an amendment is in the nature of an objection; and that when an amendment is offered we should pass over the paragraph to which it relates and go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] to submit his proposition at the proper point of the bill as applicable to all the Departments. I do not think it should be submitted as an amendment to each particular clause authorizing the employment of clerks by the Government. He can offer it to come in at the end of the bill as a separate section.

Mr. TAULBEE. At the end of the first section of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. To save time I object to the paragraph.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before the gentleman makes his objection will he allow me one moment?

Mr. BLAND. I am here to object to one part of the bill; and I do not want to stay here all night in order to reach that objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think time will be saved if I am allowed to make a suggestion. If it is proposed to read this bill, I will state that I propose to offer this same amendment so as to apply to each branch of the service, and if the paragraph is objected to and the objection is sustained, we can not pass any paragraph as to the classified employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman agree to have a vote on his amendment?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly I will.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let us have a vote.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a remark in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana that I shall defer these amendments till the end of the bill is reached. I have already offered an amendment of this nature which was ruled out on a point of order. And unless I have some assurance that the amendment applying to all the paragraphs would be in order at the end of the bill I will insist on offering it to each paragraph as it is reached.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has any question of order been raised on the paragraph to which the gentleman from Kentucky now offers an amendment?

Mr. TAULBEE. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask for a vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky had withdrawn his amendment with a view of offering it later.

Mr. TAULBEE. No, sir. I propose to offer it now, unless on the condition that I can offer the amendment to all these paragraphs when the end of the bill is reached.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to that—that a proposition of this kind offered at the end of the bill may be subject to a vote.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. So far as those now present are concerned we can give unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. If so, the House gives unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the order under which the House meets this evening to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN,
"Ordered, That a recess be taken at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m., at which evening session House bill No. 8974, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, shall be considered, except such paragraphs as may be objected to, which shall be passed over; said evening session to terminate at 11 o'clock p. m."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order the Chair will hold a formal objection to a paragraph will be necessary in order to its being passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] consents to withdraw his amendment if the unanimous consent of the House be given that he be permitted to offer it at the end of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think that is exactly a fair statement of my proposition. My proposition is that an amendment covering these points shall be considered in order when the end of the bill is reached. And I wish to have inserted in the RECORD the substance of the amendment I propose to offer. It is as follows:

Provided, That no sums hereinbefore appropriated shall be expended in payment of any salary to any person or employé in the service of the United States included in the classified civil service during furlough or leave of absence for a longer period than thirty days in any twelve months.

Mr. LONG. If the gentleman will allow me I wish to say I do not think he can be prevented from offering this whether the House consents or not.

Mr. TAULBEE. It must be understood not only that I have a right to offer it, but that it must be voted on by the House.

Mr. LONG. The House can not prevent its being voted on.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the consideration of the paragraph.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For contingent expenses, namely: For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, $1,200; for rent of stable and wagon-shed, $600; for care of clock, telegraphic and electric apparatus, and repairs to the same, $1,000; and for miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing, $2,000; in all, $4,800.

Mr. LYMAN. I desire to offer an amendment by direction of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department. If that is held to be an objection——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph as follows:
In line 479 strike out "$1,200."
In line 480 strike out "$600."
In lines 481 and 482 strike out "$1,000."
In line 483 strike out "$2,000."

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will state in a word the reason why the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department propose this amendment——

Mr. BLAND. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he expects to call a quorum on a vote on this proposition?

Mr. LYMAN. No, sir. I have no such interest in the amendment myself as would require me to do that. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department in making some investigation as to this subject found a state of facts existing which seemed to the committee to be a sufficient reason for this amendment, and at the suggestion of officers of the State Department they have proposed the amendment. As will be seen in the paragraph, certain amounts are appropriated for various items in the State Department. There is no objection made to the total amount, $4,800. I have not examined the old bill, but if I am correctly informed the amounts here are the same that were appropriated for like items in that bill. The disbursing officers of the Department have found, however, that while the amounts appropriated for some of these items are enough and for others more than enough, in still other instances the amounts are insufficient, and the consequence is that some of the bills pertaining to these latter items are unpaid. For instance, the wash bill of the State Department for months past has remained unpaid. The Department has had to defer payment because the appropriation for that particular item was exhausted, although there is plenty of money for the payment of the bill in other funds. For the same reason the ice bill is unpaid, and so is a gas bill of $4.03.

Now, it has seemed to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department that it would be entirely safe—certainly so under this reform administration—to give the Secretary of State or the disbursing officers of the Department discretion to disburse this fund according to the requirements of the Department, appropriating the amount here in bulk instead of dividing it up among these various items.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations can not consent to that unless the Committee of the Whole determine on that course. The policy which prevailed for many years of appropriating in bulk was abandoned some years ago, and of late the policy has been to make specific appropriations by items. That rule has been applied to every Department. I admit that the estimates were for a sum in gross, but, adopting in this case the policy which is applied to every other Department, the amount was divided into items.

I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] that if it is found that the amount is not properly distributed it will be easy for the Department to have it corrected in the Senate. We have taken the present law as the basis of distribution, but if it is not correct it can be corrected by itemized estimates being sent to the Senate without increasing the total amount.

Mr. RANDALL. The general policy of the Congress for some years past has been to break up the system of lump appropriations because it gave a discretion which was sometimes abused. I have no idea that it would be abused in this case, but I think it is well to adhere to our rule, and, if there be any gas-bills, or other bills which there is no money to pay, they can be provided for in the deficiency bill.

Mr. LYMAN. But how is such a small bill as this to be provided for in a deficiency bill? It certainly is not creditable to our Government to have these little bills unpaid.

Mr. RANDALL. We often provide for small bills. We have sometimes provided for an amount as low as $1.20 in a deficiency bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the $2,000 in lines 482 and 483 is intended to cover these small contingent expenses.

Mr. RANDALL. Any bills contracted during the current year must be paid out of the appropriations for the current year or else provided for by deficiencies, and I maintain that a strict construction of the law would not allow the payment of bills contracted in the current year out of the general appropriation for the next fiscal year. But the gentleman from Iowa need apprehend no difficulty about paying these bills of the State Department.

Mr. LYMAN. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, the fact seems to be that they are unpaid.

Mr. RANDALL. I know; but they will be provided for in the deficiency bill.

Mr. LYMAN. And in the mean time the washwoman is still waiting for her money.

Mr. RANDALL. Experience has shown that it is better to make these itemized appropriations than to appropriate in a lump sum. The latter plan produced evils from which we have been for years trying to escape.

Mr. LYMAN. I do not wish to press this amendment against the will of the committee. I have been directed by my committee to offer it, and it seems to me proper that it should pass.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, but was interrupted by

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, who said: I rise only to suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that wherever there are changes in the salaries, either by increase or decrease, those changes should be designated, so that the House may pass upon the question. As the bill is read we do not know where these changes occur.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report shows that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Many of us have not the report before us.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read the following:

Office of the chief clerk and superintendent: For chief clerk, including $300 as superintendent of Treasury building, $3,000; assistant superintendent of Treasury building, $2,100; an inspector of electric-light plants, gas, and fixtures for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, $1,900; three clerks of class 4; additional to one clerk of class 4 as book-keeper, $100; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; one messenger; three assistant messengers; one store-keeper, $1,200; one telegraph operator, $1,200; three elevator conductors, at $720 each; one engineer, $1,400; one assistant engineer, $1,000; two assistant engineers, at $720 each; one machinist and gas-fitter, $1,200; three firemen; five firemen, at $660 each; one coal-passer, $500; one gardener, $840; one captain of the watch, $1,400; two lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; fifty-eight watchmen; one foreman of laborers, $1,000; one skilled laborer, male, at $840; three skilled laborers, male, at $720 each; twenty-six laborers; ten laborers, at $500 each; three laborers, at $360 each; eighty charwomen, at $180 each; and for the following employés while actually employed: one foreman of cabinet-shop, at $5 per day; one draughtsman, at $4 per day; one cabinet-maker, at $3.50 per day; twelve cabinet-makers, at $3 per day each; one cabinet-maker, at $2 per day; in all, $142,106.50.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to inform us what salaries are increased or decreased in this paragraph? I presume he has the data before him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the data before me without referring to the report of the committee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This is a bill carrying appropriations to the amount of $20,000,000. There are a great number of items; and I think we ought to know where the committee have taken upon themselves to increase or decrease salaries. We may agree with them in these changes; I presume I shall do so in the main. Still, before voting upon these matters, we would like to know what these changes are. I think this information is due to the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will read the report——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not think we could tell very well even then.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will consent I will have read a paragraph from the report.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Gentlemen of the committee who are familiar with these matters ought to be able to inform us readily what the changes are.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The report shows them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then let the gentleman point them out in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Ohio should offer a pro forma amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not wish to make any objection until I understand what the facts are.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

In the Secretary's office a private secretary, at $1,800, is provided for each of the two assistant secretaries, in lieu of two clerks of class 4 omitted.

An inspector of electric-light plants, gas, and fixtures for all public buildings under control of the Treasury is provided for, at $1,900, in lieu of one clerk of class 4 omitted.

In the several divisions of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the aggregate, six less employés are provided for, and a reduction of $15,010 is made in the whole amount of salaries under the current law, and $17,089.50 under the amount of estimates submitted. The estimates, as submitted for these divisions, proposed a rearrangement of the force, which in the main is provided for.

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee have directed me to offer to this paragraph the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 505, strike out "three" and insert "five."

In line 507, strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the words "class one," in line 508, and in lieu thereof insert "two clerks of class 3, three clerks of class 2, three clerks of class 1;" and in lieu of the sum stated in lines 534 and 535 insert "$149,906.50."

Mr. HOLMAN. I will explain the effect of this amendment. The Secretary of the Treasury insists that his Department can not get along under the provisions as we have reported them; he is quite positive about that. The reductions we have proposed in the bill amount to $17,000. The effect of this amendment is to increase the amount of the appropriations as proposed in the bill not quite $7,000——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Still there is a reduction.

Mr. HOLMAN. Leaving a reduction of $10,000.

Mr. BAYNE. Is not the effect of this to legislate out of office certain clerks in order that new clerks may be appointed?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They all come under the civil-service law.

Mr. BAYNE. But will not new applications be required to fill these new places?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no. I think the Secretary is very sincere about this matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They all come under the civil-service law.

Mr. BAYNE. You make a very large increase, I observe.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; there is a reduction of $10,000 in the aggregate.

Mr. BAYNE. I observe that in the act of March 3, 1885, the total amount appropriated for this service was $128,000; now you have got it up to $149,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We have rearranged the items. The gentleman will find in the summing up that there is a reduction, as the gentleman from Indiana stated, of $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not quite $10,000.

Mr. BAYNE. I observe by the newspaper this evening that in one office alone ten or fifteen clerks have been discharged.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Where?

Mr. BAYNE. In the Comptroller's office.

Mr. CANNON. The effect of the reductions of the committee in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury are stated on page 2 of the report in the following language:

In the several divisions of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the aggregate, six less employés are provided for, and a reduction of $15,010 is made in the whole amount of salaries under the current law, and $17,089.50 under the amount of estimates submitted. The estimates, as submitted for these divisions, proposed a rearrangement of the force, which in the main is provided for.

The Secretary's office includes a number of items which have not yet been read. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is due to the House to say that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana increases the force as provided in the pending bill so that the reduction upon the appropriations for the current year is about $10,000; but still the appropriation is $7,000 less than the amount called for by the rearrangement suggested in connection with the estimates by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I wish to say further that as to many of the offices in the Treasury Department—the Auditors' offices and others—the estimates were submitted in strict conformity to the current law; that is, the estimates contemplated a continuation of the service as it is now. In every instance where this has been done, according to my recollection, the Committee on Appropriations have allowed the amount of the estimate; but as to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and all the other offices in regard to which a proposition for rearrangement was submitted, involving in most cases a reduction, the Committee on Appropriations accepted the reduction but refused the increases involved in the rearrangement—not a very great encouragement, I submit, to officers to propose rearrangement involving reductions.

I think they will take warning from this, and will ask from year to year merely a continuance of the existing service, instead of submitting rearrangements, though involving a reduction in the aggregate; because we find that under the administration of my friend from Indiana and the present Committee on Appropriations all the decreases involved in any rearrangement are accepted and all the increases are denied.

I do not care about this matter, so far as I am concerned. I am in the minority. While I do not want the public service crippled, it is no part of my business to stand here and fight the battles of the Departments as now officered or of the administration.

I simply wanted to tell the Committee of the Whole how this bill was made up and to state that in my opinion it will demoralize the executive in future, because I say again substantially wherever the heads of bureaus or Departments have submitted a rearrangement and a decrease of the appropriations, every time, without exception, the Committee on Appropriations have accepted the decrease, but deny with equal uniformity any increase where it is essential. Wherever the bill simply submitted the current appropriations without increase or decrease they have conformed to it or made such reductions as they might deem proper.

Mr. TOWNSHEND rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do hope my friend from Illinois will let us get on with the bill and have no more discussion on this point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not consent to submit without replying to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend from Indiana agree to the accuracy of the statement?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am perfectly willing to consent to every proposition of my friend from Illinois just so we can get on with the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman confesses; does he avoid an explanation?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; but I see no reason for prolonging this discussion. I want to get through with the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman admit the statement I have made is correct?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, substantially, in every respect.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not propose to plead guilty to the charges of my colleague, for he well knows that I protested all the time against the adoption of such a policy in the committee. I believe in encouraging the officers of the Departments when they submit a reduction or rearrangement of their force with a view to reducing expenditures and where they assent to it willingly. I am opposed to accepting their reduction and refusing to increase wherever it was believed to be necessary in the judgment of the Departments in the organization of their offices. I believe in paying some attention to the increases as well as to the decreases.

Now, in the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury has been making a most commendable effort to reduce the expenditures of the Government. There has been a reduction of some $80,000 in that Department in the aggregate.

A MEMBER. Oh, no!

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I assert now that the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury show a reduction in the expenditures of that Department of over $80,000, and my friend from Indiana can not dispute it.

Now, in the Treasurer's office there is some truth in what my colleague has said, that there was a disposition on the part of some of the committee to resist the reduction; but there was also a disposition on the part of some members of the committee to give the increase that was asked for. But after allowing all of the reductions and increases that have been asked for by the officers of the Treasury there is still a net reduction of some $10,000 in the Treasurer's office. It is true, as my friend from Indiana has said, that eventually, after adding the increases and deducting the decreases, there is still a final reduction of $10,000.

I rose for the purpose of making this statement, because in my judgment it is due to the officers of that Department; and I think that where such a commendable spirit is shown by public officers it should be recognized and responded to by the appropriating power of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find on a moment's reflection that I was rather too broad in my concession to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I could not help thinking so.

Mr. HOLMAN. The trouble is that the increases are mainly in the increases of salaries. I concede that the Committee on Appropriations has resisted that amendment, and to that extent I plead guilty to the charge made by my friend.

Mr. CANNON. But you denied the increases asked for and always accepted the decreases offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to any material degree. Due consideration was given to the estimates.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana if the amendment just submitted increases the number of officers to be employed in this particular branch of the public service.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not above the present law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; there is still a reduction.

Mr. TAULBEE. What is the reduction?

Mr. HOLMAN. As has been stated, the reduction will be eventually about $10,000.

Mr. PRICE. I want to ask the chairman of the committee or some other gentleman on the committee why it is that in line 517 there are three firemen with no salary fixed for their service.

Mr. HOLMAN. Because their salaries are fixed by law.

Mr. PRICE. Does the same fact exist as to the fifty-eight watchmen in lines 521 and 522, and also for the twenty-six laborers in line 525?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are all fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire the amendment I move to the other paragraph shall be considered as pending to the portion of this paragraph contained between the word "dollars" in line 505 and the word "dollars" in line 509.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations: For chief of division, $2,750; assistant chief of division, $2,400; estimate and digest clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; four clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; one laborer; and one assistant messenger; in all, $33,230.

Mr. CANNON. I desire, with the view of calling the attention of the committee, to ask whether the gentleman from Indiana has before him a statement of what the law fixes as the salary of the chief of the division of warrants and estimates.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not have it before me at this instant.

Mr. CANNON. I have it here.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is likely one of the salaries reduced ten years ago.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much?

Mr. HOLMAN. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out "$2,750" in line 537, and in lieu thereof to insert "$3,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a statement about it first. If gentlemen will look at pages 5525 and 5526 of the RECORD they will find a table published by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which states what the salary is as fixed by the Revised Statutes for all the offices appropriated for in this bill where there is a difference between the bill and the law. I wish to state this is the only officer in the list so far as I now know whose salary I shall move to increase in pursuance of the existing law. And I do it for this reason, that the gentleman who is at the head of the division of warrants and estimates performs duty for this amount that really merits a salary of $5,000 a year. I think I can call for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to corroborate the statement I now make. Some years ago his salary was decreased.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say a word. He is one of the best officers in the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; he is one of the best officers in the Government and one of the most important officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to state that ten years ago that salary was reduced from $3,000 to $2,750.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it has been $2,750 for ten years nearly. Now it is proposed to raise it.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. You make that motion.

Mr. CANNON. I do not propose to raise it, but I propose, for this valuable official, to pay him so far as my vote is concerned what the law gives him. Instead of appropriating $2,750 to allow him $250 more, instead of forcing him to go to the Court of Claims to recover that amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no danger of that in the outcome of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no estimate increasing the salary.

Mr. CANNON. Why is there no danger? I am entitled to ask the question why, and I am entitled to an answer from the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. Because this House before it finishes the bill will see it will be impossible to increase salaries and my friends can not expect otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking of what the House intends to do. I am speaking of what the law does so far as I am concerned. I know this official must do this work for $2,750, but then the law gives him the right to go to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope by unanimous consent the committee will agree to give me more time.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the consideration of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hold the floor long enough to state one thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has been objected to and it goes over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to insert——

The CHAIRMAN. You can not, because the paragraph has been passed over.

The Clerk will proceed to read the next paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am going to make my statement. And if I have to stay here all night I will make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold his amendment until the next paragraph has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of customs: For chief of division, $2,750; assistant chief of division, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; eight clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $29,590.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will be passed over, and the Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of appointments: For chief of division, $2,750; assistant chief of division, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; four clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; one clerk, $1,000; two clerks, at $900 each; three copyists, at $840 each; one assistant messenger; two laborers; in all, $23,110.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph. I want to go on with the business of the House and not have so much debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have the floor on my motion to strike out the last word, and the gentleman from Missouri has no right to take me off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the right to object to any paragraph, and when objection is made the paragraph is not before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I made the motion that the last word be stricken out, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] attempted to take me off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection has the effect of causing the consideration of the paragraph to be passed over.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. I took the floor and offered an amendment, which the Chair entertained. I want to know by what authority the gentleman from Missouri takes me off the floor by an objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks a gentleman can at any time object to the consideration of a paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Even though another gentleman holds the floor to speak to an amendment which he has offered?

Mr. BLAND. I give notice, since I understand that the committee want to go on with the bill without so much talk, that I shall object to anything that gives rise to debate.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to know whether it will be in order for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to give notice that when anybody offers an amendment to any clause of this bill he will object.

Mr. BLAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I understood we came here to-night to read the portions of this bill to which there is no objection. I intend to exercise my right as a member of this committee under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the right to object to any paragraph when under consideration.

Mr. CANNON. I want to state in reply to the gentleman from Missouri if we are to do only what business pleases that gentleman we will do no business to-night.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Missouri will do his part of the business to-night and the gentleman from Illinois can do the same.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offered an amendment to this paragraph. The gentleman from Missouri objected to the consideration of the paragraph, and as I understand has now withdrawn his objection. That leaves my motion pending. All I want to say is this, in a dozen words: My friend from Illinois, who insists this salary shall be raised, must recognize the fact that this officer has been occupying that position for ten years at the same salary as is provided in this bill. If he thinks he should have a higher salary, he should have given it to him while his party had control.

Mr. CANNON. I want to give him what the law allows him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why did you not give him what the law allows him before this? I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend by striking out these words:

Assistant chief of division, $2,000.

I wish to say to the gentleman who has charge of this bill that if any member of the Appropriations Committee is willing to state on this floor that the duties to be perfomed by this officer are absolutely necessary, and that they are duties other than those to be performed by the chief of division, I will not make the point of no quorum on this amendment. But until that is done and a similar statement is made with reference to every assistant chief of a bureau in this Department, I intend to see the appropriations shall not pass this House without a quorum.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I can not speak for the Treasury Department——

The CHAIRMAN. This paragraph has been objected to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not understand that any gentleman objects to it——

The CHAIRMAN. It was objected to previously and is passed over.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Division of public moneys: For chief of division, $2,500; assistant chief of division, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one clerk, $1 000; one clerk, $900; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one laborer, $550; in all, $24,510.

Mr. TAULBEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 562 and 563 strike out the words "assistant chief of division, $2,000."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and the House will indulge me I will say, while I can not speak from any personal knowledge in the Treasury Department, I do know the system of having an assistant chief of division is a desirable one. The chief of division is held responsible for the progress of the work, keeping it under his eye, distributing it, learning whether this employé or that properly discharges his duty; and I am absolutely sure that so far as the Interior Department is concerned this is a most admirable arrangement. It is not always possible for the chief of a division to be at his post, and it is natural for those who are in the office to appeal to some one in case of doubt as to what to do or as to distribution of the work sent into the division. It certainly does not do any harm to have an assistant, some one to perform these duties, precisely as there are a captain and a lieutenant in a company. I have no doubt it is an economical method. It is a result of experience, as they have proceeded to systematize more carefully and fully the business of the several Departments.

I will say to my friend from Kentucky my own experience was that it was desirable and, in fact, indispensable to have one who should act as an assistant chief. I do not remember now whether there was an assistant chief or not, but if there was not, there was some one designated who, in the absence of the chief, exercised a supervising care in looking after work, in crowding the work, and seeing everything was dispatched with promptness. I have no doubt of the wisdom and the propriety of the provision.

Mr. TAULBEE. The statement of the gentleman, so far as he has gone, has convinced me that my theory in reference to this matter is the correct one. If I understood him aright, he said that the office of the chief of a division was a necessary office. I agree that no division can be properly conducted without having a chief whose duty it is to see that the work is properly distributed and properly done. I understand also the importance of having some person in the absence of the chief of the division to take his place. I regard that as indispensable to the proper conduct of the service. But these assistant chiefs, according to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, are expected to perform the duty of the chief only in his absence, and that confirms my information from these Departments——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, the assistant chief performs his regular duty at all times. He is not idle when the chief is present. He performs his full quantum of work; but he is charged with this special responsibility only when the chief is absent. He may also have special duties to perform as assistant chief when the chief is present. I am sure that if my friend will investigate this subject at the Departments he will find that his objection is not well taken.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I think I have investigated this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this debate is not in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I concede that; but I thought it was going on by general consent.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 1, noes 42.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of loans and currency: For chief of division, $2,500; two assistant chiefs of divisions, at $2,100 each; eight clerks of class 4; additional to two clerks of class 4 as receiving-clerk of bonds and book-keeper, $100 each; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; four clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; fourteen clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; six laborers; superintendent of paper-room, $1,600; one paper-cutter, at $3 per day; one paper-counter, $720; twenty-four paper-counters and laborers at $620 each; in all, $69,479.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in lines 570 and 571 by striking out the words "two assistant chiefs of division at two thousand one hundred dollars each."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am satisfied that if my friend from Kentucky really understood the absolute necessity for these assistant chiefs of division he would not pursue the course he is pursuing. These officers have duties higher than those of any other clerk in a division even while the chief is present. Take, for instance, the Comptroller. We have a deputy comptroller, and the deputy comptroller is absolutely indispensable. These assistant chiefs have duties to perform which are entirely different from and higher than those of any of the other clerks. These chiefs of division have been established by law for good reasons and there are good reasons for continuing them.

All that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] said of the necessity for these officers in the Interior Department will apply to the Treasury Department with perhaps greater force than to the Interior Department. I know that my friend from Kentucky is governed by pure motives, but if he only understood the absolute necessity of these assistant chiefs he certainly would not take this course.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I object to the consideration of lines 570 and 571.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does that objection pertain to the entire paragraph or only to the lines named?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it pertains to the paragraph. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of revenue marine: For chief of division, $2,500; assistant chief of division, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; four clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, at $900; and one laborer; in all, $21,460.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in lines 584 and 585 the words "assistant chief of division, $2,000."

Mr. ROWELL. I object to the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] will indicate whether he intends to pursue this line of policy all the way through.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROWELL. I have objected to the paragraph.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman will not do that until I have submitted one question.

Mr. ROWELL. I have objected, and decline to withdraw the objection. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be considered as in any sense desirous of retarding the progress of business in this House; but I do not understand that under the special order we are expected to pass an appropriation bill carrying so large an amount of money without the privilege of discussing the merits of the bill. When I offered my first amendment, including officers of this class, I expressed my reluctance to entering upon a discussion with reference to these various propositions, and said to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if he or any other member of the Committee on Appropriations would state on this floor the nature of the work to be performed by these officers and that their work is absolutely necessary to the good of the service I would not only refrain from arguing these amendments but desist from offering them. Unless this is done——

Mr. ROWELL. I rise to a point of order. My point is that this whole paragraph has been objected to, and therefore the discussion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PARKER. It being evident that we shall not be permitted to do any business to-night, but are simply spending our time for the amusement of three or four gentlemen, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion now.

Mr. BLAND. We can find some portions of the bill to which objection will not be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the motion to rise is not insisted upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of stationery, printing, and blanks: For chief of division, $2,500; five clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; two assistant messengers; one foreman of bindery, at $5 per day; four binders, at $4 per day each; and one sewer and folder, at $2.50 per day; in all, $32,175.50.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That none of the sums hereinafter appropriated shall be expended in payment of any salary to any person or employé in the service of the United States included in the classified civil service during furlough or leave of absence or a longer period of time than thirty days in any twelve months.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph. We had better go on with something else.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood there was an agreement that all these questions should be taken up at the end of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether the agreement referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] was to the effect that this general amendment covering all the sections of the bill should be voted upon in committee when we reach the end of the bill, or was it simply agreed that the amendment should be offered at that time. I wish to know what the agreement was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has nothing to do with the agreement.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole was had——

Mr. HOLMAN. The agreement was that the proposition should be offered, subject, of course, to all objections, as if offered regularly to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, assistants to the photographer, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order may be employed in the office of the Supervising Architect to carry into effect the various appropriations for public buildings, to be paid for from such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, shall not exceed $130,000; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons employed and the amount paid to each.

Mr. HOLMAN. By instruction of the Committee on Appropriations I move to amend by striking out, in line 651, the word "thirty" and inserting "fifty." This does not increase any appropriation; it is simply the summing up of the aggregate appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman whether this is upon the estimate?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; it is exactly the estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of Customs: For Commissioner of Customs, $4,000; deputy commissioner, $2,250; two chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $49,430.

Mr. RANDALL. As we have just passed the paragraph in regard to the office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, I wish to say that as I understood that officer in the committee-room he desired another chief of division, making seven. I do not know whether the gentleman from Indiana understood that this officer would be allowed or not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the chief referred to was included in the six chiefs of division allowed by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think we agreed to an additional one.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not assert that we did; but I will assert that the Second Comptroller wants this seventh chief of division; and I will assert further that by the rearrangement of his office the Second Comptroller has reduced the expenses of his office to the extent of more than $15,000, perhaps $18,000 in the aggregate.

Mr. CANNON. The paragraph last read appropriates $4,000 for the salary of the Commissioner of Customs. The law fixes this salary at $4,500. I think a salary of $4,000 is too large. Hence I do not desire to make any motion to increase the sum named in the bill. If it were in my power I would rather move to decrease it to $3,500. But I presume we shall appropriate the $4,000, because we appropriated that much last year; and this officer will go to the Court of Claims and recover the $500 additional to which he is entitled under the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there is any proposition here. We reduced the salary nine years ago, when my friend was a great power on the Committee on Appropriations, during the Forty-seventh Congress, as he always has been, and he made no proposition to increase it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not wish to increase it now.

Mr. BLAND. If we are to have debate, I will object to the paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; do not.

Mr. CANNON. The law gives this officer a salary which is not appropriated for in this bill.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph. There is no motion made.

The CHAIRMAN. No motion is pending.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

First Auditor: For the First Auditor of the Treasury, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; seven clerks of class 4; ten clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; eighteen clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; four copyists and counters, at $900 each; two assistant messengers; and two laborers; in all, $88,810.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word. In the Revised Statutes the First Auditor is entitled, with the other Auditors, to $4,000 a year, and yet this bill only appropriates $3,600. How much it will cost the Government to defend the suit against the recovery of the $400 which is not appropriated I do not know.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is one of the numerous salaries reduced nine years ago, and since then my friend from Illinois has not proposed to increase it.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no!

Mr. BLAND. No motion has been made, and we have nothing but debate. We are here for work, and not debate.

Mr. CANNON. I am not going to lie under that imputation; and I therefore most solemnly move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph. We all know what moving to strike out the last word means. Let my objection stand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend in striking out the last word——

[Cries of "Regular Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill without objection until he reached the following paragraph:

Fourth Auditor: For the Fourth Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class 4; fourteen clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $69,390.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the committee to submit the following amendment, which is simply a rearrangement.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 738 and 739 strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve;" and in line 741, after the word "each," where it last occurs, insert "four clerks, at $800 each."

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word, and desire to inquire whether or not these paragraphs are open to amendment and discussion to-morrow, being objected to to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Just as if they had not been considered at all?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. I object to this paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear what my friend from Pennsylvania said.

Mr. BAYNE. My inquiry was, if these paragraphs are objected to and go over will they be open to amendment and consideration hereafter?

Mr. HOLMAN. But this is in conformity with the wish of the Auditor.

Mr. BAYNE. My inquiry was a parliamentary one, whether these paragraphs objected to to-night will be open to discussion and amendment to-morrow just as if they had not been objected to at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAYNE. I object to this paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in the amount.

Mr. BAYNE. There are so many changes of arrangement I wish to investigate them.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is passed over, and the Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department: For the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $3,600; deputy auditor, who may be designated to sign, in the name of the said Auditor, such letters and papers as the Auditor may direct, $2,250; chief clerk, $2,000; ten chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eighteen clerks of class 4, and additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; sixty-five clerks of class 3; seventy-seven clerks of class 2; eighty clerks of class 1; sixty clerks, at $1,000 each; one skilled laborer, at $1,000; twenty assorters of money-orders, at $900 each; fifteen assorters of money-orders, at $840 each; two messengers; seven assorters of money-orders, at $720 each; seven assistant messengers; twenty-two male laborers; three female laborers, at $660 each; and ten charwomen, at $180 each; in all, $489,910.

For the temporary force to dispose of accumulated money-orders, namely: Three clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; and four clerks, at $900 each; in all, $10,200.

Mr. CANNON. Was not the gentleman instructed to offer some amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. No. The changes there were all made in committee.

Mr. CANNON. I move, in line 775, to strike out "four" and insert "three," so it will read "three clerks, at $900 each." Having made that motion, I desire to be recognized for one moment to say that at the close of my remarks, unless some new light is given, I may possibly withdraw my amendment. Having read through these clauses appropriating for these Auditors, and all of them having passed, I desire now to say to the House we are in this condition, that each one of these Auditors is entitled to $4,000 by law in the Revised Statutes. Yet this bill only appropriates $3,600 for each one of them.

I desire to say further that each deputy auditor is entitled of $2,500 a year, while this bill only appropriates $2,250.

Well, in the grand rounding up the bill may carry less money, and at the end of the year, this coming fiscal year, I venture the prediction that every one of these Auditors and every one of these deputy auditors will be found getting together and making a test case and bringing a suit in the Court of Claims to recover the difference between the salaries fixed by law and the salaries established by this appropriation bill. The result will be that they will recover, and the Government of the United States will have to pay the amount in full which we fail to appropriate, and have rendered ourselves powerless to conform to the law so as to make them take what the bill appropriates. But we will have to appropriate not only the difference between the amount fixed here and what the law fixes but thousands of dollars besides to pay attorneys' fees and costs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that during the last nine years the salary has been the same, and that no such anticipation has been realized?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; but the conditions are changed by your new system of rules.

I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Treasurer: For the Treasurer of the United States, $6,000; assistant treasurer, $3,600; cashier, $3,600; assistant cashier, $3,200; chief clerk, $2,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; one principal book-keeper, at $2,500; one assistant book-keeper, at $2,400; two tellers, at $2,500 each; two assistant tellers, at $2,250 each; one clerk for the Treasurer, $1,800; twenty-six clerks of class 4; seventeen clerks of class 3; fifteen clerks of class 2; one coin clerk, at $1,400; twenty clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; sixty clerks, at $900 each; nine clerks, at $700 each; seven messengers; six assistant messengers; twenty-six laborers; and seven laborers, at $240 each; two pressmen, at $1,200 each; three separators, at $660 each; three feeders, at $660 each; in all, $268,700.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to state in connection with the Treasurer that I am advised he estimated for one vault clerk at $2,500. He also makes a memorandum showing that the vault clerk has exclusive charge of the vaults of the Treasury, containing $254,000,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How much?

Mr. RANDALL. Two hundred and fifty-four million dollars.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is that all? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It ought to be paid on the public debt, and then there would not be any necessity for a vault clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. It is left out of this bill, but I understood the Treasurer to say that the gentleman in charge would not object to this amendment being inserted; and therefore I call attention to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I told the Treasurer of the United States——

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRICE. I want to know what we are discussing; there is no motion pending.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, there is.

Mr. PRICE. I tell you I have heard no motion, and I venture to say the Reporter's notes will show no evidence of any.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert after the word "each," in line 782, the words "one vault clerk, two thousand five hundred dollars."

Mr. PRICE. Now I know what we have got before us.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Treasurer was anxious to have his force somewhat increased. I will state that there is a material reduction in this branch of the public service, there being some fourteen clerks at $900 each and one clerk of class 1, and I think some additional force, such as he had estimated for. I did not hesitate to say to him that the Committee on Appropriations would not have another meeting, but if the force was deemed absolutely indispensable it would be granted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I also had a talk with the Treasurer subsequently, who confirmed the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that a vault clerk is very much needed. He is a very important officer and ought to be allowed.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the force employed in redeeming the national currency (to be reimbursed by the national banks), namely: For superintendent $3,500; one principal teller and one principal book-keeper, at $2,500 each; one assistant book-keeper, $2,400; and one assistant teller, at $2,000; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; twenty clerks of class 1; fifteen clerks, at $1,000 each; ten clerks, at $900 each; three assistant messengers; in all, $77,060.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire, in line 809, to strike out "ten clerks" and insert "eleven clerks."

Mr. HOLMAN. What object is there in that?

Mr. CANNON. In the Treasurer's office we make provision for a large number of employés: For a Treasurer and assistant treasurer, a cashier and assistant cashier, a chief clerk, five chiefs of division, principal book-keeper and assistant book-keeper, two tellers, two assistant tellers, and in every case both in the office of the Treasurer and in the other bureaus of the Department we have appropriated for these salaries from $100 to $500 each less than is allowed by law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has not that been the case for years?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly it has been; but now I will say to my friend from Illinois while this has been the case for years past it has been effective because a Democratic House of Representatives with a Republican President, a Republican Treasurer, and Republican officials were in the Departments, and such decreases were properly made under proper rules of the House, and when the decrease was made it was received under the law in full and without any claim against the Government for any balance. But no sooner has a Democratic President been elected and a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury and a Democratic Treasurer and other Democratic officials come in, no sooner has that been done than you repeal the rule, and, although you do not appropriate any more, you leave these parties with rights to claim under the law the difference up to what the general law fixes the salary at; and I say now that they will come in and claim this full amount some time in the future, and they will recover it. That is all I wanted to call attention to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir, and I will answer the question if I can.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the language had been left in the first paragraph declaring these salaries were to be in full compensation for the services, would not that have prevented them from going into the courts?

Mr. CANNON. It would.

Mr. TOWSHEND. Then why did you aid in striking that out?

Mr. CANNON. I made no motion to strike that out, nor did I aid in it further than this, that in fairness and justice to the House I called its attention, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to what the bill proposed to do and what the law was. I am in the minority. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is in the majority. I am not responsible. You are responsible. And it is my duty as a member of the Committee on Appropriations to tell the Committee of the Whole and the House what is being done, and to throw the responsibility where it belongs and where the country will hold it to be, upon the Democratic majority and the Democratic administration. And it is in the performance of this duty I have done what I have done heretofore, and it is in the performance of this duty that I am doing what I am doing at this moment. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend will admit the Committee on Appropriations sought to cure that defect in our rules.

Mr. CANNON. You have got the majority in this House and can do what you choose. Why not do it, if you want to?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Register of the Treasury: For the Register of the Treasury, $4,000; assistant register, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; seventeen clerks of class 4; fifteen clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; fourteen clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; twenty-nine copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; four assistant messengers; and eight laborers; in all, $134,750.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 813, strike out "three" and insert "four;" so that it will read "four chiefs of division."

In line 815, strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen;" so that it will read "sixteen clerks of class 3."

In line 815, strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" so that it will read "eleven clerks of class 2."

In lieu of the sum stated in lines 819 and 820, insert "$139,950."

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been a very considerable reduction of the estimates, and the Register thought he required this additional force as a matter of safety.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Bureau of Statistics: For the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; three copyists, at $720 each; one messenger; two laborers; one female laborer, at $480; in all, $44,260.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was a request made by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics as to some change here. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] may be familiar with it. What was that request?

Mr. HOLMAN. There was nothing finally agreed upon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wanted to know if there was any probability of agreeing upon it, because it struck me there was a propriety in the request. I think this paragraph had better lie over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go to the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not insist on my objection.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For Chief of Bureau, $4,500; one assistant, $2,250; accountant, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,600; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; two assistant messengers; and one laborer; in all, $17,450.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word, in order to inquire where the rest of this force is appropriated for?

Mr. RANDALL. The great bulk of it is appropriated for in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. A small portion of it in the Treasurer's office.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of Life-Saving Service: For General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $4,000; assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $2,500; one principal clerk and accountant, $1,800; one topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; one civil engineer, $1,800; one draughtsman, $1,500; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; five clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $33,480.

Mr. TAULBEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 836 and 837 these words: "assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $2,500."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is an indispensable office.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am told by members of the Committee on Appropriations this is an indispensable office. I am satisfied that those gentlemen do not know what they say with reference to this particular office. The Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service during the present session of Congress wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, and, as an apology for delaying the answer to a letter which he had received from the chairman of that committee, he stated that the duties of the office of the assistant superintendent of the Life-Saving Service as well as of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service had devolved upon him for a considerable length of time, and that his correspondence was necessarily deferred.

On an investigation of this matter, which I took pains to make to my satisfaction, and I think very thoroughly, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury informed me that the man who holds this office had for a number of years been unable to perform any service or to make any compensation to the Government for the $2,500 which he had been receiving; and the only apology which he offered for not dispensing with this office or supplanting the incumbent with a more efficient man was, that the incumbent of this office was regarded by his associates as an elegant gentleman, and that he was a friend of former Secretaries of the Treasury, and that by dispensing with this office he would necessarily be compelled to turn this man out on the cold charities of the world after he had spent the period of his usefulness in the service of the Government on a salary of $2,500 per annum.

I say that this office can be dispensed with. I say that the services of this officer have been dispensed with for a number of years past, and that, according to the opinion of his most intimate acquaintances, if the present incumbent is continued in this position he will never recover sufficiently to perform any service of any considerable importance to the Government in return for the salary which he draws. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we propose to economize we may begin here. If you propose to allow these abuses to run on ad infinitum at the expense of the people who stand behind us and whose guardians we are, vote down this amendment and let these abuses continue, but I want now and here to say that this amendment can not be rejected by less than a majority of the House of Representatives. (See page 5610.)

Mr. RANDALL. Then we had better pass that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the paragraph objected to?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky says that he must have a vote of the House upon it, and I suppose it had better be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of construction of standard weights and measures: For construction and verification of standard weights and measures, including metric standards, for the custom-houses, other offices of the United States, and for the several States, and mural standards of length in Washington, D. C., the following, while actually employed, namely: One adjuster and mechanician, at $5 per day, and one laborer; in all, $2,225.

Mr. CROXTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph. I propose to amend in line 42 and line 43 by striking out the words "one laborer" and inserting in lieu thereof, "one verifier of weights and measures, at $4 per day."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the laborer is all that is required there. I ask a vote.

Mr. CROXTON. Mr. Chairman, I am assured by parties who are perfectly familiar with the business of this Department that there is an absolute necessity for a verifier of weights and measures and none for the services of a laborer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Verifying weights and measures is the business of the principal officer.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a formal amendment in order to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I want to know why it is that in line 41 and line 42 of the bill the words "while actually employed" are inserted?

Mr. HOLMAN. The provision refers to employment by the day, and those words are always inserted where the employment is by the day.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask further why the same kind of restriction is not placed on the officers for whose salary provision is made by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. The custom has always been in providing for per diem employment to use the expression "while actually employed," but it has never been applied to annual employés.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question was, why the same provision was not made applicable to those.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the general practice has been otherwise. That is all I can say. The reason for it my friend can understand as well as I can.

Mr. TAULBEE. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the attendance of the American member of the international committee on weights and measures at the general conference provided for in the convention signed May 20, 1875, the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, appropriated by the act of March 3, 1885, for this object, for the fiscal year 1886, is hereby reappropriated and made available for like purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object to that paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do you want to strike it out of the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Make your motion then.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is objected to and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue: For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division, at $2,500 each; five heads of division, at $2,250 each; one superintendent of stamp-vault, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-four clerks of class 4; twenty-five clerks of class 3; thirty-four clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1; fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each; forty clerks at $900 each; two messengers; fourteen assistant messengers; and thirteen laborers; in all, $259,190.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that paragraph by adding, after line 995, the words:

And there is further appropriated for this office the sum of $15,000 to pay salaries and expenses in collecting the tax on oleomargarine.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to reserve the point of order on that amendment. There is no existing law for the collection of any such tax, and no such tax is authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have one or more substantial amendments which I propose to offer to this paragraph, but I prefer to offer them in full committee, so I must ask that the paragraph be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is objected to and will be passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of horses and subsistence of horses for office and mail wagons, including shoeing, and for wagons, harness, and repairs of the same, $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit the following amendment:

In line 1023 strike out "three" and insert "four."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understood that all the horses which were used by these different Departments were sold a year or two ago.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not in the Treasury Department; that was in the Interior Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. These are horses for transportation purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Ah! then the announcement made in the newspapers was not correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether this is a reduction upon the law for the present year.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a reduction upon the whole, but not as to this particular item.

Mr. HISCOCK. How is it as to the particular item?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is, I believe, the same in this bill as in the law of the present year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there not a surplus in this fund this year?

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole sum was not expended last year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of coal, wood, engine oils and grease, engine-hose and cotton waste, grates, grate-baskets and fixtures, stoves and fixtures, blowers, coal-hods, pokers, shovels and tongs, $8,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed to move to amend by striking out "eight," in line 1031, and inserting "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting internal revenue:

For salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors, $1,800,000: Provided, That the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employés be increased, beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to collectors of internal revenue except the allowances provided for in section 12 of the act of February 8, 1875, as amended by section 2 of the act of March 1, 1879.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to this proviso, which, as I understand, is new legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to amend that portion of the paragraph which precedes the proviso. I move to amend by inserting after the word "increased," in line 1062, the words "in the aggregate," so as to read, "nor shall the salary of said officers and employés be increased in the aggregate beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year."

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, certainly the gentleman from Illinois must have his attention called to this new legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have this other matter attended to. My amendment does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I will object to this proposition, Mr. Chairman, and let it go over.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do you object to the whole clause?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir, the whole paragraph.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will allow me to put in this amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my objection temporarily in order that the gentleman from Illinois now on the floor, not the gentleman from Illinois to whom I just referred, may express his views on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York object to the present consideration of the paragraph?

Mr. HISCOCK. Shall I be in time if I object after the gentleman from Illinois now on the floor has been heard? If so, I will reserve my objection.

Mr. BLAND. If the object of withholding the objection is simply to allow the making of a speech, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the paragraph goes over.

Mr. SPRINGER. It goes over with my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Everything goes over.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $2,050,000.

Mr. CABELL. Now, as the other paragraph has gone over, let this go over too. I object.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore."

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph in full Committee of the Whole, and therefore I object to its present consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph goes over.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill whether the salary of the assistant treasurer is reduced by this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir, it is reduced somewhat.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the salary fixed by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is objected to.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for "office of assistent treasurer at Boston."

Mr. COLLINS. I object to this paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague will not insist on that motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. We are not doing anything; we are simply reading over these sections.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are making very good progress.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. If we are doing any good by staying here I will not insist on the motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are making good progress upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his motion?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I do.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Chicago."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object to the present consideration of this paragraph.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati."

Mr. COLLINS. I object to the present consideration of this paragraph.

The Clerk read the paragraph making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at New York."

Mr. HEWITT. I object to the present consideration of this paragraph.

Mr. BLAND. I will state that I propose to object to the present consideration of all the paragraphs in regard to assay offices. The Committee on Appropriations somehow or other have omitted the assay office at Saint Louis.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are several of the paragraphs which might be read.

Mr. BLAND. No, I think all should go over together.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis: For assistant treasurer, $4,000; chief clerk and teller, $2,500; assistant teller, $1,800; book-keeper, $1,500; assistant book-keeper and one clerk, at $1,200 each; messenger, $1,000; three watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $15,360.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the compensation of the assistant treasurer at Saint Louis.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, it was reduced $500.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. At Saint Louis, Mo.?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why has it been reduced $500?

The CHAIRMAN. It is objected to and will be passed over, and the Clerk will proceed to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $3,000; book-keeper, $2,500; one chief clerk, $2,400; assistant cashier, receiving teller, and assistant book-keeper, at $2,000 each; coin-teller and one clerk, at $1,800 each; one clerk, $1,400; one messenger, $840; and four watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $27,120.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask in reference to this whether there is a reduction of salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the same as for the current year.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Indiana must know that these salaries will have to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, certainly; $4,500 to this officer.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not ingenuous or dealing frankly with the House in this supply bill to reduce the appropriation below the amount fixed by law for this salary when the gentleman knows the salary will have to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I know the amount that will have to be paid is $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is merely postponing the payment of the salary as fixed by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last Congress reduced the salary to $4,500 and it was concurred in by the Senate. It is the law for this year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why has the gentleman reduced it for this year?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not below that for the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the salary was to be reduced, why did not the gentleman bring in a law for that purpose?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody asked for more than has been appropriated.

Mr. HISCOCK. That may all be, but you know the salary fixed by law will have to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman propose to increase it?

Mr. HISCOCK. What is that?

Mr. HOLMAN. Do you propose to increase the amount?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, I do not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then read on.

Mr. RANDALL. If I remember the law aright it fixes this salary at $6,000 a year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well, then; why did not the Committee on Appropriations appropriate $6,000 for the salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody asked for more than $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then this bill creates a deficiency, and you know it. The gentleman having charge of the bill must know it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the last word. I want to say my recollection is that the law fixes this salary at $6,000 a year. The appropriation bill for the current fiscal year fixes it at $5,000. This bill for the next fiscal year fixes it at $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well; I ask the gentleman why the salary fixed by law is not appropriated in this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody asked for more than is here appropriated.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is not this to create a deficiency?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody has asked for any more.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not the question I am asking.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill before it becomes a law will provide, as we have provided during the last ten years, that this amount is received in full compensation.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not the question. It is proposed in this bill to make part payment of salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to the gentleman we expect this bill to pass as in the last ten years, making it in full payment of salary.

Mr. RANDALL. Since I last spoke I have obtained the law and know I am right in my former statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the law?

Mr. RANDALL. Six thousand dollars for this office.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why, then, does not this bill appropriate $6,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because $4,500 is enough.

Mr. HISCOCK. You know you are only making partial payment of this salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody asked for any more.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman proposes, then, only to make partial payment?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; we do not propose to make partial payment. The gentleman knows very well the obstacle which seems to exist for a moment is only temporary. This bill will pass through as it has done for the last ten years. There will be no robbery of the Treasury, I can assure my friend of that.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I must object to the paragraph unless we go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have got through with this paragrapn and now let us go to the next.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States mints and assay offices:

Mint at Philadelphia: For salary of the superintendent, $4,500; for the assayer, melter and refiner, coiner, and engraver, four in all, at $3,000 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each; cashier, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,250; book-keeper, abstract clerk, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each; cashier's clerk, warrant clerk, and register of deposits, at $1,700 each; assistant weigh clerk and assayer's computation clerk, at $1,600 each; in all, $41,550.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $293,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs (and purchases not exceeding $300 in value, of specimen coins and ores for the cabinet of the mint), $100,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the estimate for that service?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer. The estimate is $318,000. I move to add $65,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary is $4,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not asking in reference to the salaries in this particular instance, but what I desire to call the attention of the committee is whether there is not here a deliberate effort, or determined effort, on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to create a deficiency?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No.

Mr. HISCOCK. I prefer to hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. There can be no deficiency; the committee could not appropriate specifically for salaries, because the amount of the service is indefinite.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the words "two hundred and ninety-three thousand," in lines 1230 and 1231, and insert "three hundred and fifty-eight thousand." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I make this amendment, sir, for the purpose of stating to the House that this appropriation is decreased here as well as the appropriation for the mint at Carson City, which is dropped out entirely, $114,000, as well as $10,000 for incidental and contingent expenses at Philadelphia, as well as a decrease for the mint at San Francisco, purely upon the ground that the majority of the committee desire to decrease the total amount of this bill, and in that manner to deceive the country by this apparent reduction, relying upon a permanent appropriation from the profit fund of the silver dollar to make up this deficiency. It has been conceived for the purpose of deceiving in the formation of this bill by making upon its face an apparent reduction when in point of fact it would be a large increase.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, in which the Republican party had a majority, we founded the precedent of appropriating for this work what was actually necessary, so that all men in all parts of the country could see just what this service for the mints cost. But the Committee on Appropriations now deliberately, and with their eyes wide open, cut down this appropriation, expecting to pay from a secret fund appropriated for the silver dollar the amount that this appropriation is reduced.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say to the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. BLAND. I object to the paragraph for the purpose of avoiding debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the paragraph, there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that I can be taken off the floor by the Chair because a gentleman makes an objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided this same question before. There is nothing before the committee if the paragraph is objected to.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that the amount appropriated in this bill for this purpose is appropriated in the usual way, the way that has been followed for a long time. It was the practice under your administration—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs (and purchases, not exceeding $300 in value, of specimen coins and ores for the cabinet of the mint), $100,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word, and for this reason: I wish to ask if it is a fact that the profit made on the purchase of silver bullion which is coined into silver dollars by the Government is being specifically appropriated for the purpose of paying salaries, or for any other purpose to which it is applied?

Mr. RANDALL. Why the gentleman knows as well as anybody that the appropriations for the coinage has under recent administrations been paid for in the same manner that it will be paid for under the present administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I want to find out if there is a specific appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me answer the gentleman: And whatever amount is essential to make up the necessary cost to the Government of coining what is known as the Bland dollar comes out of that fund which represents the earnings. If the gentleman had read the report of the Secretary of the Treasury he would find that it is four and a half millions of dollars a year and is one of the receipts of the Government.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman to claim that to any considerable extent this money is paid in salaries without being specifically appropriated?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been the uniform practice.

Mr. RANDALL. And in that respect we are simply following the example set us by former administrations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very likely; but you claim now to have a reform administration, and why do not you reform this system?

Mr. HOLMAN. The trouble is you can not tell how to appropriate specifically for the service. You can not tell what the service at these mints is going to be.

Mr. RANDALL. You can not fix the exact amount, and therefore you must allow leeway, and the amount necessary is therefore taken out of the fund which is available for this purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if there is a sum of money amounting to $4,000,000 a year which can be expended in the discretion of the Treasury Department, it would be wise to add here a provision that it should not be expended unless specifically appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been an increasing sum, and the aggregate now is over $20,000,000.

Mr. HEWITT. Has it any real existence, or is it on paper?

Mr. RANDALL. It is reported as having reached that amount.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Where is it?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the Treasury.

Mr. HEWITT. Is it really in existence?

Mr. RANDALL. It is a fund existing within the purview of the law. The Government spends so much money for the purchase of bullion, which is put into dollars, and this fund arises from the profit.

Mr. HEWITT. Let me ask the gentleman if we are not simply piling up a great big deficiency that has got to be settled some time?

Mr. RANDALL. I think not, in this respect.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I inquire of the gentleman how much of this money in the present year has been expended in the payment of salaries?

Mr. RANDALL. I never like to speak about figures unless I have them precisely before me.

Mr. HISCOCK. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] can answer my question?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has only been applied to the payment of workmen and adjusters, not to the body of salaries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has expired.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read the following paragraph, under the heading "Mint at San Francisco, Cal.:"

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $170,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there another reduction there?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no material reduction. This stands on substantially the same principle. Taking the aggregate of the appropriations of this bill together it is substantially the same for these expenses as the bill for the present year.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HOLMAN. On this particular item the appropriations are up to the estimate.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the law of the present year?

Mr. HOLMAN. I speak only of the estimates. I have not the law before me.

Mr. HISCOCK. I inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if it has been the intention in framing this bill to reduce the appropriation below the amount necessary for the service with the expectation that what is required is to be paid from this profit in the coinage of silver?

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill has been framed in this respect on exactly the same principle as the appropriation bills have been for a number of years past, with the understanding that if there be any sum required beyond that appropriated it will be taken out of the accumulation growing out of the coinage of silver.

Mr. HISCOCK. So that, in fact, there has been no economy practiced in this bill in this respect?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman had asked me that question at an earlier moment I would have told him there is no economy so far as this item is concerned, and could not be from the nature of the case.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that I do not understand the gentleman from Indiana to be accurate in his answer to him. On the contrary, I understand these appropriations for the mints have been reduced over $220,000 below the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand it, the Committee on Appropriations has reduced here the appropriations $220,000 for the purpose of showing economy; but in fact the bill in this respect is not reducing the expenses of the Government the amount that is to be expended a single dollar.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is exactly right in that statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say to my friend from Indiana that this is not a frank treatment of the House and the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman must not take it for granted that we are not following out in this particular completely the policy of the past administration.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman is not following out the policy of the past administration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Take this particular item. The estimate was $150,000. Afterward an additional estimate came in. We have appropriated every dollar of the money so far as this item is concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. I will explain that in a moment if you will allow me. They are coining silver to the amount of about $1,700,000 in Philadelphia. The design is to coin $800,000 at New Orleans. That causes the reduction that appears here in the expenses of the San Francisco mint.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I understand it. For years we have heard it preached here on this floor that we should have specific appropriations; that money should be specifically appropriated, and that no indefinite sum should be left in the hands of any Department for expenditure without Congress exercising supervision. Now, as I understand, here are millions of dollars——

Mr. HOLMAN. Why did not my friend from New York correct that when he had it in his power to do it?

Mr. HISCOCK. If I had known it I would have corrected it. If I had been on the Committee on Appropriations and there had been an indefinite sum amounting to $4,000,000 a year that any Department had the discretion to expend as it saw fit, I would have corrected that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman say that was not the case when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. RANDALL. Two years was a long enough time to find such a fact out.

Mr. McKENNA. I object to the consideration of the paragraph.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Mint at New Orleans, La.: For salary of the superintendent, $3,500; for the assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, three in all, at $2,500 each; cashier and chief clerk, at $2,000 each; assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, $1,900 each; abstract clerk and book-keeper, at $1,600 each; weigh clerk and assayer's computation clerk, at $1,600 each; register of the deposits, warrant clerk, and assistant weigh clerk, at $1,250 each; in all, $30,850.

Mr. GAY. Is it in order to offer an amendment to this paragraph at line 1264.

Mr. RANDALL. I will give the amount in 1885 for the coinage of the Bland dollar. It may as well go into the RECORD, so that we shall not have to answer the gentleman from New York on some other occasion as to the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the work "each," in line 1264, add "cashier's clerk, at $1,100,"

Mr. RANDALL. I want to state——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] has the floor.

Mr. GAY. I offer that amendment, and desire to insist upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the Secretary of the Treasury has concluded that that is not necessary.

Mr. GAY. I insist upon the amendment, and if it can not be adopted I shall object to the further consideration of the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to continue the statement which I was making (and in which the Chair interrupted me, no doubt quite properly) in answer to the inquiry that has been made as to the amount of money that is usually paid out under the indefinite appropriation by the act of February 28, 1878. The aggregate amount expended in the silver-coining mints for the coinage of the Bland dollar is $156,942.22. It is distributed as follows: Philadelphia, $112,846.46; San Francisco, $744; Carson, $659.90; New Orleans, $42,691.86. This aggregate represents the amount expended for this purpose in addition to the regular appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to section 3526 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

In order to procure bullion for the silver coinage authorized by this title, the superintendents, with the approval of the Director of the Mint as to price, terms, and quantity, shall purchase such bullion with the bullion fund. The gain arising from the coinage of such silver bullion into coin of a nominal value exceeding the cost thereof shall be credited to a special fund, denominated the silver profit fund. This fund shall be charged with the wastage incurred in the silver coinage, and with the expense of distributing such silver coins as hereinafter provided. The balance to the credit of this fund shall be, from time to time, and at least twice a year, paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. This paragraph has not been considered at all. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 1, noes 33.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Denver, Colo.: For salary of the assayer in charge, $2,250; for melter, $2,250; chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk, at $1,600; one clerk, at $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,400; in all, $10,700.

For wages of workmen, $14,000.

For incidental and contingent expenses, $6,000.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 1280.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 1280 insert:

"Assay office at Saint Louis, Mo.: Assayer in charge, $2,500; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $3,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $3,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the present consideration of that amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I object to the further consideration of the paragraph.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object to all the remaining paragraphs relating to assay offices.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in relation to the Carson mint. I suppose it will be objected to, but in connection with it I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have received from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the director of the mint at Carson.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint, inclosed herewith, in reference to the omission from the legislative bill of an appropriation for the support of the United States mint at Carson, Nev., for the year ending June 30, 1887, with the recommendation that an appropriation be made in accordance with the suggestion of the Director of the Mint.

Very respectfully,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as reported to the House of Representatives is without any appropriation for the United States mint at Carson, from the fact that at the same date a letter was addressed you reporting the fact of the practical "cessation of all kinds of business at the mint at Carson since the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar, June 1, 1885." I saw no grounds "for an estimate of expenditures at this mint for the coming year." But it was stated that "should the mint be closed as recommended the only provision which need be submitted to Congress accordingly would be for a custodian and for what assistance might be deemed necessary."

In the omission of any specific estimate for the mint at Carson, therefore, no appropriation has been reported to the House. I desire to call your attention to the requirement of an appropriation of at least $7,500 for the proper care and custody of the building and of the delicate and valuable machinery and apparatus therein contained.

I have also to submit the proposition whether it would not be well to suggest for the consideration of Congress an appropriation the same as that for the present fiscal year, especially in view of the fact that representations have been made to the Bureau of the Mint of the readiness on the part of the producers of bullion to deposit the same at the mint at Carson, instead of sending it to private refineries, on condition that certain benefits which it is claimed are conferred by the law, and which during the present year have been withheld from this institution in common with some others by the action of the Department, are restored.

I may say, indeed, that it is doubtless true that the cessation of deposits at the Carson mint was very largely due, first to the payment of depositors by draft instead of in cash; and second to the imposition of a "transportation charge" upon depositors for cost of transportation of refined bullion to some coinage mint or to the assay office at New York, especially as the charge made by the express companies to the Government, and so imposed upon depositors, has been in excess of rates paid by private shippers.

I desire also to call attention to the fact that omission of the usual appropriation for the United States mint at Carson will deprive that institution of the means to reopen, if in the course of the year, at the discretion of the Department, it should be deemed expedient.

I have already explained the details of this matter to the chairman of the subcommittee as well as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Very respectfully,

JAMES P. MITCHELL,
Director of the Mint.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Appropriation for the Carson mint for the year ending June 30, 1886.

For salaries:
Superintendent	$3,000
Assayer	2,500
Melter and refiner	2,500
Coiner	2,500
Assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and assistant coiner, at $2,000 each	6,000
Assistant chief clerk	2,250
Cashier, book-keeper, and weigh clerk, at $2,000 each	6,000
Abstract clerk and register of deposits, at $1,800 each	3,600
Assayer's computation clerk	1,200
Total	29,550
For wages of workmen and adjusters	60,000
For incidental and contingent expenses	25,000
Total	114,550

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Alaska: For salary of governor, $2,600; judge, $2,500; attorney, marshal, and clerk, $2,500 each; four commissioners, $1,000 each; four deputy marshals, $750 each; in all, $19,600.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. It will be found on examining the statutes——

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to the consideration of the paragraph in order that we may go on with the bill. My colleague can bring that up to-morrow.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Arizona: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, $1,800; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all, $13,900.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the provision of the Bland act. I have read section 3526 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that the gain arising from the coinage of silver shall only be applied to distributing the coin. In the Bland act I find this provision:

And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coin shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage.

Now, I ask the gentleman how it is that this gain is applied to make up the deficiency in running the assay offices and the mints?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because the expense at that coinage is made a permanent appropriation by another act.

Mr. RANDALL. What has the gentleman from New York read from?

Mr. HISCOCK. From the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the Bland act is in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have read section 3256 of the Revised Statutes, and also from the Bland act. This is an important question, and I think we had better understand it. There is a good deal involved in it. I certainly was not aware that this large sum of money was disbursed without being specifically appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole subject has gone over until to-morrow, anyway.

Mr. HISCOCK. My object in reading these provisions of law was to ask the gentleman to give me a reference to any other law that applies to this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman to read from the statute of 1874.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. The Bland act changes that as to the manner of allowing money to be taken out of the Treasury for the coinage of the Bland dollar.

Mr. HISCOCK. The provision is:

And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coin shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage.

Now, what I want to know is, under what provision of law this money is expended unless for the distribution of the coin.

Mr. RANDALL. I will read the language of the Bland act:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly as fast as so purchased in such dollars; and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provision of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Thus the gentleman will see the money is taken from the Treasury for the coinage of the Bland dollar under the provision of law which I have just read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have the Bland act before me and I will read a clause from it:

And cause the same to be coined monthly as fast as so purchased in such dollars; and a sum to carry out the foregoing provision of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew it. Whatever interpretation should be put upon this section of the Bland act, whether the power exists to take this money out of the Treasury in the manner in which it has been taken out ever since the enactment of law, is a question which should be determined by the law officers of the Government. The practice has been to pay these expenses, as provided in this bill, partly out of the annual appropriation and partly out of the fund accumulating in the Treasury as a seigniorage fund.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman whether it would not be wise to correct this evil, for I believe it is an evil.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moved an amendment and was recognized to debate it.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Dakota: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and five associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800; $22,400.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read $2,600 as the salary of the governor of Dakota and inserting $3,500. This is the amount to which the governor of that Territory is now entitled under the permament law.

That great Territory ought now to be made into two States; and by and by it may constitute four States if our Democratic friends keep it out long enough. It has now more population than many of the States of this Union. In point of territory it is vastly larger than any State of the Union except Texas. It is a great and growing Territory. People from my State and from the State of the gentleman from Indiana and other portions of the country are moving in year by year by thousands. The governor of that Territory, holding such a responsible position, ought to have the salary which the law allows him, $3,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why did not the gentleman during the Forty-seventh Congress appropriate $3,500 for this salary?

Mr. BLAND. We are having the same old discussion and contest over again. I object to the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. But for the objection I would be glad to answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and I will answer him tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the paragraph goes over.

The Clerk read the paragraphs relating to the Territory of Montana.

Mr. TOOLE. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill; and after he had read for some time.

Mr. CABELL said: Mr. Chairman, I desired to make objection to the paragraphs in regard to the Territory of New Mexico, in order that that matter might go over.

Several MEMBERS. It is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have got by that portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It has gone over, as the Chair understands.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the office of the Inspector-General: For one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 1; one assistant messenger; in all $3,720.

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall have to object to the present consideration of this paragraph

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following clerks and others to be employed by the Quartermaster-General in the investigation of claims for settlement by the Treasury Department under the act of July 4, 1864: One clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; ten clerks of class 1; three assistant messengers; and ten agents, at $1,400 each; in all, $31,560: Provided, That the clerks of class 2 now employed in this office may be employed as clerks of class 1, but the number to be and remain in the last-named class shall not be in excess of the number hereinabove specified.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order on the proviso just read, unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] desires to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proviso is intended to prevent the incurring of expenses to the Government without any corresponding benefit; but let it go out.

Mr. HISCOCK. We all understand what the object is. The intention is by law to displace the present incumbents.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go out.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the Chair rules the proviso out?

The CHAIRMAN. The proviso is ruled out.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill for some time, when

Mr. HOLMAN said: Mr. Chairman, we have got along with the bill so well that I now move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. BLOUNT (at 10 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of the congress of the Workingmen's Club of the United States, praying for the passage of the bill providing for a system of post-office savings-banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: Memorial of various citizens of Minnesota, asking that salt fish be put on the free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. I. H. TAYLOR: Petition of General E. S. Holloway and 122 others, ex-soldiers and citizens of Columbiana County, Ohio, praying for the amendment of the pension laws so as to conform to the recommendations of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 12, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON. I present the petition of Park, Brother & Co., Chess, Cook & Co., and several thousand leading and influential firms of Western Pennsylvania, representing about $50,000,000 capital, praying an appropriation of $153,000, as repeatedly recommended by Col. William E. Merrill, to commence a dam near Herr's Island, Allegheny River, in the port of Pittsburgh, Pa. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of George B. Corkhill, of Washington, D. C., praying for legislation providing for the payment of rent due under leases of certain buildings used for post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GEORGE presented the petition of Mrs. Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, of Natchez, Miss., praying to be reimbursed for certain property taken by the United States during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER presented a resolution adopted by T. J. Hungerford Post, No. 39, Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the amendment to the Mexican war pension bill proposed by Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition of 46 citizens of Rhode Island, praying that the word "nativity" may be inserted in the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I present a memorial adopted at a meeting of citizens of Northeastern California and Southeastern Oregon, held at Fort Bidwell April 5, 1886, remonstrating against the contemplated abandonment of Fort Bidwell, California, and setting forth many reasons for such remonstrance. They state that the post is situated within the heart of the Pi-Ute Nation, a tribe of Indians which are of a strictly nomadic character, scattered in small but innumerable bands over a vast territory, the part they played during the Bannock war of 1878 showing them to be an enemy not to be despised; that a great portion of this tribe are opposed to living on a reservation, and would undoubtedly resort to arms were such action made compulsory, but the memorialists do not believe harsh measures necessary, for under the restraining influence of the military, whose presence they greatly respect, they will become more and more civilized, and in a few years the country will be sufficiently settled to dispense with troops. This post, the memorialists say, as will be observed by reference to the map, is most favorably situated in a military point of view; that it exerts a moral effect as far as the Pyramid Lake reservation on the south, the Klamath reservation on the west, the Harney Valley and Malheur reservation on the north and east, and that the very fact that the memorialists are located 200 miles from the nearest railroad sufficiently indicates the importance of a garrison in an isolated and sparsely settled region.

Various other reasons are stated why the post should not be abandoned. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Gainesville, Fla., as follows:

Resolved, That the proposed forfeiture by Congress of the lands granted to the Florida Railway and Navigation Company is regarded by this board as not only injurious to the interests of the State, but unjust to the rights of the said company.

I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I present resolutions adopted by the executive committee and the committee on the harbor of New York of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, favoring an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the beginning of the permanent work of deepening the water over Sandy Hook Bar to 30 feet at low tide. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I also present a petition of similar purport, which has been prepared and signed by a very large number of leading commercial men of the city of New York, praying that the appropriation be made, and stating that "the undersigned believe this to be of paramount importance not only to the commerce of this city but to that of the entire country." As the petition is short, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, as I shall desire to refer to it hereafter.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Commerce Committee of the United States Senate having put into the river and harbor bill an amendment appropriating $1,000,000 for commencing the permanent work of deepening the water over Sandy Hook Bar to 30 feet at low tide, the undersigned, merchants of New York, hereby express their approval of the same, and respectfully request the Senators and Representatives from this State to do all in their power to secure the passage of this amendment by the Senate, and also the concurrence of the House therein.

The undersigned believe this to be of paramount importance not only to the commerce of this city but to that of the entire country.

Mr. LOGAN presented a resolution adopted by the directors of the Chicago (Ill.) Board of Trade favoring certain proposed legislation which will hereafter prevent the interference of certain persons with interstate commerce and punish them for unlawful acts, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lebanon, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill providing for the construction of what is known as the merchants' bridge at Saint Louis, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of ex-soldiers and citizens of Delavan, Minn., praying for an extension of the provisions of the arrears-of-pension act; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a resolution adopted by Friendship Assembly, Knights of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the bill taxing oleomargarine, and thereby destroying a legitimate and important industry, which gives employment to several thousand men. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5553) for the relief of E. J. Phillips; and

A bill (H. R. 3998) for the relief of Susan A. Wamack, administratrix of the estate of Stephen M. Farish, deceased.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4139) for the relief of Thomas Sampson, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, I report the same back with a substitute. The committee report the Senate bill as an amendment to the House bill, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and insert the Senate bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 988) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2652) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Florida, to Point Jupiter, Florida, and the establishment of a signal station; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 874) for the establishment of a seacoast telegraph line to Jupiter Inlet, Florida, and a signal station, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report, to accompany the bill (H. R. 6043) to authorize the improvement of the water-power in the Mississippi River at Little Falls, Minn., heretofore reported by him.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2646) authorizing the Postmaster-General to pay rent of certain buildings leased for post-offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2647) for the relief of Caroline P. Bolton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2648) providing for a survey of the harbor at Bar Harbor, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2649) to provide for the bringing of suits by citizens of the United States against the Government thereof in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2650) to pay salaries of timber agents of the United States before the war of the rebellion standing to their credit on the books of the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2651) for the relief of Lincoln W. Tibbetts, of Portland, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to give a notice. On Thursday evening before the Senate adjourned the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. Yesterday it was agreed by the Senator from Connecticut and myself that on Monday morning after the morning business the motion to reconsider should be taken up by the Senate, and the Senator from Connecticut stated that he would announce it yesterday and have it entered in the RECORD of to-day, so that there would be no misunderstanding about it. Failing to obtain that opportunity, I suppose, it is not so entered, and the Senator from Connecticut is absent to-day.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Kentucky will pardon me, I will state that the Senator from Connecticut informed me last night that he desired to have the notice given, and asked me if I would not give it.

Mr. BECK. I say he desired to give the notice yesterday, but failing to obtain the opportunity to do so and he being absent to-day I give it now at his request, that on Monday after the morning business I shall call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HOAR. All right.

PROPOSED CONGRESS OF AMERICAN NATIONS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the notice given by the Senator from Tennessee yesterday that he desired to address the Senate on the bill (S. 2362) to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations that bill will be regarded as before the Senate, and the Senator from Tennessee is recognized as entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence and pardon of Senators if I violate any of the time-honored customs of the Senate at this early moment of my service in this honorable body in now seeking to address them upon so vital and important a question as is involved in the bill (S. 2362) introduced by my friend, the Senator from Maine, Hon. Mr. FRYE, with whom I had the honor and pleasure of a long association in the House of Representatives. I would not say a word but from a strong sense of duty to the people whom I in part represent upon this floor, and whose present and future interests are, in my judgment at least, deeply interwoven with and in the policy sought to be inaugurated by the adoption of this measure; a measure, however, Mr. President, that not alone affects the interests of the people of the State of Tennessee but that of the Union; a question, too, not alone for this century but for centuries to come; not alone for the people of these States constituting the American Union but for the states, nationalities, and empires that now, or which may in the great future, govern and control the American continent; a question, Mr. President (ever since I have had the honor to be a representative of the people in the national councils of the Union), in which I have taken great interest and upon which I have heretofore, in the other branch of Congress, spoken on different occasions, and from which speeches I shall on the present occasion quote liberally.

The Senate bill referred to is in words as follows:

A bill to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to invite, on behalf of the Government and people of the United States, delegates from each of the Republics of Mexico, of Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and from the Empire of Brazil, to assemble in Washington on the 1st day of October, 1887, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to meet delegates on the part of the United States, to consider such questions and recommend such measures as shall be to the mutual interest and common welfare of the American States.

SEC. 2. That in forwarding the invitation to the constituted authorities of the several independent governments of the American hemisphere, the President of the United States shall set forth that the conference is called to consider—

First. Measures that shall tend to preserve the peace and promote the prosperity of the several American States.

Second. Measures toward the formation of an American customs union, under which the trade of the American nations with each other shall, so far as is possible and profitable, be promoted.

Third. The establishment of regular and frequent communication between the ports of the several American States and the ports of each other.

Fourth. The establishment of a uniform system of customs regulations in each of the independent American States to govern the mode of importation and exportation of merchandise and port dues and charges, a uniform method of determining the classification and valuation of such merchandise in the ports of each country, and a uniform system of invoices, and the subject of the sanitation of ships and quarantine.

Fifth. The adoption of a uniform system of weights and measures, and laws to protect the patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks of citizens of either country in the other, and for the extradition of criminals.

Sixth. The adoption of a common silver coin, to be issued by each government in such an amount proportionate to the population of each as may be determined upon, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American States.

Seventh. An agreement upon and recommendation for adoption to their respective governments of a definite plan of arbitration of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter exist between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be peaceably settled and wars prevented.

Eighth. And to consider such other subjects relating to the welfare of the several states represented as may be presented by any of said states.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be disbursed under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, for expenses incidental to the conference.

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, twenty-four delegates to said conference, who shall serve without compensation other than their actual necessary expenses, of whom at least three shall be learned in international law, and the remainder men who are actively engaged in agriculture, manufacturing, and the exportation and importation of merchandise.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of State shall appoint such clerks as may be necessary, and provide for the publication by the Public Printer of so much of the proceedings of the conference, in both the English and Spanish languages, as the conference may require.

I deem it proper, Mr. President, in giving the reasons which induce me to support this bill primarily, to invoke the attention of the Senate to the following exhibit of the international commerce of the world, as taken from Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics:

*Reduced for 1880 at $5 per pound.

Or, expressing the result in dollars, that the value of the sea-going commerce of the world was, in 1830, $1,610,000,000; in 1840 it was $2,495,000,000; in 1850, $3,735,000,000; in 1860, $6,705,000,000; in 1870, $9,354,000,000; and in 1880, $13,440,000,000. How marvelous and gigantic this growth and expansion!

It will be seen further from the exhibit that the foreign commerce of the ranking commercial powers of the world is as follows:

Great Britain	$2,875,000
British colonies	1,810,000
France	1,695,000
Germany	$1,575,000
United States	1,545,000

It will be further seen that while the united commerce of these countries represents more than two-thirds of that of the entire world, the flag of the British Empire floats over nearly one-half, and that the United States has about one-sixth. But before making any remarks upon these statistical facts there are others to be noted, to wit, those representing the production of commercial wealth and its transportation. And, here again, Mr. President, I quote a table from Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics:

Industries.

	Agriculture.	Manufactures.	Commerce.	Transportation.	Total.
United Kingdom	£266,000,000	£818,000,000	£570,000,000	£186,000,000	£1,840,000,000

It will be seen that the United States is first in agriculture, first in manufactures, fourth in commerce, and first in transportation. This includes foreign and domestic.

Another table by the same author exhibits the "power" available for industries, which shows the United States to be largely in the lead. Indeed, that the ratio, comparing Europe combined, is in the following proportions: Europe, 64 per cent.; United States, 36 per cent.

Mr. President, without exhibiting any tables of population, I will assume that Senators will assent to the general statement that I make, that the ranking countries, in this respect, are:

China, with over		300,000,000
The United Kingdom	50,000,000	250,000,000
Colonies	200,000,000
Russia		90,000,000
The United States		55,000,000
Germany and colonies		50,000,000
France and colonies		45,000,000
Austria		45,000,000

Hitherto, and within the lifetime of our nationality, the Government of China has made but little if any effort to place herself in the attitude of extending her territory or commerce so as to be considered in competition or rivalry with the other named powers. The struggle for rank and dominion in "wealth, power, honor" has been in these latter years mainly between Great Britain, Russia, France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and the United States.

It has been the history of the world that with the overproduction of wealth and population new fields of occupancy and enterprise must be and are sought. Far behind the drama of the Roman Empire history and tradition alike concur in attesting this. And the record of Europe's resistance to the encroachments of the East, as well as Europe's invasion of the western hemisphere, is but a continued recital of this fact. The story of surplus in population and overproduction in wealth is written over and over again in the struggles and rivalries of nationalities and peoples. It is one in which the weak go down and the strong go forward. And again at this moment is the "struggle on" between the great commercial powers referred to.

Mr. President, looking at the statistical facts which I have briefly arrayed, and taking our personal knowledge of the grand aggregate of the wealth and resources of these United States, living witnesses as we are of the immense and rapid progress that has been made in all the avenues of power in the brief space of our lives; realizing as we do that our country stands now second only in all the elements of industrial wealth to the empire of Great Britain (representing fully 300,000,000 of population) and far beyond that of any other nationality; and, sir, reckoning the vast amount of our agricultural and manufacturing products, as shown in the immense volume of our foreign and domestic trade, all attesting the great wealth and prosperity which the recent years have given to our labor and industry, and realizing the tremendous increase in our population, we come to contemplate the possibilities of our national grandeur, resources, and power, and endeavor to grasp the consideration of the demands of our vast industrial wealth for commercial outlets, and not only now but in the near future, and which yearly becomes more urgent and necessary by the constant increase in population, increase in production of wealth, and increase in domestic facilities to reach the markets of the world. We are brought directly and immediately to the conclusion that our domestic legislation and our foreign diplomacy should, nay, must, become responsive to these demands and necessities; and that our statesmanship, whether in legislative hall or in the Cabinet, must keep pace with American progress.

The American statesman should not only look to the growth of the trade and power of his own country but also to that of our competitors and customers. He should know and govern his conduct by the needs and kindly disposition of its customers and friends, and carefully study the resources of its rivals and thwart their antagonistic policy. In so doing no timidity should mark his action or subservient deference to the equanimity of his adversary control his counsel. Knowing the rights and interests of his own country, he should dare maintain them.

While, Mr. President, we recognize with exultant pride the marked increase in our foreign and domestic trade and the great development in the capacity of this country to supply the wants of the world, yet it must be noted and admitted that this has not been made at the expense of any decline in the volume of the exports and imports of other countries. While the ratio of progress may be in our favor, yet with nearly equal stride have our competitors kept pace with us in the race.

The immense increase in the commerce of the world, as shown in the table which I have submitted to the attention of the Senate, is a resultant from the improved facilities for the products of labor given by steam. The railway car and the ship moved by steam have wrought miraculous changes in the civilization of mankind. With this mechanical power applied thus, and in other fields of development obedient to the will of man, and with the multiplication of the artificial wants of man, which it is said marks improvement and progress in civilization, no one can foretell the limit to which trade and commerce may extend. It is an accepted axiom that the extension of commerce by any country attests alike its intelligence, wealth, and progress. When, therefore, the American statesman studies the growth and development of his own country in its industries, trade, and commerce, and reflects that in the logic of all history it is attested that in the race of intelligence and wealth there is "no pause," he must, if faithful to the trust of his position, take such steps as will promote and secure this growth and development.

Indeed, Mr. President, the present status of our domestic trade and foreign commerce, as well as the products of our farms, our fields, our mines, and manufactures, all demand this thought and attention upon the part of our statesmen, no matter whether their sphere of labor is in the Senate, Cabinet, or the field of actual struggle.

Look over the great field of commercial enterprise as displayed upon the world's surface; study the efforts now being made by our competitors to open, cultivate, and obtain control thereof. Look to our immediate surroundings. The goal to be reached by the great manufacturing countries lies south and west of us, and is comprised in the present and future wealth of the States of South America, Mexico, the West India Islands, the Central American States, Australasia, China, and Japan. The present commerce of these States is approximately shown in the following statement of exports and imports:*

States of South America	$667,312,905
Mexico	77,146,000
West India Islands, estimated	125,000,000
Central American States	35,829,318
Australasia	515,000,000
China	196,153,482
Japan	62,403,816
Making a total of	1,678,845,521

The value of this trade is thus approximately shown at the present time to be $1,678,845,521. But how rich and valuable will it become when under the magic touch of steam and electricity and modern and coming useful inventions new energy and life are given to the people who shall inhabit these domains, and when the world shall demand of these countries the vast mineral wealth that now sleeps peacefully in the recesses of their mountains and valleys? The day is not distant when the world will demand this of Mexico, Central and South America.

Mr. President, the keen instinct of our business men is ahead of our legislators and diplomats. Appreciating the value of this trade, to be lost or won, already has the enterprise and capital of our citizens built iron channels of commerce across the continent, and they are building others, extending into and across the Republic of Mexico. They are fast traveling to points of advantage with a view to seize and control the principal marts of the commerce and trade of these countries, and will do so if properly seconded by the Government.

In this connection, Mr. President, it is well to note the increase in the mileage of railroads in the United States within the last fifteen years. In 1870 the number of miles in operation was 52,914; in 1885, 128,407, showing an increase of 75,493 miles. This increase has been principally in the Western and Southwestern States, and these roads were constructed with the view and in the effort to reach the coast of the Pacific Ocean and the boundaries of Mexico. The large amount of capital invested in these enterprises by the business men of our Government manifests their estimate of the present and prospective value of the trade with Mexico, South America, and the countries washed by the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. President, the statesmanship as well as the enterprise and capital of European governments appreciate the value of the "goal" to be reached in this struggle for supremacy in the commerce of the South American States and of the countries in and bordering on the Pacific Ocean, and hence by capital invested in trade, by diplomatic "suggestions" in the counsels and administration of the affairs of these governments, seek to make them hostile to American interests and jealous of American influence; but, more effectually to monopolize and control the industrial wealth of these countries and at the same time circumscribe that of these States, seizure and "colonization" of territory is resorted to. And not content with these measures European diplomacy and capital seek in the building of an Isthmus Canal to "head off" the efforts and enterprise of American citizens and to place a limit to American power and American progress.

Have the great body of the people of this country, Mr. President, studied the logic of the movements of the great powers of Europe in their efforts to secure territory by "colonization" in all quarters of the globe? Have they paused to inquire the reasons of the strength and wealth of the empire that acknowledges Victoria as empress; or asked why Russia seeks to extend her borders; or the necessity under which Germany, France, and Italy are to acquire territory? Surplus population and surplus production must find new fields for occupation and use, or stagnation and death ensue.

Open the last few pages in history, ay, even as it has been written in our own day, and behold the growth and increased wealth brought to Great Britain by her colonial enterprises. The statistics connected with Australasia give magical and marvelous evidences of progress.

And in this connection it is appropriate to call attention to the designs and aspirations of these particular British colonies of the Southern

* Honduras, in Central American States, estimated, as is the commerce of the West India Islands. The other data are obtained from the American Almanac and from Mulhall.

Pacific Ocean, and to ask, has the attention of the statesmen and diplomats of the South American States and of the North American States been arrested to and by the remarkable declarations of these colonies in their convention at Sydney in November and December, 1883? It appears that this convention was called to present some plan of federation of the British colonies in the South Pacific Ocean. The convention adopted a series of resolutions, seven in number, the first three only of which it is now necessary to notice, the substance of which are, as stated and summarized by a writer (Earl of Carnarvon) in volume 45, Contemporary Review, to be:

1. That the future acquisition of dominion in the South Pacific by any foreign power would be highly injurious to Australasia and the empire.
2. That the conference refrains from suggesting how best to give effect to the resolutions, in the confident belief that the Imperial Government will adopt the wisest and most effectual measures for doing so.
3. That having regard to trade and other considerations, and fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the bounds of the empire belongs to the Imperial Government, the conference desires the immediate incorporation of all that part of New Guinea which is not claimed by the Dutch Government.

Mr. President, there can be no doubt as to the tendency of and the end sought by these bold and significant declarations. They are food for thought in any congress of the States of the American continent, whenever such congress may assemble.

It is well that the whole idea of federation of states and communities having contiguity of territory, mutuality of interests, and harmony of institutions should be considered by the States and statesmen of the American continent. They should not, can not, unless false to the idea of republican forms of government, be indifferent to the growth of "colonization" and "federation" by the great commercial powers of the world. The great agencies of nature, responsive to the will of man in their mechanical and motive uses, have been, are now, and will continue to be effective and instrumental in the development and possibly the fruition of these grand efforts to consolidate commercial and political power.

And again, as tending to put control and limit upon the progress and development of the states of North and South America, is not the building of the Isthmus Canal significant? Is it not an effort upon the part of European diplomacy and European capital to circumscribe the limits of our power and progress? Is it not singular, Mr. President, that so stupendous an undertaking, and one so likely to affect seriously the commerce, if not the peace, of the United States as the building of an interoceanic canal by European capital and European enterprise under an European charter—and this project inaugurated and promoted by those who for years, together with other dreams of the family (Napoleon's), dreamed of a Latin empire on this continent—should apparently have arrested so little attention upon the part of those charged with the conduct of our foreign relations? Who that studies a moment does not see that, in a military and naval point of view, it will become necessary upon the completion of such a canal that the United States should increase its naval armament and multiply its works of military fortification? Should not this fact, or probability of it, induce the United States, if not other American States, to regard the construction of such a canal as a menace to their power and security? Let our people note that with the progress of our railroad system, and with the development of the mining, manufacturing, and agricultural wealth of the great interior and Pacific States of the Union, very soon from the Pacific coast we will be ready and able to supply the wants of trade to the countries in and bordering on the Pacific Ocean.

Conflicting, as such a canal will, with our vast railroad system, in which there is over seven billions of capital invested, giving, as it will, the advantage in competition to our European rivals over the interior, Western, and Pacific States; creating, as it does, an artificial Bosphorus, around which diplomacy and war are to repeat their historic false and bloody rôles, making "armed powers" a necessity on this continent, it is profoundly surprising that the American republics, and especially this Government, should have been and are apparently so indifferent to the "progress of events" on the isthmus. Are not the miniature scenes of the last summer on that isthmus to be repeated, and to swell into the dimensions of a grand and tragic drama?

But, Mr. President, suppose the apprehensions which I have suggested should be esteemed as idle and the country should accept contrary views, yet this artificial channel must have a large and important influence upon the commerce of this Government and our relations with the other states of this continent. Who dares believe that the capital of Europe seeks investment in this canal either in sentiment or for the benefit of our people and their wealth? Certainly those who are building it are not guided alone by effusive sentiment. The people of the United States should not forget the efforts of Louis Napoleon, either, in Central America or his attempt to found an empire in Mexico. In relation to this attempt at empire in Mexico I quote what it is said a distinguished Frenchman wrote of it:

Abbe Dominick, in behalf of France, writes:

Behind the Mexican expedition there was more than an empire to found, a nation to save, markets to create, thousands of millions to develop; there was a world, tributary to France, happy to submit to our sympathetic influence, to receive their supplies from us and to ascribe to us their resurrection to the political and social life of a civilized people.

I ask Senators when they consider this great undertaking of French capital—the building of the Isthmus Canal—to inquire if these be not yet the motives which induce the Frenchman to enlist in the work.

Mr. President, all the indications point to a struggle over the empire of wealth that lies in the present and future commerce of these states in South America, the islands of the Pacific, and the countries bounded by its waters, in all of which "the balance-sheet of trade" shows us occupying an inferior position. And now, when with our material progress and advancement we are brought to confront the question, shall the United States abandon or continue the contest for this grand opening for our surplus productions, this rich and magnificent empire of wealth, can we hesitate as to the nature of our reply? I answer nay. American progress will not tolerate an abandonment of the struggle. Can it be won by domestic protective tariffs? Can it be gained and held by subsidized ships? Can it be reached and secured by interoceanic canals? The propositions contained in these queries have each their advocates.

Without arguing either upon the present occasion, I content myself with saying that neither in my opinion would prove efficacious and satisfactory. Either one would prove illusory and futile, unless diplomacy had first entered the field and secured respect and protection for American capital and enterprise invested in the struggle being made.

The executive department should in its office obtain the friendship, good-will, and kindly dispositions of the countries with which commercial intercourse and trade development is sought; next, seek the removal or modification of the barriers, burdens, and restrictions now impeding such intercourse; and next, undertake to secure and give mutual and reciprocal advantages, and to our sister republics and states on this continent submit propositions of conference, in which should enter these and the consideration of the proximity and contiguity of territory. The similarity of institutions, the general harmony of thought, in that the people and not dynasties govern (being essentially the American idea), should induce these American governments to work together for the promotion and security of popular government, in which the alleviation of human want and the promotion of human happiness was and should remain the object of all American governments. And that being so identified they would sedulously and by all peaceful agencies promote the wealth and prosperity of each other so far as it could be done without injustice to their own citizens.

And beyond all this let the American citizen know and recognize that wherever the honest pursuit of his business may call him he carries with him the assurance that all the power of his Government will be wielded for the protection of his person and property. Then you will see that "wherever it is desired to open markets for our surplus wealth we shall find volunteer pioneers for our trade and willing missionaries for our commerce." It is because we have not been willing to incur hazards for the protection of our citizens who may have the courage to embark capital and labor in commercial enterprises in foreign countries and prompt to give them relief when oppressed that the "balance of trade" is often found against us. Let the executive department of this Government do its duty in this regard and the people and their Congress will not be slow to support such an administration.

Mr. President, having for years entertained these views I need not say here that the efforts of the Garfield administration to modify or cancel the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and to bring about a cordial and sympathetic understanding between the powers representing "American progress in American governments" met at the time my support, as have all subsequent efforts looking in the same direction. And for one I rejoice that these effects have culminated in the methodical suggestions embodied in this Senate bill No. 2362, and to which I trust there will be no serious opposition. The career of this Union must be onward. To-day it is seen in the front in the production of industrial wealth, and in the front in the power and resources of production, and with rapid increase marking each step of the moving years. The shadow of Wall street, with the timidity and selfishness of its capital, can not longer dictate either the law or the limit of American progress.

Mr. President, breathes there a statesman of this Government who could be so recreant as ever to consent that on this continent limits shall be prescribed to American prowess and American progress? I do not believe he lives. Yet, sir, I persuade myself I speak the aspiration of every true American and democrat throughout our broad land when I say that they will welcome the day in which are practiced the teachings of the grand old patriots whose words and deeds illustrated with most brilliant luster the brightest, bravest pages of American history—Jefferson, who gave us Louisiana; Monroe, who gave us a definite American policy; Adams and Clay, who sought American unity; Polk, who gave us California; Everett, who gave us his memorable dispatch to Comte de Sartiges (which should be constantly read by the American patriot), and Cass, Douglas, and Marcy, who gave us their protest against the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. President, permit me, in exposition of this American policy, to quote from Mr. Everett's dispatch, to which I have referred. Mr. Everett therein gave a historical review of the acquisition of territory made by the United States and of the policy of this Government, and then proceeds to say that—

No person, surveying these events with the eye of comprehensive statesmanship, can fail to trace in the main result the undoubted law of our political existence. The consequences are before the world. Vast provinces, which had languished for three centuries under the leaden sway of a stationary system, are coming under the influences of an active civilization. Freedom of speech and the press, the trial by jury, religious equality, and representative government have been carried by the Constitution of the United States into extensive regions where they were unknown before. By the settlement of California the great circle of intelligence around the globe is completed. The discovery of the gold of that region, leading as it did to the same discovery in Australia, has touched the nerve of industry throughout the world. Every addition to the territory of the American Union has given homes to European destitution and gardens to European want. From every part of the United Kingdom, from France, from Switzerland and Germany, and from the extremest north of Europe a march of immigration has been taken up, such as the world has never seen before. Into the United States, grown to their present extent in the manner described, but little less than half a million of the population of the Old World is annually pouring, to be immediately incorporated into an industrious and prosperous community, in the bosom of which they find political and religious liberty, social position, employment, and bread.

It will be remembered that the United States had been invited by the Governments of France and Great Britain to enter into a convention by which the three governments would disclaim "now and for hereafter all intention to obtain possession of the Island of Cuba." This invitation was declined by the United States Government in the admirable and bold dispatch referred to, in which he uses the language I have already quoted, and in which he further adds:

But whatever may be thought of these last suggestions, it would seem impossible for any one who reflects upon the events glanced at in this note to mistake the law of American growth and American progress, or think it can be arrested by a convention like that proposed. In the judgment of the President, it would be as easy to throw a dam from Cape Florida to Cuba with the hope of stopping the flow of the Gulf Stream as to attempt by a compact like this to fix the fortunes of Cuba, now and hereafter.

And in this the great American statesman meant to be understood that no human power could define and limit the extent and law of American growth and progress.

At a later period in our history when it was supposed this was attempted to be done by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that brilliant American statesman, who in his life and speech more nearly typified American aspirations than any of its recent statesmen—Stephen A. Douglas—a grand representative of American democracy, who in protesting against said treaty spoke as follows in reference to American growth and progress:

But I can not close my eyes to the history of this country for the last half century. Fifty years ago the question was being debated in this Senate whether it was wise or not to acquire any territory on the west bank of the Mississippi River, and it was then contended that we never could with safety extend beyond that river. It was at that time seriously considered whether the Alleghany Mountains should not be the barrier beyond which we should never pass.

At a subsequent date, after we had acquired Louisiana and Florida, more liberal views began to prevail, and it was thought that perhaps we might venture to establish one tier of States west of the Mississippi, but in order to prevent the sad calamity of an undue expansion of our territory, the policy was adopted of establishing an Indian territory, with titles in perpetuity all along the western border of those States, so that no more new States could possibly be created in that direction. That barrier could not arrest the onward progress of our people. They burst through it and passed the Rocky Mountains and were only arrested by the waters of the Pacific. Who, then, is prepared to say that in the progress of events, having met with the barrier of the ocean in our western course, we may not be compelled to turn to the north and to the south for an outlet? (Appendix to Congressional Globe, second session, Thirty-second Congress, volume 27, page 26.)

Mr. President, in "the progress of events" we have reached that point. Our adversaries know and realize this. The trade and commerce of the Pacific is to American progress a necessity. Shall the peaceful weapons of diplomacy and the kindly offices of friendship secure it? Or shall we submit to bind the giant by withes and postpone the day of power to the future, then to be had by our children in a bloody drama?

But no, Mr. President, we can neither abandon nor postpone the struggle. The seven billions of capital invested in railroads, all directly or indirectly concentrating on our coasts and on the borders of this theater of contest; the immense value of the products of our farms, workshops, and mines, amounting to billions; the grand and increasing aggregate of the commercial capital and enterprise of our people; the great Mississippi Valley, from whose productive fields, if rightly encouraged, the support and sustenance of the world may be drawn; the very law of our growth and existence, with our rapid increase in population, all demand that the statesmanship of the country shall aid its commercial intelligence and capital in securing this empire of wealth and commerce for our industry and labor.

Let our statesmen recognize that the wisdom and statecraft of the world in these days extend and secure commerce apparently but in three ways—by "annexation," "colonization," and "federation" of territory. Each of our competitors has to a greater or less extent in one of these ways opened outlets to its surplus of products and population—and in this fact it seems to me, to a very large degree, is to be ascribed the origin and continued cause of the lamentations and distress of our people in the great matters of labor and trade.

Mr. President, there are actors now in the fields of present labor who will live to see within the limits of our present territory over one hundred millions of population. Imagine what then will be the extent of the material wealth of this country. Grasp, if you can, the then demands of our commerce and trade. In making the effort you will comprehend the need now for that wisdom and patriotism upon the part of our statesmen necessary to prepare in the ways of peace for the grand march of American civilization and American progress.

This progress must be ever onward. And, Mr. President, looking far away into the future, and contemplating the vast possibilities of free government with prosperous trade and commerce to the thriving millions who are to occupy, possess, and enjoy this continent of ours, it seems to me that wise statesmanship would hail with ambitious pride this propitious hour to inaugurate commensurate movements to meet these magnificent possibilities—I say propitious, because now the people, comprehending the misfortunes of overproduction and surplus products and the strong necessity for commercial outlets, anxiously desire material relief, support, and encouragement, and will hail him or that party as entitled to their confidence who may by peaceful agencies bring wealth and prosperity to their doors.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up for consideration the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, which was under consideration yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that that bill be laid aside informally. I desire to call up the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr FRYE in the chair). The Senator from Illinois asks that the bill be laid aside informally in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose it is necessary for the bill to be read, but I ask that as the reading proceeds the amendments reported by the committee be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the usual course in regard to appropriation bills will be taken.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state by way of explanation that there have been several amendments made to the bill by the Committee on Appropriations, but none that change materially the appropriations.

The amount estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $25,356,998.61. The changes made by the Senate committee make a reduction in the amount appropriated by the House of $138,053.66 and a total reduction from the appropriations of last year of $329,103.66.

If there is anything to be explained in reference to the bill as we go along I am ready to explain it. I have all the papers here that are necessary. I do not think the bill will find any material objection made to it by any Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as the reading proceeds.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Enlisted men," to strike out from line 30 to line 42, inclusive, as follows:

Extra-duty pay: For enlisted men for service in hospital, and for general-service clerks and messengers at Army, division, department, and district headquarters, at the headquarters of the general recruiting service, at recruiting depots, and at West Point, N. Y., at the rates per diem fixed by law, $22,721.25: Provided, That the number of such general-service clerks to be paid out of this sum shall not exceed one hundred and three, and the number of such messengers to be paid shall not exceed forty-five.

For payment to enlisted men serving as general-service clerks and messengers, $105,500.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For extra-duty pay to enlisted men on duty in hospitals and as clerks and messengers at headquarters, $85,647.59.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Miscellaneous," after the word "dollars," in line 161, to strike out the following proviso to the item appropriating for mileage of officers:

Provided, That in disbursing this allowance the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare, but in no case shall the whole amount paid exceed 8 cents a mile.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Making in all for pay of the Army $12,500,124.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "Army," in line 172, to insert "and for that purpose shall constitute one fund," so as to make the clause read:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Subsistence of the Army," to strike out from line 174 to line 226, inclusive, as follows:

For rations, at 20 cents each (which price includes not only the purchase cost of the supplies but the proportionate share of each single ration, of all of the expenses, shrinkages, waste, and loss of the Subsistence Department in its operations in the supply of subsistence to the Army, from its original purchase to the issue, excepting such salaries and expenses as are provided for under other appropriations), for the enlisted men of the Army, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards, one thousand civil employés, sixty-five contract surgeons, one hundred and sixty hospital matrons, military convicts at posts, prisoners of war (including such Indians as are captured but whose subsistence is not otherwise provided by law), and for additional half rations allowed by law to sergeants and corporals of ordnance, in all $1,979,030.

For difference between the cost of the ration, at 20 cents, and the allowance by the Secretary of War of $1.50 per day to enlisted men traveling on detached duty under orders, when it is impracticable to carry cooked or travel rations, $15,000.

For difference between cost of a ration, at 20 cents, and the allowance by the Secretary of War of $1.50 per day to soldiers selected to contest for places or prizes in department, division, and Army rifle teams, while traveling to and returning from places of contest, $10,000.

For difference between the cost of the ration, at 20 cents, and the cost of cooked rations for recruiting parties and recruits at rendezvous, $34,000.

For cost (in excess of ordinary rations) of hot coffee, canned beef, and baked beans for troops traveling on cars and other conveyances, where it is impracticable to cook their rations, $7,000.

For subsistence of Indians visiting military posts, and of Indians employed without pay as guides and scouts, $1,000.

But it is expressly provided that no extra rations, except the extra issues of candles, salt, and vinegar authorized by Army Regulations to guards, officers, stables, storehouses, and public animals, shall be issued out of the stores purchased with any money appropriated under the head of "Subsistence of the Army," nor shall any of the money so appropriated be paid for commutation of rations, except as above authorized, and except as is authorized by Army Regulations to enlisted men on furlough and ordnance sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, and to enlisted men (other than the Signal Service) who are stationed alone at places where rations can not be economically issued; and not more than $120,000 of the money so appropriated shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés of the Subsistence Department of the Army, and no compensation or salary so paid shall exceed the pay of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in Army Regulations.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For rations for twenty-five thousand enlisted men, one thousand civil employés, sixty-five contract surgeons, one hundred and sixty hospital-matrons, two hundred and seventy-five military convicts, seven hundred and fifty prisoners of war (including such Indian prisoners as are captured but whose subsistence is not otherwise appropriated for by Congress), and for additional half-rations for one hundred and twenty sergeants and corporals of ordnance, a total of not exceeding nine million nine hundred and seventy-one thousand eight hundred rations, estimated at 20 cents each; for difference between the cost of the ration and commutation thereof, at rates prescribed by the Secretary of War, for the following enlisted men, namely: Those detailed for clerical and messenger duty at headquarters of the Army, and at headquarters of divisions, departments, districts, and general recruiting service, and for various duties at military posts and stations, those traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry cooked or travel-rations, and those ordered to participate in department, division, and Army rifle competition; for difference between the cost of the ration and the cost of cooked rations for enlisted men and recruits at recruiting stations; cost in excess of ordinary rations of hot coffee and canned food, or travel-rations, for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook rations; for subsistence of Indians visiting military posts and of Indians employed without pay as guides and scouts; in all, $1,800,000; and not more than $120,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Subsistence Department of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. That substitute is the law as contained in the bill of last year with very few modifications and a reduction of the amount allowed about $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Quartermaster's Department," in line 276, after the word "reports," to insert "$2,678,000;" and in line 281, after the word "competition," to strike out "$2,678,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Regular supplies: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus, and repair and maintenance of the same, for heating barracks and quarters; of ranges and stoves for cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and offices, and for sales to officers; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, including its care and protection; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank-books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing division and department orders and reports, $2,678,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such case as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department," in line 289, after the words "military posts," to strike out "but in no case at a greater rate of pay than is fixed by law;" so as to read:

Incidental expenses: For postage, cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army, extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Army transportation," after the word "dollars," in line 262, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the whole number of civilian employés, including agents, superintendents, mechanics, packers, teamsters, and train-masters, paid from the appropriation for transportation of the Army shall not, at any one time hereafter, exceed one thousand, nor shall any of said employés be graded for salary above fourth-class clerks as graded and fixed in Army Regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "arrears of Army transportation on certain land-grant railroads," in line 377, after the word "paid," to insert "$85,000;" and in line 381, after the word "services," to strike out "$85,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Arrears of Army transportation on certain land-grant railroads: For the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts; but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid, $85,000: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "barracks and quarters," after the word "salary," at the end of line 404, to strike out "or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a clerk of the fourth class as graded and fixed in the Army Regulations," and insert "more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law;" and after the word "law," in line 408, to strike out "and no part of any of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel and for quarters to officers or enlisted men;" so as to make the clause read:

And provided further, That no more than $1,500,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employés of the Quartermaster's Department, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, and camp and garrison equipage; and that no employé paid therefrom shall receive as salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 412 to line 414, inclusive, as follows:

For quarters for veterinary surgeons, post quartermaster sergeants, commissary sergeants, and ordnance sergeants, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 415 and 416, as follows:

For chapels, school-houses, and libraries, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 421, after the words "employed on," to insert "extra duty in;" and in line 422, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repairs of hospitals: For construction and repairs of hospitals, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on extra duty in the same, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Medical Department," in line 445, after the word "expenses," to insert "including disinfectants;" in line 447, before the word "thousands," to insert "and twenty;" so as to read:

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, expenses of medical purveying depots, pay of employés, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses, including disinfectants, of the Medical Department, $220,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 447, at the end of the clause making appropriations for "Medical and Hospital Department," to insert:

And not over $36,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Medical Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for "Medical Museum and library," after the word "dollars," at the end of line 454, to insert "in all, $15,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Medical Museum and library: For Army Medical Museum, preservation of specimens, and the preparation or purchase of new specimens, $5,000; for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $10,000; in all, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Engineer Department," to strike out the clause from line 469 to line 471, inclusive, as follows:

Library of the Engineer School of Application: Purchase of professional works of recent date treating of military and civil engineering, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 472 to line 477, inclusive, as follows:

For construction of a new building to contain the officers' mess, the library, and draughting-rooms of the School of Application, $10,000, to be immediately available, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the cost of the building complete for use and occupation shall not exceed $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "Ordnance Department," in line 486, after the word "supplies," to strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance service: For current expenses of the ordnance service required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of rents, tools, fuel, and lights; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for use; incidental expenses of the ordnance service, and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small-arms, and other ordnance supplies, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 502, to increase the appropriation "for infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments" from $65,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 506 to line 510, inclusive, as follows:

For manufacture of arms at the national armories, $300,000. That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the employment of clerks of a higher class than a fourth-class clerk as graded by the Army Regulations.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For manufacture of arms at national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department, in all its branches, shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 518, to insert:

SIGNAL SERVICE.

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs; signal equipments and stores; binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including absolutely necessary meteorological instruments for use on target-ranges; telephone apparatus and maintenance of same, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 529, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the office of the Lieutenant-General from $1,200 to $1,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 537, to increase from $10,000 to $30,000 the appropriation "for all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I submit, to be published in the RECORD, a full statement of the expenditures authorized by the bill and what they apply to; also a statement of the expenditures of last year and the amounts recommended by the Committee on Appropriations this year, in separate columns, showing the differences, and a full explanation of each appropriation in the bill. I ask that this statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the paper presented by the Senator from Illinois will be printed in the RECORD.

REMOVAL OF SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S 1916) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah. It is a local measure reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it will not take five minutes, I am sure.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My colleague [Mr. DOLPH] has charge of the bill which is now pending before the Senate as the regular order, and I reserve the right to call for the regular order in case this bill leads to debate.

Mr. BOWEN. I think there will be no debate on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can only be taken up at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent, without displacing the regular order, that the bill named by him may be considered.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I reserve the right to call for the regular order in case it leads to debate.

Mr. BOWEN. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. DAWES] present.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, sent for, unless he has considered the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make objection?

Mr. HOAR. Only for a moment.

Mr. BOWEN. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that his colleague agrees to the bill, and it is reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. Then I make no further objection.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1916) authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians from the State of Colorado to the Territory of Utah.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the words "reservation to," at the end of line 9, to strike out:

One in Southeastern Utah, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the southeast corner of the Territory of Utah; running thence north along the eastern boundary line of said Territory of Utah 100 miles; thence west, true courses, to the center of the channel of the Colorado River; thence southwesterly along the center of the channel of said stream to the southern boundary of said Territory of Utah; thence east along the southern boundary line of the said Territory to the place of beginning; excepting, however, such portion of the Territory above described lying south of the San Juan River, now constituting a portion of the Navajo reservation.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Uintah Valley reservation, in Utah, or if they shall refuse to settle on said reservation, then upon such unoccupied land, not less in extent than their present reservation, as may be found in that vicinity or elsewhere in said Territory: Provided, That no selection of a reservation for said Indians shall be made outside the Uintah Valley reservation until said Indians, through a delegation of their people, to be selected by not less than three-fourths of the adult male Indians of said tribe, shall have had an opportunity to explore such portions of said Territory as they may desire to visit for that purpose, accompanied by said commission, with a view to selecting a suitable tract for their permanent settlement thereon; and the reservation so selected shall, upon the removal and settlement of said Indians thereon, constitute the reservation for the Southern Ute Indians: Provided further, That the President may, in his discretion, reduce the area of said reservation, if in his judgment it shall be found to be out of proportion to the number of Indians settled thereon, and greater than their actual needs require: Provided further, That all improvements heretofore made by any settler who has made settlement in person upon any lands that may be included in said reservation, and has inhabited and improved the same, and erected a dwelling thereon, with the intention of acquiring title to the lands so occupied by him, under the laws of the United States, shall be appraised by said commission, and the rightful owners thereof shall be paid the appraised value of their respective improvements, by the Secretary of the Interior, upon satisfactory proof of such bona fide settlement, residence, and improvement; and for that purpose the sum of $10,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and upon such payment being made all such settlers shall be required to remove from said reservation.

Mr. BOWEN. There is an amendment to the committee amendment which I wish to offer now and have incorporated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the third line of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee after the word "Territory" and before the first proviso, it is proposed to insert:

But not less than 40 miles west of the west boundary line of the State of Colorado.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the lands lying within the boundaries mentioned in the preceding section shall hereafter constitute the reservation of the Southern Ute Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [3] 2, after the word "aforesaid," in line 11, to insert, "and in one or more daily newspapers published in the city of Denver, Colo.;" so as to read:

That before said agent shall make such sales he shall give public notice thereof by publication in one or more weekly newspapers published in the city of Durango aforesaid, and in one or more daily newspapers published in the city of Denver, Colo., for not less than six consecutive weeks, which notice shall state the time, place, and terms of such sales, and the name of each Indian whose improvements are to be so sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARITIME LIEN FOR STEVEDORES.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask consent that No. 1308 in the order of business, which is a very small bill in extent, involving nothing but the settlement of a rule of maritime law, which the Judiciary Committee have unanimously reported, as I may not be here when it will be reached in the call of the Calendar, may now be taken up.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have no objection, except that I reserve the right, if the bill leads to debate, to call for the regular order.

Mr. EVARTS. It will not lead to debate.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2313) defining the service of a stevedore, as a maritime service, and creating a maritime lien in his favor therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2135) to compensate Isaiah W. Lees and H. H. Ellis, of San Francisco, for services rendered the Government.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOLFORD, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. STEELE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 275) for the relief of William D. Stewart and others, heirs at law of James Stewart, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran;

A bill (H. R. 2428) for the relief of V. F. Gorrissen; and

A bill (H. R. 5251) making an appropriation for the repairs and enlargement of the post-office and court-house at Des Moines, Iowa, and fixing a limit thereto.

CARRYING OF PASSENGERS BY STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, which will lead to no debate. It is House bill 3037, the passage of which is asked for by the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I reserve the right to call for the regular order.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment, to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That steam-vessels of 100 tons burden or under, engaged in the coastwise bays and harbors of the United States, may be licensed by the United States local inspectors of steam-vessels to carry passengers or excursions on the ocean or upon the great lakes of the North or Northwest, not exceeding 15 miles from the mouth of such bays or harbors, without being required to have the three water-tight cross-bulkheads provided by section 4490 of the Revised Statutes for other passenger steamers: Provided, That in the judgment of the local inspector such steamers shall be safe and suitable for such navigation without danger to human life, and that they shall have one water-tight collision bulkhead not less than 5 feet abaft the stem of said steamer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 17; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 12, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; which, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, was temporarily laid over.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to pay claims of the Central Pacific Railroad for the fiscal years 1886 and 1887 and prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOUND, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TUCKER, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEHLBACH, until Wednesday, June 16.

To Mr. WADSWORTH, for one week, on account of urgent business.

ISAIAH W. LEES AND H. H. ELLIS.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2135) to compensate Isaiah W. Lees and H. H. Ellis, of San Francisco, for services rendered the Government.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay to Isaiah W. Lees and Henry H. Ellis, of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $10,853.86, for services rendered the Government in detecting frauds upon the internal revenue and customs service, whereby the Government collected the sums sought to be defrauded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEACH. I think we ought to have the report read, or at all events a brief explanation, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked if there was objection to the present consideration of the bill, and none was offered. The Chair thinks it is now too late.

Mr. BEACH. I did not, perhaps, object in time; but I would like to have an explanation, at all events, of the bill.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Speaker, the circumstances attending the case are as follows: Some years ago, when the late Senator Miller was collector of the port of San Francisco, he was informed that there were some frauds being committed upon the Internal Revenue Department at different points along the Pacific coast, and he procured the services of the detectives whose names are mentioned in this bill, who worked up the case from Victoria, in Vancouver's Island, to Guaymas, in Mexico, at great expense to themselves. The result was the turning into the Treasury of the United States of some forty-three thousand and odd dollars. He had agreed to give them one-fourth of the amount recovered; but they, in consequence of the expenditures to which they had been subjected, thought they should be entitled to one-half. The money has been in the possession of the Government for all of these years, some $43,000, which was procured through the services of these gentlemen.

I presume their expenses were quite heavy, acting as they did along the whole Pacific coast, doubtless involving many thousands of dollars, none of which has been repaid to them; and in view of the fact that this is not only a genuine, honest, and fair claim in my opinion, and one which has been amply repaid to the Government by the service rendered, but I may say that if it passes the House to-day it will still be an act of very tardy justice to these claimants.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. FELTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DENISON AND WASHITA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that it may now be put upon its passage. It is of great importance to our people, and they have been anxious for its passage for a long time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company on Red River, near Denison, in Grayson County, in the State of Texas, and running thence by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory in the direction of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, to a point of intersection with the projected line of the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway, in the Indian Territory, from Fort Smith to Paris, in the State of Texas, by the most feasible and practicable route thereto, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken, or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof; and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or at the district court for the northern district of Texas, upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings, within the nation to which such occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or the district court for the northern district of Texas, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition, according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court, the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Texas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose land said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force among the different nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations and tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located line through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws, and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Texas and the western district of Arkansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company and the nations and tribes through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, road and highway crossings, and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the said Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nations any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the bill as read appear in the RECORD of to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. There is no rule or statute in relation to the subject. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is intended to be and should be simply a record of the debates; but these bills which are passed by unanimous consent have usually been inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is a very important bill, and it should not pass the House in this manner without an opportunity of more careful examination. I would ask, therefore, unanimous consent that it appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning, and after we have had an opportunity of seeing it in print then the gentleman can submit his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Let me make a brief explanation, which I think will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It would be impossible to explain a bill of this length satisfactorily within the very brief time the House would probably allow for such purpose. If it can be printed in the RECORD in the manner I suggest, the right to object remaining until Monday, it will be satisfactory; otherwise I shall be obliged to object now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New Jersey to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey states unless the bill can be printed in the RECORD, so that he can see it, he will object to its present consideration. Therefore unanimous consent is asked to have the bill printed in the RECORD, and that it shall come up on Monday morning, subject to the right to object at that time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEACH. Now let us have the regular order.

CORRECTION.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a correction in the RECORD. On page 5595 I am represented in the RECORD as repeating a statement made by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and I am made to say:

> The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury informed me that the man who holds this office had for a number of years been unable to perform any service or to make any compensation to the Government for the $2,500 which he had been receiving.

What I intended to say was that this officer had for a number of years been unable to perform the duties of his position and to make adequate compensation to the Government for the $2,500 which he had been receiving.

Further, I am represented as saying in the same remarks that as an excuse for this abuse the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury offered the fact that this incumbent had been a friend of former Secretaries.

What I intended to say was that as an apology for the present management of this matter the favor this officer had found with former Secretaries of the Treasury had been given as a reason for retaining him in the service.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WOLFORD, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. STEELE.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims was on yesterday referred to the Committee on War Claims. As this bill originated in the Committee on Claims I ask that it be referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The reference will be changed as indicated.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I also ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports with the view of completing the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope we will have the morning hour, and also the hour for the consideration of reports, in order that the Committee on Naval Affairs may be called and may report a resolution to fix a time for considering the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the Committee on Military Affairs have nothing to call up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to dispense with the morning hour, which requires a vote of two-thirds.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 38.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that any gentleman desiring to make reports may do so without the committees being formally called.

Mr. BEACH. I suggest to my friend from Indiana that we gain no time by his proposition and that the making of reports in that way causes a great deal of confusion at the desk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the request.

J. E. PILCHER.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7263, a bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 7263 was laid on the table.

PORT OF PORTLAND.

Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1393) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LEWES, DEL.

Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8504) granting condemned cannon for the soldiers' cemetery at Eaton, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2847, a bill (H. R. 9378) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians for the relinquishment of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall reservation, in Idaho Territory, as is required for the uses and purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short Line Railway Company, either separately or conjointly; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 2847 was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

R. 8074) for the construction of statues to General Anthony Wayne and William Penn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WELLBORN. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. By resolution of the House, the 27th day of last month was set apart for the consideration of business of the Committee on Indian Affairs. When that day arrived the order was carried over to this day, June 12. It is obvious that we can not execute the order to-day; and I ask unanimous consent that it be carried over until the 26th instant, two weeks from to-day.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope that motion may be voted down, so that we may have an hour for the consideration of business reported from committees.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, it was declared agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, a division was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). Does the Chair understand the gentleman to say that he demanded a division before the announcement of the result by the Chair?

Mr. HERBERT. I did not; but a division was called for, I believe, by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If any gentleman states that he made the call in time, the Chair will recognize it. [Applause.] If not, the motion is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it would be in harmony with the order of last evening if the Committee of the Whole would now go back to that part of the bill which had been reached when the order was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands, and has directed the Clerk to read the paragraph which was pending when the Committee of the Whole rose yesterday afternoon.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one messenger, $840; and one laborer; in all, $21,400: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to offer an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend. When this paragraph was read yesterday a point of order was raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]——

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be heard on the question of order before the ruling is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not concluded his statement. A question of order was raised on the proviso in this paragraph by the gentleman from Illinois at the conclusion of the afternoon session; and when the Committee of the Whole was in session last night under the special order of the House this paragraph was objected to, and was passed over. It now comes up for consideration. No amendment is in order until the question of order is disposed of.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say when the House took its recess yesterday that he would withdraw his point of order so far as to allow the offering of the amendment which I hold in my hand without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. With that statement the Chair has nothing to do. The question of order is pending. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should not feel justified in occupying time upon the parliamentary legality of this proposition by a further presentation of the views I have heretofore sought to present on similar questions. I have already insisted in regard to other propositions involving the same point of order that a provision of this kind is but a limitation upon the expenditure of public money, and that the House of Representatives has not by any of its rules abandoned its power to control such expenditures. Appropriations of money to meet public expenditures must under the Constitution be made by law; and certainly this House has not abdicated by any rule which it may have adopted this power of legislation. I have insisted—and I can not now present the matter any more strongly than I have done already—that a provision of this character is but a limitation upon the expenditure of public money; and if this House has not the power to adopt such a limitation its abdication of power over the expenditure of public money is absolute and complete.

I will only add that if the Chair is not prepared at once to rule on this question I trust that, in deference to the necessities of the public business and the importance at this late hour of the session of the prompt passage of this bill, the discussion will be confined to the question of order. I appeal to all gentlemen here that the rule in this respect be observed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MORRISON. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois. Which one of the gentlemen from Illinois?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This same point has been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the Chair has sustained it; and it is therefore unnecessary to occupy the time of the House further on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. I wish, as far as I am concerned, to comply with the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], for I sympathize with him in his desire to dispose of this bill speedily. I will, therefore, state in the fewest words the reasons upon which I base the point of order made. The point was against the proviso, and as I insist changes the law if adopted.

The Civil Service Commission, made up of the Commissioners and the President, if you please, are empowered by the law to do certain things; that is, to prescribe rules for selecting certain officers and employés of the Government. The law fixed no condition, and that duty is devolved upon them free from conditions. The purpose of this legislation is to impose conditions which the law has not imposed, and therefore it is a change of law.

As the law stands these officers having been selected or appointed, their salary fixed, when they would go to the Auditor and have their accounts audited for payment the question under existing law would be, are these the officers, and what are their salaries, and then it would be his duty to pay them as the law now stands. Enact the law these gentlemen propose in this appropriation bill, and annex this condition, limitation, or whatever else it may be called, when these Civil Service Commissioners present their claim for audit and allowance the Auditor has something else to do which does not now belong to his duties in auditing the account. He must ascertain certain facts: whether these men have done certain things which the law left with them as it now stands to do and over which he had no control or about which now no right to fix any condition exists.

So in that respect, Mr. Chairman, the law is, or is proposed to be, changed. But as the matter has been so fully and aptly presented by those gentlemen who have spoken on the subject I do not care further to urge it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois know of any set of rules since the organization of this House of Representatives, any instance of a rule under any set of rules by which the House might not impose limitations upon the expenditure of the public money?

Mr. MORRISON. Does the gentleman mean limitation or condition?

Mr. HOLMAN. Or condition.

Mr. MORRISON. The House might refuse to perform its duty, it might refuse to appropriate any money at all, but if it does appropriate money it can not annex such condition as makes this officer in executing the law execute another law, and to do another thing which under the law he is not now required to do. Such condition or limitation is new law, prescribing new duties or changing old ones, and can not go on an appropriation bill under our rules.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two points I desire to present——

Mr. REED, of Maine. This seems to be exclusively a Democratic House. [Laughter.] When is this side to be recognized?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, a motion to strike out an appropriation for this service would not be subject to the point of order. Refusal to appropriate would not be subject to a point of order. Let that be understood. If, then, a refusal to appropriate at all would not be subject to a point of order, and if it is the placing of a limitation on the appropriation which is said to be subject to the point of order, does not the greater include the lesser point? If we can exclude the appropriation entirely, then, Mr. Chairman, what good reason can be given against placing a limitation by the House on that appropriation?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Not now. I do not like to answer questions in the few minutes allotted to me on this point of order.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] who has just taken his seat assumes with this proviso in the bill the Auditor would not respect this proviso if it passes, but would go on.

Mr. MORRISON. No; I said the Auditor would be bound to respect this proviso, and I made that statement to show the fact that he was bound to respect the same provision of law which I now state, and therefore it was new legislation.

Mr. REAGAN. The qualification is not intended to qualify a provision of law, but to compel the commission to modify its rules.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose the commission does not do that.

Mr. REAGAN. In the first place, I take it, we will recognize the fact that this House is the great body of supply for the Government; that it may grant or withhold supplies as it sees proper; and that it may grant them with restrictions or grant them without conditions; but its great constitutional and historic right to grant the supplies ought not to be evaded by a forced construction of the rules of the House in this way, and one which in its effect practically causes the House to abdicate its greatest prerogative for the protection of the rights of the people.

Mr. BAYNE. But suppose the commission refuse to modify the rules which they have framed.

Mr. REAGAN. Then it is with Congress; it is with the House of Representatives; and if in preparing its supply bills it provides that you shall not draw your salaries until the conditions of the law are complied with, it is equivalent to saying we will not appropriate for your salaries; which, I take it, it will hardly be questioned we have the right to do.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can you by this bill add to the rights or powers of the commission?

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is the question; can you add to the powers of the commission by this bill?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This does not add to the powers of the commission.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas answer that question.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that it is very unpleasant to be badgered by all sorts of questions in a brief explanation of a particular point. I do not desire to be drawn away from the point presented by the gentleman from Illinois by irrelevant questions. Do gentlemen in that way seek to avoid the force of an argument? Why do not gentlemen agree to meet such questions upon principle?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If you can not add to the powers of the commission, I want to know if you can subtract from the powers of the commission under the law in this bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I am trying to answer the question which has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois; and if gentlemen around me will permit I shall be glad to proceed in my own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas declines to be interrupted; and the Chair will insist that without his consent gentlemen have no right to do so.

Mr. REAGAN. One of the difficulties of dealing with such questions on the floor of the House is that when a gentleman gets up and attempts to make a point, every one who wants to change the basis of that position comes around and attempts to alter the course of his argument by injecting all sorts of irrelevant interrogatories, and so shape the argument to suit themselves instead of in the direction the one who is making it tries to give it.

I am trying to show to the Chair that this is the great body of supply for the Government. It is its historic and constitutional right. It is a power which comes from the very instrument through which we derive our institutions. It is the power, it is the right, it is the duty of the House to grant or to withhold supplies at its pleasure as well as to place such limitations and restrictions as its wisdom shall determine upon them. It is its right and its duty to the people to grant or to withhold supplies as to it shall seem reasonable and proper. If, then, we can withhold supplies entirely, who can present any reason for the position that we may not properly withhold supplies in part or place a limitation upon them if such limitation be deemed necessary?

Now I had commenced to say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] suggested this point that the Auditor in the settlement of these accounts would have to look to this law in order to be able to pay the Commissioners for these duties. That is exactly what we mean, and I suppose what the House will mean if it passes the bill—that is to say, that the Auditor should look to this law and obey it.

Mr. Chairman, if the rules proposed to be modified by this section of the bill had been presented to the House as an independent measure they could never have received its assent; and I do not suppose that there is a man here who would have consented to the limitation placed here by the committee. It assumes a kind of autocracy that this bill seems to take from it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Texas refers to the commission, not to the committee, I presume?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly; I refer to the commission. I say this provision of the bill seeks to take from them an assumed power in reference to appointments.

It is suggested by the chairman of the committee that gentlemen discussing the point of order confine themselves to that exclusively, and not discuss the reasons for the position I have just taken. With that view I shall not elaborate the point. It is enough to say that no bill containing these provisions could have passed this House. It is an abridgment upon the rights of an American citizen. It is a disfranchisement of one-half of the voters of this country; and it is not the business of this House to undertake to disfranchise American citizens because they are twenty-one or forty-five years of age; and there it must rest upon the fairest construction.

It seems that we have taken a position that because amendments to the rules have been made refusing to permit independent legislation upon new subjects to be introduced into an appropriation bill, and that, I take it, was meant, and that only, that there should not be new legislation, that we are debarred from the constitutional prerogative of restricting public expenditures. It never was meant to take from the House the power to refuse to vote supplies or place conditions upon appropriations, and if it be true that it was intended only to prevent new legislation, and not place conditions upon appropriations to be drawn from the Treasury, then the position gentlemen would have us take here by giving a strained construction to the rules would involve simply the abdication by the House of its highest and most responsible duties.

I regret to see the drift this discussion has taken. Gentlemen seem disposed to discuss it as a merely technical question instead of a great constitutional duty.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I dislike to seem to interfere in this affair among brethren, who, however they may differ as to ways and means, I am sure are united in their hearts in the cause of real economy and reform. I know they are so united, because they say so. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that it pains me to see that they had to arrive at this age in their lives and at this period in their careers in order to ascertain the fact that the House ought not to be limited in its power. Ever since I have been in Congress both these gentlemen have been united in refusing to the House the power to increase expenditures, because these gentlemen were opposed to any increase. That was perfectly constitutional, perfectly legitimate, and perfectly within the power of the House. But the moment the thing goes across their grain it becomes unconstitutional and an unsuitable limitation.

I rise in defense of these rules for the purpose of pointing out to the gentleman from Indiana a great field of endeavor which he seems to have forgotten. These rules took away from the Committee on Appropriations five great appropriation bills against their wish, for they were greedy of work. Now the time which they might have employed on these five great appropriation bills ought to have been devoted by the gentleman from Indiana to the bringing in of a bill which would go over every one of the expenditures of the Government and make them what they ought to be. Nevertheless what kind of a use has he made of his time?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes, if I can have my time extended.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from Maine is aware that general bills containing independent legislation do not go to the Committee on Appropriations; that except so far as connected with appropriation bills no reference is made to that committee except the estimates and matters of public expenditure; so that all the bills the gentleman has referred to under the rules of the House would have to go to other committees, and the Committee on Appropriations would not have control of a single one of them.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why has not the gentleman from Indiana, with his large experience and his great power in the House presented a bill to go to the appropriate committee to cover these matters? Why has not this leisure which this House gave him by the change of rules been devoted to the service of his country?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that question? For the reason that I did not favor the change of the rules which brought about the present state of things. You gentlemen who did favor the change of rules should have introduced that legislation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Indiana is too large minded a man to sulk over a change of rules. His mind ought to have been active on this subject. His mind was active on other subjects. Look at the immense matter he brought in yesterday to abolish the provision for paying the Vice-President. There is the measure and the kind of measure upon which his thoughts are bent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, sir, the gentleman from Maine himself consented that that was a proper thing. The proposition simply was that that was a matter which belonged to the Senate rather than to the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let me say that in every appropriation bill during the periods we have not had a Vice-President the appropriation has been made. But the eagle eye of the gentleman from Indiana rested upon the possibility of making the sum total of an appropriation bill less by $3,000, although there was no change in the Treasury accounts, and he rose to the occasion.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman ought to be fair and just at least. The subject came up on the spur of the moment. The object was to ascertain in what particular form the compensation should be provided for, and the gentleman from Maine himself acquiesced in what was done.

Mr. MORRISON. Let me say to the gentleman from Maine, in justice to the gentleman from Indiana, that I suggested to the gentleman from Indiana that the acting Vice-President could receive only $8,000; and, therefore, we should not appropriate $13,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am glad to learn the Democratic party was even temporarily united.

Mr. MORRISON. I have always united with any one when it was necessary to do justice, and I will unite with the Republican party to do justice to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And I desire to do justice to both sides of the Democratic party. But when they are divided as they are it is impossible for both of them to be wrong; it gives a chance for justice and righteousness to be done in this world. [Laughter.] And the country is to be congratulated that the Democratic party never shows its patriotism so thoroughly as it does when it splits up. It reminds me that when you come to the lower organizations they always multiply and fructify by splitting up. [Laughter.] It could not work that way with us. The country would never benefit by it.

Now, I wish to give a bit of advice to the gentleman from Indiana. I know it is presumptuous in me—he knows so much more than I do, and is so much more versed in details—but that advice is that he should devote his time to a careful examination of the expenditures and bring in a systematic bill giving us those charming constitutional benefits which are so dear to the heart of the gentleman from Texas when they do not go across his grain. I hope that hereafter we shall see his mind rising above these mere partisan efforts to make it appear that the House of Representatives is making a smaller appropriation bill for the purpose of causing to reverberate through the world that kind of "economy" which alone distinguishes the Democratic party. The truth is—and if the Republicans should have the power to do it they will do it—the truth is, there can be changes made, to the reduction of taxation and to the reduction of expenditures, which will be of great advantage to this country.

Now, I want to say another thing, and this is my advice to the other side of the Democratic party. I deem it very unfortunate that a point of order should have been made on this provision, because it seems to me that as a point of order it must be sustained. Why not withdraw that point of order and let us see how many of the patriotic Democrats who applauded to the echo the assault that was made here yesterday upon their brother Democrat from the city of Baltimore will venture to put their names upon the list. Let us see how many of the Democratic party desire to stand up here and record themselves in favor of "economy and reform" as presented by the Committee on Appropriations. If we can do that, then we can measure the size of the different kinds of "reform" which the Democratic party are prosecuting pari passu.

There is the Executive, an earnest and devoted friend of civil-service reform, who not only will not have the civil-service law interfered with, but desires to extend it even to the nebulous verge of that hitherto undiscovered region called—"obnoxious partisanship," is it not?

A MEMBER. Offensive partisanship.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; "offensive partisanship." I had almost forgotten it. [Laughter.] Then there is brother Higgins, in the Treasury, who, under the very nose of the President, is guillotining every Republican he can reach.

Mr. MORRISON. Brother Higgins is not in this point of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, this is a point of order on civil-service reform, in which the whole Democratic party is interested, especially the "reform" part of it, though perhaps not in the "civil" part. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order before the House, but is interjecting a general political speech.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am stating my constitutional difficulties. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I know that it is the habit of the gentleman to sneer at the idea of the Constitution, but he will not make anything by sneering at it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No; I never sneer at the Constitution.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman always sneers at it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No; I do not. I never sneer at the Constitution; but I do frequently sneer at the kind of talk which is brought in here, and which eternally drags the Constitution of the United States into the mire of men's personal desires.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not mentioned the Constitution to-day. [Laughter.] The gentleman has dragged that subject in himself.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I hail this as the only white day in the history of the House. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I still insist upon my point of order. I insist that the gentleman from Maine should confine himself to the point that is before the House, and not interject a political speech here in order to delay the business of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Here we have the Executive, thus fortified in the minds of the people by all manner of virtuous language [laughter], and there we have every subordinate of the administration operating the guillotine according to his strength and courage. Why, Mr. Chairman, through the Post-Office Department you can see what is going to be done. While one portion of the Democratic party is straightforward enough to avow it, another portion of the Democratic party——

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order. I object to the gentleman proceeding in this way, not discussing the matter before the House at all, but making a general political speech and delaying the business of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and hopes the gentleman from Maine will confine himself to the pending question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I bow with submission to the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, we had a question of order yesterday somewhat like this, upon an effort to limit the power of the President to receive his salary. That was plainly a violation of that section of the Constitution which gives him his salary without any right on the part of the House to diminish it or increase it, and therefore, by fair reasoning, without the right of the House to put on his right to it any shackles. That amendment was ruled out of order. I think that the point already stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is a strong one, and is decisive of this issue.

This provision need not repeal any law. If it makes any change in existing law it is obnoxious to the rule. The gentleman has shown that it would change the duty of the auditing officers in the payment of these salaries, because by the act raising the commission it is provided that the Commissioners shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, &c., upon no other condition than the performance of the duties prescribed in that act. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] have undertaken to overcome this consideration by an argument that this House has unlimited power, constitutionally and traditionally, in respect to appropriations. That is true. But this House, having the whole power in its hands, can declare for itself how it will exercise the power and can declare for itself that the exercise of it in any other than a particular mode shall be out of order.

Such a rule adopted by the House itself is no restriction upon its power. I have the power to strike my friend sitting in front of me; but I also have the power to say I will not strike him unless under sufficient provocation. So, while the House has the power to restrict the expenditure of public money, it has perfect power to say it will not do it by changing existing law in appropriation bills.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] the other day, with a view to anticipate the discussion on this point of order, said that this provision changes no existing law, because it merely changes the regulations of the commission and not the statute under which it was constituted. Let us look at that for one moment. The act declares that to aid the President the Commissioners shall do certain things. They shall prepare—

Suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in the Departments and offices to which any such rules may relate to aid, in all proper ways, in carrying said rules, and any modifications thereof, into effect.

It is also provided in the second section that—

Among other things said rules shall provide and declare, as nearly as the conditions of good administration will warrant, as follows.

And then certain regulations are specified in the act.

Then, toward the end of the statute, in section 7, it is provided (and I read this clause to show how these regulations are regarded):

Nor shall any officer in the executive branch of the Government, or any person merely employed as a laborer or workman, be required to be classified hereunder; nor, unless by direction of the Senate, shall any person who has been nominated for confirmation by the Senate be required to be classified or to pass an examination.

In other words, there is a declaration that these rules, these classifications, these adjustments for service are to be required under that law.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me ask a question?

Mr. HAMMOND. I will.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman is well versed in the Constitution of the United States, I want to know whether he can find in that Constitution any clause which imposes upon any American citizen, on account of his having reached a certain age, a disqualification to exercise the right of suffrage or to participate in discharging the functions of the Government; and if the gentleman does not find such a disqualification there, I wish to know whether any body of men created under our legislation can by any sort of regulation create any such disqualification?

Mr. HAMMOND. That question is utterly impertinent to the business we are considering.

Mr. RANDALL. You can answer it, nevertheless.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am going to answer it.

Now, the point as to whether a regulation is illegal or unconstitutional is one thing. If the Civil Service Commissioners have made any unconstitutional regulations they ought to be, and I suppose will be, disregarded. I am by no means responsible for the existence of this law. I voted against it; the gentleman did not. I am by no means responsible for the existence of these regulations. They have been very much in my way when I have tried to get some of my friends into office. I wish they had not been adopted, for then I might have been more successful. But that has nothing at all to do with this question. As I understand, the question is simply this: are those regulations parts of the law? And every lawyer will understand that they are just as much parts of the law as if they were in the statute.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a single question?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. If this provision of the bill should become law, and the Civil Service Commissioners should refuse to recognize it, would their regulations in the opinion of the gentleman still be good law?

Mr. HAMMOND. The officers would just go on and sue for their salaries and get judgment, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent., under the laws of the United States.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not understand my question. I spoke of the regulations.

Mr. HAMMOND. This does not affect the regulations at all.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. How does it affect existing law if it does not affect the regulations?

Mr. HAMMOND. I am proceeding to tell.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HAMMOND. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I can not now.

While our legislation may not repeal any regulation of the Commissioners, yet, as has been stated, it is a change of the law to make a new condition upon which these officers shall draw their salaries, and put this condition as a limit on that discretion which the Commissioners have under the law.

What I am now saying relates to the other remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to which I have called attention.

Now, take familiar examples. Take section 4990 of the Revised Statutes, which declared that the Supreme Court of the United States should fix rules for the administration of the bankruptcy law, should fix fees and rules of practice. When these fees were fixed the rule fixing them had the absolute force of law. When these rules of practice were fixed they operated as absolute enactments.

Take another section, 970 I believe it is, allowing the Supreme Court to fix rules of practice in courts of admiralty and equity as to how pleadings shall be filed, how evidence shall be taken, as to all matters in admiralty and in equity practice. Every gentleman knows that the violation of those rules may cost a man his estate. Every gentleman knows that evidence not taken according to the rules thus prescribed by the court is illegal evidence. Why? Because the rules are part of the law.

No attempt, therefore, by this House——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question unless it would disturb him.

Mr. HAMMOND. It would greatly disturb me just now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no attempt by this House to legislate upon any subject whatever except the mere appropriation of money according to prescribed law is allowable under the rules of the House, because we have determined after the longest and most exhaustive debate of a week or two that it should be so. The identical question was made, and we voted that general appropriation bills should be stripped absolutely of everything like new legislation. The language is, "change of existing law."

If we put this on we can put anything else on. This would not depend upon the action of the commission. It would control the action of the President also. Their recommendations do not become rules until the President approves them.

The language is, "This salary shall not be drawn until the rule has been modified;" that is, until they have gotten their consent; and until they have gotten his approval the commission shall not be paid. If that is true, we can put on as much legislation on the subject as we please as conditions before these salaries can be drawn.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose the President should refuse to make any change in the rules?

Mr. HAMMOND. Then these Commissioners could not draw the salaries.

Mr. BAYNE. Precisely.

Mr. HAMMOND. The change must be made. The Auditor must inquire of the Commissioners before he pays these salaries, "Have you done your part in this business?" "Yes." Then he must go to the President to know whether he has done his part. If the President has done his part, the Auditor decides whether the rules have been framed so as to accomplish this purpose, and then pays, but not before then.

Now, sir, I would be glad to have that purpose accomplished, because it would enable us to get Radicals out and Democrats into office. At the same time, while there are a great many things I would like to do, I can not do them on general appropriation bills.

For instance, it is a most iniquitous law which allows the polls to be surrounded by United States marshals, armed ostensibly for the purpose of seeing fair elections, but really for the purpose of seeing unfair elections. I would like to see that off the statute-book; but would it be a proper thing to put on this bill when we come to appropriate for salaries of United States judges that their salaries shall not be available until they file a declaration that they will appoint no United States marshals to be present at elections? This is a law obnoxious to many people, and why should we not put that limitation on their salaries if we can put this limitation on these officers?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask my friend from Georgia on this question as to the power to limit expenditure, would not a provision on this very section be in order saying simply that no part of this money shall be paid to the chief examiner until he shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of his office?

Mr. HAMMOND. That would be plain, because he is not entitled to the salary of the office until he becomes such officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would not that be a legislative provision?

Mr. HAMMOND. That would not be any "change of existing law." It is existing law; for no officer can draw his salary until he becomes an officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not until he enters into the discharge of the duties of the office; would that not be a legislative provision?

Mr. HAMMOND. In contemplation of law until he enters upon his duties he is not entitled to draw his salary. But there is no way to ascertain when the officer enters upon the duties of his office except the day of his being sworn in. Who ever besides the gentleman sought to inquire when the President began to be President?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not speaking of doing any such thing.

Mr. HAMMOND. No man but the gentleman would think of doing it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, it is done every day in the Departments, to ascertain if the officer is engaged actively in the duties of his office; because in questions of absence it becomes a matter of necessity to ascertain whether the duties have been performed.

Mr. HAMMOND. Oh, yes; that is a legal exception necessary in the transaction of the routine business of the Departments, but it is under existing laws.

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman the question whether we could limit the payment of a salary until the services of the commission had been performed, say for one or two years?

Mr. HAMMOND, Certainly we could do that if we changed no law. We could refrain from appropriating the salary at all. That could be done; but when we undertake to appropriate we must not in the act of appropriating undertake at the same time to change the existing law. If we do, while we may be doing right in one sense of the word, we are, on the other hand, violating the very laws we have ourselves fixed for the control of the public business. Suppose the rules of the House had been that in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill there should be no money provided for the Civil Service Commission. Then it would be out of order to put their salaries here, either as the bill came from the committee or as amended. Why? Because that rule of the House said that we shall not. The same argument could be made in that case that has been made in this, that this is the money of the people; we are the Representatives of the people, and that as the Representatives of the people we have the right to appropriate the money. I say that we are bound by the rules, and the reply to such an argument is that while we are the Representatives of the people, still we can not make this rider on the bill, because the rules of the House say that we shall not.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the point of order, the gentleman from Texas is undoubtedly right when he says that if no appropriations at all had been put into this bill for the Civil Service Commission it would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. LONG. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas presently.

I presume also that if a less amount than is there now had been put in it it would not have been subject to the point of order. That, however, as must be apparent, is a very different case from the appropriation of a certain sum of money which is coupled with a distinct declaration that it is appropriated on certain conditions, which conditions manifestly change the existing law.

It was ruled by the Chair on yesterday that the designation of a name like that of John T. Chancey or George A. Bacon in the appropriation for the employés of the Doorkeeper's department of the House was in the nature of such a suggestion of appointment to the appointing officer as would operate almost as an enactment for the appointment, and therefore would be obnoxious to the rule. Now, the insertion of this language, certainly far more than that of the names to which objection was made on yesterday, is not only a suggestion to the Civil Service Commission as to their duties and obligations, but operates to such an extent that if we pass the bill in its present form the Civil Service Commission will have imposed upon it certain restrictions which it must observe, and which will vary its functions from what they now are under the existing law in two important respects.

First, as has been well said, if this bill becomes law the Civil Service Commission will heed it. The result will be that a discretion which under the law they now have of sending a list of as many names of those who have passed the examination as they see proper will be taken away from them, and under any fair interpretation of this clause they will be bound to send up the entire list of eligibles. That is a change of law.

Mr. REAGAN. I did by a slip of the tongue use the expression that an omission to appropriate for this purpose was not subject to the point of order. I corrected it, however, immediately by saying that a motion to strike out the appropriation would not be in order.

Mr. LONG. Secondly, this would be a change of law; because on looking at this proviso it will be found it says that the appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed, &c. In other words, the auditing officers of the Government will be forbidden to allow any payments from this appropriation or allow it to be available for the purpose for which it is appropriated unless certain specified conditions are complied with by the commission. What is the tribunal to determine whether the rules are framed in accordance with these conditions? In other words, a new function is imposed upon some tribunal, and that tribunal is the accounting officer of the Treasury.

This statement has been made before in the course of the argument, but it seems to me that upon this point it is so entirely conclusive that it must commend itself to the consideration of the Chair in the determination of the point of order: first, that it changes the law by imposing upon the commission a restriction which does not now exist upon them; and also for the reason that there is a change of law by imposing new duties upon the accounting officers of the Treasury.

It is plain, therefore, that the provision on either ground is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Suppose the bill made no appropriation whatever, but on the contrary declared that the Civil Service Commissioners would receive no salary, what would be the difference between that and withholding an appropriation?

Mr. LONG. I think then no new duty would have been imposed on the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BLAND. But the duty imposed upon the accounting officer would be not to pay the salary, because the bill declared we would make no appropriation. What is the difference between that and withholding it by silence?

Mr. LONG. If no appropriations were made at all, then no duty would be added to the Civil Service Commission beyond what they have. In the second place, the accounting officers would not be called upon to determine the availability of an appropriation, because no appropriation was made. Another answer is that suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] in speaking of the appropriation for the justices of the Supreme Court. Suppose no appropriation was made for their salaries unless they should refuse to appoint persons to supervise the elections. The illustration is perfect.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall endeavor to confine myself in the few remarks I shall make to the point of order raised by my colleague against the proviso in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

That proviso is as follows. After setting forth the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission and its employés the bill contains the following:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

The point of order has been made against this to the effect that under Rule XXI, clause 3, it is a provision in an appropriation bill changing existing law. The question, therefore, for the Chair to determine is whether this provision does change existing law. If it does of itself, and in its own terms, it is the duty of the Chair to rule it out; but if it does not, it is his duty to allow it to remain in the bill, so that this Committee of the Whole House can pass upon the proposition upon its merits.

There is a predisposition on the part of members when considering questions of order to insist upon the decision they would make if the question was submitted to them upon the merits. I hope that upon this question members will separate the two matters as they should be separated. First, is this proposition to be ruled out of order by the Chair and withheld from the action of the committee, or is it one which should be submitted to the sound discretion of legislators? Upon the latter proposition I will not now venture an opinion, but upon the other question, irrespective of the merits of this proposition, I desire to ask the attention of the Chair. Does this proposition change existing law? That is the question to decide, and the only question.

If this proviso changes an existing law at all it changes the civil-service law. I presume there is no other law upon this subject. I have the report of the Civil Service Commission in my hand. It is not pretended by any gentleman that this proviso which I have read changes a single clause or modifies the letter or the spirit of the civil-service law. But it is claimed that it changes the rules established by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Does not the civil-service law authorize the payment of $3,500 to each of the Commissioners?

Mr. SPRINGER. It fixes the salary at that amount, but authorizes no money to be paid.

Mr. BAYNE. It allows them that salary without condition except that they perform their duties.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was not an appropriation bill. It simply fixed the salaries arbitrarily.

Mr. BAYNE. It fixes the salary without limitation or condition.

Mr. SPRINGER. It fixes the salary, but does not appropriate a dollar of money.

Mr. BAYNE. It does not impose a condition on the receiving of the salary.

Mr. SPRINGER. It makes no appropriation at all, and we have nothing to do with that law so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BAYNE. You stated that the proviso did not change existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I am proceeding to show that, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask my friend——

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield any further. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield any further. If I were able to state in one sentence all I want to state in reference to that matter then it would be possible for me to submit to interruptions. But after I have made my statement perhaps gentlemen will have no occasion to interrogate me, and I prefer to proceed till I have finished my argument, and then gentlemen can submit interrogatories if they do not understand me.

I said the proviso did not change a single clause of the civil-service law; nor does it change one of the rules established in pursuance of this law. I believe this has been conceded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] and by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. LONG. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. If we adopt this proviso, is there not a new law upon the statute-book with regard to this provision and the payment of the money under it which was not there before?

Mr. SPRINGER. If we pass this legislative bill, there is and there must necessarily be, because all the provisions in this bill are new.

Mr. LONG. If we pass this provision, then is there not a law on the statute-book with regard to the Civil Service Commission and the payment of it different from the law that was there before? If so, this is a change of existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the appropriation bill itself is a change of existing law, and you can not appropriate any money without a change of law. The gentleman begs the whole question when he states that the voting of this money is a change of existing law, because there is no law on the statute-book by which any money at all may be paid out for this commission after the 1st of next July.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. My question would come in very well right here.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is it, then?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. To the amendment which I offered the other day, fixing a condition for the payment of the salaries of Senators, the objection was made that it was a change of existing law. It did not change any existing law——

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought I was to have the floor now. The gentleman is going on to make an argument about his amendment.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Not at all. But I say it was objected to that amendment, and the objection was sustained, that it would be a change of law, although it did not change any existing law, but merely suggested a condition for the payment of those salaries. Distinguish, if you please, the two cases.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will allow the gentleman to make the distinction himself in his own time.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If you can make a distinction, you can do what I can not do in anybody's time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman permit me a single question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this bill as it is presented to the House becomes a law, can the civil service law as it exists to-day be thereafter enforced? That is a plain question.

Mr. SPRINGER. After the 1st day of July next there is no law by which these Commissioners can be paid anything, and whatever law we make on that subject the accounting officers of the Treasury must take cognizance of.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But by virtue of the existing law the Civil Service Commissioners and the President may do certain things. Now, if this bill as presented, with this provision in it, becomes a law, can they then do what they may now do under the law as it exists to-day? If not, this is a change of law.

Mr. SPRINGER. They can, and I will show you they can. Now, Mr. Chairman, I come back to the question, does this proviso change existing law? If it does change any existing law, when will that change take effect? It will take effect on the day the bill is signed by the President. Now, suppose this bill is passed and is signed on the 30th of this present month; on that day it takes effect and is the law of the land. Will any gentleman in this House say that the civil-service law will thereby have been changed or that any rule adopted by the Civil Service Commission will have been changed? That is the question. If this provision will change the civil-service law or any rule of the Civil Service Commission I should like to know what law and what rule it will change.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information. The second section of the law says that the commission must provide for open competitive examinations for testing the fitness of applicants for the public service. Now, does the gentleman understand that, under this proviso reported by the Committee on Appropriations, such open competitive examinations would exist?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Would they be competitive?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Nor could any one of the Commissioners collect his salary, for this appropriation is enacted with a condition.

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] persist in begging the whole question, by assuming that this proviso does make the change of law which they have in view.

There is a begging of the question all the way through. If the Civil Service Commissioners see fit to make no changes in their rules, then the law is not changed and the rules are not changed, and nothing has been appropriated for the Civil Service Commission. That is the whole case.

Now comes the question whether we have a right to withhold appropriations for that commission or not. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that we have the right to withhold appropriations for that or for any other part of the public service, and that whether we shall vote the money or not is a question of legislative discretion addressed to this House, and not to be ruled in or out by the Chair on a point of order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We appropriate the salaries of the Commissioners in this bill, do we not? And does not this make the salaries of the Commissioners payable upon condition that they shall make a certain modification of their rules?

Mr. SPRINGER. But if they do not make that modification, then the law is not changed and the rules are not changed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But they do not get their salaries.

Mr. SPRINGER. They do not get their salaries. In other words, we have appropriated nothing for the Civil Service Commission. Now, I maintain that we have a right to withhold that appropriation, or any other appropriation, if we think proper to do so.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But in this case you do not withhold the appropriation; you make it on a condition which is contrary to existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the right to limit and control appropriations has been always maintained, has never been given up by any ruling of the Chair or by any action of the House of Representatives. It is not a new question at all. It began with the very earliest struggles for the existence of a free parliament. In 1678 the house of commons passed a resolution which has been the law of parliamentary bodies from that day to this, with such changes as have been made by the rules of the various houses. That rule is in these words:

> That all aids and supplies and aids to his majesty in Parliament are the sole gift of the commons; and all bills for the granting of any such aids and supplies ought to begin with the commons, and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the commons to direct, limit, and appoint, in such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of such grants, which ought not to be changed or altered by the house of lords.

When the Constitution of the United States was adopted our fathers changed that rule so as to permit the Senate to make amendments to appropriation bills; but no legislative body in this country or any other has ever heretofore denied the right of the people's representatives in making appropriations of money to appoint in such bills the needs, purposes, conditions, limitations, and qualifications of those appropriations. This is a right which has been uniformly maintained.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I only desire to ask——

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman to desist.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Very well; I do not wish to interfere with the development of the gentleman's theory.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, there has been no rule of this House that has interfered with this greatest of the prerogatives of the people's representatives. It was never supposed for one moment when we adopted our rules that we would thereby debar the people's representatives when they made appropriations of the people's money from saying in that same appropriation bill what should be done with this money—from placing around the appropriation any limitation, any condition, any proviso that the people's representatives might deem just and for the interest of the country. In all our appropriations heretofore this right has been uniformly recognized as being one of the inherent powers of the people's representatives; and if this power be abdicated now, I warn you, gentlemen, that our constituents will send Representatives here in the next Congress who will reassume this power and exercise it in the interest of the people.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me a single suggestion? While this House may not deprive itself of the power of which he speaks, it may determine the manner of its exercise. We simply say we will not exercise that power in one bill, but may in another. We have simply said, "If we want to change the law we will not do it in this bill, but in that," just as we apportion business among the several committees. This is a question of legislative procedure, not of legislative power.

Mr. SPRINGER. But according to the extract which I have read from May's Parliamentary History the power was reserved in the appropriation bills themselves at the time the appropriation was made to limit and appoint and direct the mode of the expenditure and place around the appropriation all the conditions deemed to be proper by the representatives of the people. That is just what is being done here. It is an intimation on the part of the people's representatives that some of the rules of the Civil Service Commission are not in the judgment of Congress in accordance with the letter and the spirit of the civil-service law, and that the Commissioners—the servants of the people, like Representatives here—ought to execute this law in the manner it was intended to be executed.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that nothing is sought to be done by this provision except to exercise our legislative discretion in throwing around the appropriation of money such limitation as Congress in its wisdom may see fit to throw around the expenditure. There is no threat to anybody; no menace. The executive department has no right to come into this House and question our legislative methods or deny our right to construe our rules in our own way and to pass such necessary measures as we may think proper to pass. We have passed a civil-service law. I voted for it; I am in favor of it; this administration is in favor of it; and I want to see it executed in letter and spirit as it was intended to be executed by Congress. I believe that some of the rules which have been adopted by the commission are not in accordance with either the letter or the spirit of the law; and it is the right of the people's representatives here to say so.

Mr. WILLIS addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear further debate, but will rule so as to advance the public business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. In order to determine whether or not the proposition under the proviso involves any change in existing law the Chair first begs attention to certain provisions in the act of January 16, 1883, known as an act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States. In the first place the following provision is found:

The commissioners shall each receive a salary of $3,500 a year. And each of said commissioners shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his duty as a commissioner.

In the second section of this act it is provided:

That it shall be the duty of said commissioners—

First. To aid the President, as he may request, in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect, and when said rules shall have been promulgated it shall be the duty of all officers of the United States in the Departments and offices to which any such rules may relate to aid, in all proper ways, in carrying said rules, and any modifications thereof, into effect.

The second division has a subdivision, containing the following language:

Second. That all the offices, places, and employments so arranged or to be arranged in classes shall be filled by selections according to grade from among those graded highest as the results of such competitive examinations.

It will be observed that what has been read is no part of the regulations, but a direction—a statutory direction—as to what these rules are to be and the purposes for which they are designed. It would seem clear that this statute intended that after the examination the selection should be made from those graded highest. In pursuance of a clear design the Civil Service Commission have enacted, in co-operation with the President or at his request, the following rule:

RULE XVI.

1. Whenever any officer having the power of appointment or employment shall so request, there shall be certified to him, by the commission or the proper examining board, four names for the vacancy specified, to be taken from those graded highest on the proper register of those in his branch of the service and remaining eligible, regard being had to any right of preference and to the apportionment of appointments to States and Territories; and from the said four a selection shall be made for the vacancy. But if a person is on both a general and a special register he need not be certified from the former, except at the discretion of the commission, until he has remained two months upon the latter.

It would seem that this rule is in exact conformity with the purpose of the statute in declaring that the selection shall be made from those reaching the highest grade. In the adoption of this rule a quasi judicial power is exercised as an incident to an executive function. It is the bounden duty of the President and the commission, in obedience to the law of the United States, to exercise their judgment in forming and promulgating the rules. In all this the law seems to have been fully and exactly complied with.

Now, then, in the appropriation bill we find this provision:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three Commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a stenographer, $1,800; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one messenger, $840; and one laborer; in all, $21,400: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

The law has expressly declared that these Commissioners are entitled to a salary of $3,500 each a year, and under the law the disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department would ordinarily be compelled to pay that compensation. The proposition embodied in this bill contemplates the idea that unless the President, who at last has the power, the responsible power, of the establishment of these rules, shall conform to the suggestion in this amendment, that he shall send up all the names, without regard to age or grade, in contravention of the rules that he has established in the exercise of his functions as Chief Executive, and if he shall not do that, then not only shall the Commissioners be excluded from receiving their salaries by the disbursing officer of the Government under the appropriation inserted in this bill, but the same shall be true of the chief examiner, the chief clerk, the stenographer, the several clerks, and even of the laborer provided in this section.

In other words, all possibility of executing the law by reason of the abstention of the salary is accomplished, unless the President shall conform to the suggestion in this appropriation.

Let us examine for a moment the rules of the House in relation to what may be done in an appropriation bill. The Chair had occasion in the earlier part of the consideration of this bill to recite the fact that under the rules of the Forty-fourth Congress there could be no legislation upon appropriation bills except such as generally retrenched expenditures. Subsequently in the Forty-sixth Congress there was discontent with the provision and the power contained in that rule to legislate upon appropriation bills, and three or four instances were specified where it was admissible; and in addition it was further provided that the committee having charge of the subject-matter under consideration might have the right to amend the bill by a proposition which would generally retrench expenditures.

At this session of Congress paragraph 3 of Rule XXI was made a part of the rules of the House. It seems from the language of the rule as though there was a clear purpose on the part of the House to provide that there should be no legislative proposition whatever contained in an appropriation bill except such as is specifically mentioned in the rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Under which language the Chair supposes it was the design of the House that the committee should report appropriations where the necessity is shown by the authority and only by the authority of existing law in each case. The language can mean nothing else, because the rule goes on to provide:

Unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

We have, for instance, the Light-House Service, the Life-Saving Service, the repairs of buildings, and many such provisions that are not specifically authorized by law, and the Chair supposes the House intended by this rule that the words "public works and objects" and legislation connected with that would be admissible. Then continuing still:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

It would seem that they could not report a dollar of appropriation except as authorized by law unless in the instances mentioned; and in addition there was this last provision of the rule, which declares the purpose that no provision changing existing law shall be incorporated, expressly thereby prohibiting legislation.

The Chair asks attention to Rule XI in this connection, as conforming to what he deems to be the correct construction of Rule XXI:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, to wit, namely: Subjects relating—

To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections.

To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

All proposed legislation relating to questions touching civil-service reform: to the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

The Chair thinks therefore it was not competent for the Committee on Appropriations, nor competent for this committee in connection with appropriations, to consider at all the question of civil-service reform or to make any limitation on an appropriation designed for that purpose. If this appropriation shall be inserted in the bill under the law which applies to the appropriation, which authorizes the appropriation, without which the appropriation could not be inserted, the disbursing officer of the Treasury, ascertaining the law and the identity of the officer, is compelled to pay the money to him. If this provision is inserted and becomes a part of the bill for next year in connection with the appropriation, the payment of these officers designated in the amendment can not be made until the accounting officer shall have first ascertained that the Chief Executive of the United States has directed the rules which he has established in pursuance of his executive functions to be so changed that all names shall be sent up. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and which in my judgment is in order under the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "dollars," in line 439, the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available to carry out any rule of the Civil Service Commission which excludes from appointment in the civil service applicants over forty-five years of age."

Mr. BEACH. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRISON. I make the same point of order on this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he include in his request that permission be granted for printing in the RECORD all speeches on the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This amendment raises a new point, and I would like to be heard on it for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please repeat his request.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that all gentlemen who desire it may have leave to print remarks, and that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman include debate on questions of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. On all matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Indiana. He asks that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto and questions of order relating thereto be closed in twenty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ELY. I object.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. There may be some discussion upon the provision in regard to traveling expenses.

Mr WARNER, of Ohio, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear argument on this question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think the question is open to argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair prefers to rule on the question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I beg pardon. I think this question is open to argument, and I think I can convince the Chair——

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of order. The Chair has stated he is ready to rule on the point of order, and the gentleman from Ohio is out of order in attempting to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to extend every possible courtesy to every gentleman on this floor. But he has been urged, and the Chair thinks properly, to aid in the facilitation of the public business.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not wish to occupy more than two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman for that length of time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. The Chair within the last three minutes has decided this point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I differ from the gentleman from Illinois as to that. The point now presented has not been decided. There is no question that Congress has the right to control appropriations and to direct specifically how they shall be applied. There is no question about that. It is true that by our rules we have provided that such directions shall not be incorporated in an appropriation bill if they change existing law; but if they do not change existing law then they are not excluded, and are in order on an appropriation bill. It is in order in an appropriation bill to direct to what objects appropriations shall be applied and to what they shall not be applied, provided in so doing you do not change any existing law. There is nothing in the rules of the House prohibiting this, and it would be ridiculous to prohibit such direction of appropriations.

Now, as to the rule of the Civil Service Commission excluding men over forty-five years of age from appointments in the civil service, is that rule law? That is the point to which I invite the attention of the Chair. Is that law? Does the law fix any such limitation? A rule can not go beyond the law, but undoubtedly has the force of law if it is made in accordance with the law and to carry out the law. But a rule that goes beyond the limit of the law is invalid. Suppose, for instance, Mr. Chairman, the Civil Service Commission should make a rule that only white men should be appointed to office, or that only colored men should be admitted to examination, or that only American-born citizens should be eligible to office under the civil-service law, or that only foreign-born citizens should be appointed, or only men 6 feet high, or only men twenty-one years of age—would that be law? The rules are law, I say, only in so far as they are made to carry out the spirit of the law, and when they go beyond the scope of the law they cease to be law.

The Civil Service Commission can not legislate, and the moment they go beyond the proper scope, spirit, or intent of the law in their rules, that moment their rules cease to be binding on anybody. This rule excluding all applicants over forty-five years of age is not law. It therefore binds nobody. It is an attempt to legislate by the Civil Service Commission. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say that the amendment I have sent up changes no existing law, and it is in order on this bill. The rule, moreover, is an abridgment of the constitutional rights of citizens and ought not to be appropriated for.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Chair may rap me down, but I submit that even the Chair is not beyond enlightenment on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair—no, I will not do that; but I will ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be adopted, inasmuch as gentlemen on the other side of the House as well as on this have expressed their approval of such a provision. There has been no objection made to a provision of this kind, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BEACH. I shall object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The President and the commission may make that change in the rules now if they desire.

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But I propose that no part of this appropriation shall be available for or applied to carrying out this obnoxious rule. Is there objection to my request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; because the President and the commission have that power now.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The President has the power at present. Your proposition is to coerce him.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I move to strike out the section. Mr. Chairman, I shall not in the few remarks which I have to submit upon this important provision, at this important juncture of our national affairs, inflict upon this House any dissertation upon the local politics of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, save to suggest that my colleagues have effectually settled the question of the Baltimore post-office in connection with the carrying out of the civil-service law in Maryland, and settled it, I hope, to their mutual satisfaction; or, if not to the satisfaction of my colleague upon my left [Mr. FINDLAY], settled it at least to the satisfaction of those colleagues of mine who shoulder to shoulder with me in November last fought the battles of the Democracy; settled to the satisfaction, Mr. Chairman, of that element of the Democratic party in Maryland which in November last put the stamp and seal of its condemnation by 30,000 majority upon the "spurious Democracy" of which my friend upon the left [Mr. FINDLAY] was then the ally and is now the champion.

Mr. Chairman, to another view do I now address myself, and that is to the suggestion which I have just made. Sir, if this Government of ours is a representative government, a government such as its fathers designed it to be, a government in which its powers are distributed among the people; if, in short, it be a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, then, sir, this interpolation and irrelevancy of civil-service reform can find no part or lot in this administration.

And, sir, if, as I hold, the Democratic party typifies and illustrates the very genius and essence of a republican government—nay, more, sir, if the very pabulum and instinct of a representative government originated in the Democratic party, then, sir, that party to-day needs no light upon its pathway from such a squinting device as civil-service reform. Ah, no, Mr. Speaker; the Democratic party needs no reform. It is to-day the embodiment of reform. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] Laugh, my friends on the other side laugh! Let him laugh who loses; he who wins is bound to laugh. I repeat, and I here throw down the gage, and I challenge the successful contradiction of the proposition that the Democratic party is to-day the embodiment of reform in all that conduces to the best interests of this great American nation. And that gage and challenge I will maintain with my voice and my vote and defend with all the best energies of my soul and body.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the gentleman mean "Higgins and reform?"

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Eugene Higgins shall not be mentioned in my presence save to elicit this response: Look well, my Republican friends, before you seek to condemn Higgins. There are thousands in the Republican party, and I do not mean——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENLEY was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I thank my friend.

Suffice it to say that to undertake to defend Eugene Higgins would be a labor of love, for I know the man; but as well might my friend from New Hampshire, as a representative of the virtue of the Republican party, seek to carp at Eugene Higgins as a "mousing owl to snap at an eagle in his eyrie." So much for that.

Mr. PERKINS rose.

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). Higgins has not been "tattooed."

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; the Republican party was not mean enough to "tattoo" him.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, we are not Sandwich islanders, and I do not propose to consider the question of "tattooing." The only instance I have heard of in our political history of a man being "tattooed" was the Republican candidate for the Presidency in the last election. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. And it was by a party mean enough to do that kind of business. The men of your side have not been "tattooed" because we do not engage in that kind of nastiness.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I will come to that matter at another time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Any time will suit me.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the party whose inherent vitality and integrity have enabled it to outlive every phase of Federalism, of Whigism, of Knownothingism, and of Republicanism will be equal to the task should the occasion arise of applying its own conceptions of genuine reform, or it can be taught, as the Republican party has lately been taught, the salutary discipline of "stepping down and out."

Mr. Chairman, if after a period of more than a quarter of a century of Republican rule, if after more than a quarter of a century of abuse of power, that abuse of power has become so flagrant and the incrustations upon the civil service have become such as to contaminate the Government, it is not now that the Democratic party should seek to rectify and restore the public service by the adoption of alien and spurious usages. For fifty years the Democratic party bore sway in the councils of this nation. For fifty years under Democratic rule was our honor maintained and our public credit preserved at home and abroad. During all these years no bitter strifes between labor and capital characterized its reign; on the contrary, the blessings of Government, like the dews of heaven, fell alike upon the rich man and the poor man. During all these years this Government of ours was normal and healthy; and its vigorous, robust, and lusty organism was plied with no such nauseous nostrum as "civil-service reform." No ills of the Democratic party required such a panacea.

While I am radically opposed to the especial features under consideration of the civil-service act, I regard them as but features of an act which is unconstitutional and vicious throughout; an act which seeks to supplant the provisions of our very organic law; an act whose tendency is to mar and to mutilate American manhood!

It lays restrictions where no restrictions were intended!

It applies tests which abridge the prerogative of every American citizen!

I wish to be definitely and distinctly understood, Mr. Chairman, as making no arraignment of the administration. I stand by this administration! My section and my State stand by the President. We stand by him to cheer him with our voice and to uphold him with our hands.

The Republican party in mellifluous utterances are to-day praising the President for his civil-service views. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." I believe the President in good faith is acting up to the measure of his sense of duty and responsibility upon the platform of his nomination.

But the President of the United States is handicapped by this measure. I want to see these shackles stricken off this administration. I want to see the Democratic party unhand itself of these alien influences by which it is shorn of its normal and legitimate strength. I want to see it relieve itself of a dubious and mistaken alliance with an exotic importation, indigenous and germane to a monarchy beyond the sea! The civil-service plank has no fitness in the Democratic platform. I want to see that plank disjoined from the structure as marring and sapping its integrity.

I want the party of the people, for the people, and by the people to recur afresh to those perennial streams of principle and policy which nourish and sustain and invigorate its life. I want to see the party no further delude itself by any device of argument that the resource of "civil-service reform" is sound Democracy. It is a subtle device of the enemy. It will forestall and paralyze our party's legitimate success.

The Republican party is seeking to use this measure to anticipate and to claim any credit which would otherwise inure to us. It reaps where it has not sown; it gathers where it has not strewn. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allowed me (and I do not know that I shall occupy even all of it) I do not propose to answer the diatribe of the gentleman who has just taken his seat against the Republican party. In its twenty-four years of "misrule," as he designates it, he includes the four years from 1861 to 1865. When the Republican party was organizing the forces of this country to save its life, was that "misrule?" I do not mean to reflect upon any gentleman in this House, but I ask the question, when it abolished slavery, was that "misrule?" When it gave free homesteads to the people, was that "misrule?" When it established universal suffrage, together with universal forgiveness of those who had been in arms against the Government, was that "misrule?" When it reconstructed the Government so as to hurry the rebel States back into their former relations in the Union, was that "misrule?" When it so administered the finances as to reduce the public debt from three thousand millions in 1865 to less than fifteen hundred millions in 1884, was that "misrule?" When it reduced the rate of interest from 12 per cent. in 1860 to 3 per cent. in 1885, raised the public credit to the highest plane, at the same time restoring specie payment, leaving in peace and prosperity a government which it took from you in the convulsions of rebellion and war, was that "misrule?"

The Republican party needs no defense. It has made its history to the present time and by it we are willing it shall be judged. Let me conclude what I have to say on this point by predicting that when the future historian shall come to write down the transactions of this generation he will fail not to make it clear in the leaves of his volume that the grandest and proudest pages of American history were made by the Republican party of this time.

One further remark. My friend who has just taken his seat has been bold enough (and I thank him for it) to declare that he is opposed to civil-service reform. I believe that is a more honorable way of dealing with this question than to attempt to destroy this system indirectly, as is sought to be done in this bill. In this discussion, who stands by this administration? The President himself has made these rules which gentlemen on the other side seek to abolish. He can repeal or change them, but his party friends are unwilling to trust him to do it. They know very well he will not do it. They would coerce him. We are standing by, you gentlemen on the other side are not supporting, him.

Ah, my friends, you, like other people, are governed by the force of habit. You have been accustomed to oppose the administration of this Government ever since 1861. We have been sustaining the administrations of the Government during all that time. You are so far controlled by your past practice that now when you have elected your own President and placed him in power you still indulge in your old habit and oppose the administration of your own choice, and we find ourselves obliged to sustain your administration for you. We will do it every time your administration is right, for then in particular it will be most likely to need our support. In our twenty-four years of power we learned the lesson of patriotism by practicing it—learned it so well that for no party advantage will we oppose a measure of this Democratic administration when we believe it to be correct. We are not here as mere partisans.

I heartily agree with the President in his views of civil-service reform as I understand them. This reform, as has been stated, has "come to stay." It ought to stay. This Government has grown so large, it has so many office-holders, that to attempt to change them every four years would almost produce a revolution. It certainly could not fail to seriously interfere with the efficiency of the Government service. Further than that, it would be an act of cruelty to change the whole force of clerks in this way. I do not disagree with those who believe that offices which have political significance, those which are related closely to the President, should be changed when the administration is changed. But if you should undertake to make a clean sweep, as my friend from Maryland indicates he would do every four years, I do not care what party may be in power, the result would be such as I think good citizens would not desire to witness.

These men who hold subordinate places have learned their duty by long experience. Many of them have served the Government for so many years that the muscle of their genius to knock against the hard edges of the world has been so weakened by lack of practice that when turned out to compete in the battle of life they are in no wise equipped for the struggle and their position is a very hard one, while their experience in the public service, like experience everywhere, makes them practically valuable there.

And who would be benefited by taking their places if they are to be so unstable as to be liable to change every four years. Certainly no one would introduce a young man to such an uncertain occupation unless he were his enemy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to ask unanimous consent that debate, each side having been heard, shall be closed at once, or at least some time be fixed when it shall be closed. I would suggest ten minutes, five minutes on each side.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object to closing debate on the whole subject, but I do not object to closing debate on the pending amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7984) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, pending that, I move that all debate on the pending proposition and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Does the gentleman propose to close debate on the pending proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. And amendments.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If the gentleman confines it to the pending proposition, then I do not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean the paragraph commencing at line 432 and ending with line 445.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. All right then.

Mr. BEACH. I move to make it one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate has been limited on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto to one minute.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think gentlemen will recollect that no motion of that kind closing debate in one minute was adopted. There was a motion by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and an amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH]. There was a vote on the last proposition and none on the other. There is, therefore, no limit to debate. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The report by the Chair to the committee was that the debate, by order of the House, was limited to one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair so informed the committee on the indication of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I appeal to the Journal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not rule on that.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was but one vote. There was a motion and an amendment thereto by the gentleman from New York. The amendment was the only thing voted on.

Mr. BEACH. I ask by unanimous consent that debate on this proposition and all amendments thereto cease in one minute, for that manifestly was the intention of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move the committee rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is closed in one minute by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Read!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] withdraw his amendment, or does he wish the question taken upon it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 75.

So the amendment of Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses $3,500,

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I move to strike out "3" and insert "4." Forty-five hundred dollars is the amount asked last year and this House appropriated $3,500. The Commissioners estimate $4,500 this year and the Appropriations Committee gives them $3,500. The Civil Service Commissioners, it is well understood, can not make these examinations all over the country. The examinations are conducted by local boards. The central board supervises. It is necessary they should supervise in order the examinations all over the country shall be conducted on the same grade.

In a large State like that of New York, for instance, the examinations can not be conducted in any one city. They must be conducted in many places by many different local boards; and it is in the interest of fairness, whatever gentlemen may think of competitive or non-competitive examinations, that the decisions made by the local boards should be fairly compared with each other, in order that all applicants in all parts of the country should be sure of a fair treatment in these examinations.

There was a feeling among the people in the locality where I live, when the Pendleton bill first became a law, that they could not be fairly treated because the examinations were not controlled by local boards. They could not be assured that the same grade of efficiency would be required in one place that was required in another. Uniformity of grade in the examinations can not be secured except by adequate appropriations for the traveling expenses of the commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. We appropriated for the coming year the same sum that was appropriated for the present year. An examination, on the part of the committee, induced them to believe that the appropriation here proposed is sufficient. I call for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For compensation of the Secretary of State, $8,000; First Assistant Secretary of State, $4,500; two Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each; for chief clerk, $2,750; for six chiefs of bureau and one translator, at $2,100 each; stenographer to the Secretary, $1,800; eleven clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; seven clerks of class 2; fourteen clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; and ten clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; one packer, at $720; ten laborers; in all, $114,150.

Mr. HOLMAN. Last evening I made objection to the words contained in this paragraph "First Assistant Secretary of State, $4,500." I reserved that simply for the reason that this office is created by an appropriation bill only. I withdraw the point of order. Let us pass on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will begin reading, at page 23, a paragraph which was passed over last night on an objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations: For chief of division, $2,750; assistant chief of division, $2,400; estimate and digest clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; four clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; one laborer; and one assistant messenger; in all, $33,230.

The CHAIRMAN. To this paragraph the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has presented an amendment to strike out of line 537 "$2,750" and insert "$3,000." The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] also has an amendment pending.

Mr. TAULBEE. My amendment relates to lines 538 and 539, to strike out the words "assistant chief of division, $2,400."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have the attention of the committee for a few moments as to the amendment which I have offered.

This chief of division is an efficient and faithful officer of long standing in the Treasury Department. He makes the estimates for the whole of the civil service of the Government as well as performs many other duties. I hold the principal Book of Estimates in my hand, which is prepared by him, and gentlemen understand what it is. There are many other estimates of deficiencies and other executive documents touching expenditures of money which go through his hands. You take up the Book of Estimates and you will find that there is not only an estimate sent in, as required by the law, for each of the expenditures of the Government, but full information in reference to it. The law is cited for it and other facts given which are of importance to the committee in making up the bill. For many years past people familiar with the work felt that this officer really earned $5,000 a year, and yet he has received only $2,750. Long years ago, ten or fifteen years past, the Revised Statutes fixed his salary at $3,000 a year, and that is the law now. I believe this official should have that amount of money.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary is fixed at $2,750 a year, which was done ten years ago.

Mr. HEWITT. Then he ought to have the increase by reason of longevity.

Mr. STEELE. And a good reason for giving it to him is his long service.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 22.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will take a vote in the House on that amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe my amendment is now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment, as the Chair understands, is to strike out, in lines 583 and 539, the words "assistant chief of division, $2,400."

Mr. TAULBEE. After having had a statement from the gentleman in charge of the bill and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in reference to this particular officer, I withdraw that amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Division of customs: For chief of division, $2,750; assistant chief of division, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; eight clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $29,590.

The Clerk also read the amendment proposed by Mr. TAULBEE to the above paragraph, as follows:

In lines 546 and 547 strike out the words "assistant chief of division, $2,000."

Mr. TAULBEE. I offered several amendments last night similar to these, and I made a statement to this effect, that if the gentleman in charge of the bill, or any member of the Committee on Appropriations, should make a statement that these officers were absolutely necessary to the good of the service, I did not wish to press these amendments. I am now willing, as these amendments are read, if the gentleman from Indiana who has charge of the bill shall make that statement, to withdraw them.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is any office provided for here not absolutely necessary for carrying on the Government that fact is not within the knowledge of the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think that statement is sufficient, that the fact is not within the knowledge of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman suppose the committee propose a bill to this House without examining it item by item for months?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not. But I desire to say this much, that if the committee have examined the bill item by item for months they ought to be able to state whether they regard any particular office as indispensable to the good of the service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would suggest that the only effect of the effort of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out these salaries has been to increase the salary of one of them. All these assistant chiefs are entitled to higher salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. And this one is peculiarly entitled.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois has done me justice in his statement that my object in offering this amendment was to increase the salary of a chief of division.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not say that was the object. I said that had been the effect of it.

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as the increase of the salaries of chiefs of divisions is concerned I have not advocated any such idea. When the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the preceding paragraph to increase the pay of the chief of division was read I voted against it. I have not by word or act given any warrant to the gentleman to make such a statement. It is purely gratuitous on his part; and I shall certainly not plead guilty to that charge. My object was to curtail the force where it may be unnecessarily large, and to provide only such salaries as are necessary for the efficiency of the service.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he withdraws now all his amendments, including the one relating to the assistant general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. TAULBEE. No, sir; I do not withdraw that amendment, nor this one, nor any other, except on the condition which I have stated plainly, and which I think the gentleman understands.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Allow me to say in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky that I did not accuse the gentleman of any intention at all to raise salaries. But I did say, and I repeat it, the only effect of his efforts to strike out assistant chiefs of division has been to increase the salary of one of the chiefs beyond the amount fixed in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of getting a number of paragraphs disposed of at once I will say to my friend from Kentucky that the Department deems all these officers provided for in the paragraphs passed over last night to be indispensable for the discharge of the duties in the various branches of the Department. Otherwise they would not be in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Last evening when the gentleman from Kentucky offered an amendment to the paragraph relating to the Life-Saving Service he recited a conversation which he said had occurred between himself and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. William E. Smith. A few moments ago I received from that gentleman a note which I desire to have read. I think it but justice it should be read and go on the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done till that portion of the bill is reached.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood that portion of the bill had been reached.

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as I am concerned I am willing this matter should be looked into at once, although it may not be strictly in order at this time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has shown me within a few moments the letter he received from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I showed it to the gentleman immediately on receiving it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that that particular office is the one on which I more particularly expect to make a controversy as to the appropriation. If the investigation of this matter is reasonably satisfactory to my mind and to the minds of other gentlemen of this House—if it appears that these assistant chiefs of bureaus are necessary for the good of the service, I am willing to withdraw these amendments, all except the one pertaining to the Life-Saving Service. And I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be now allowed to make his statement and have the letter read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us reach that paragraph first. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his point as to all these paragraphs.

Mr. TAULBEE. I stated if this investigation developed sufficient to convince me of the necessity of these officers I would not insist on those amendments. After having heard the statement of the gentleman from Indiana as to this office I withdraw this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. That brings us directly to the one in connection with which the gentleman from Kentucky mentioned in the debate last evening the substance of a conversation he had with Mr. William E. Smith, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] we passed over last evening the provisions relating to the auditorships and the Commissioner of Customs, and went on to the provision on page 37, relating to the Life-Saving Service. Now I understand that the gentleman withdraws all his amendments before this latter point.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, if the statement made by the gentleman in charge of the bill with reference to the section under consideration was intended to apply to all the others, I do withdraw those amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was so intended.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I withdraw the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment offered on page 31, in reference to the Fourth Auditor's office, that ought to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 738 and 739 strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve," and in line 741, after the word "each" where it last occurs, insert "four clerks, at $800 each."

Mr. HOLMAN. This does not change the amount of the appropriation. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this an amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. It comes from the committee.

Mr. CANNON. This proposition strikes out two clerks at $1,600 apiece and puts in four clerks at $800. Coming from the committee, I shall not antagonize it further than to call attention to the fact that these two clerks are stricken out and four men put in their places, they not coming, as I understand, under the civil-service rules, and the object being to make four places instead of two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now let us pass to page 37.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 886 and 887 amend by striking out "assistant general superintendent Life-Saving Service, $2,500."

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] advocated that motion. I rise to oppose it, and I submit a letter which I have received this morning from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and also a letter from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service.

The letters were read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 12, 1886.

HON. S. J. RANDALL: My attention has just been called to Mr. TAULBEE'S remarks in reference to the office of assistant superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, printed in this morning's RECORD. I did not say to Mr. TAULBEE that Mr. O'Connor, the present incumbent, had for a number of years been unable to perform any service, or to make any compensation to the Government for the $2,500 he had been receiving; nor did I state that the only reasons for not dispensing with this office, or supplanting the incumbent with one more efficient were that Mr. O'Connor was regarded by his associates as an elegant gentleman, and was a friend of a former Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. O'Connor was sick for several months between June and February last, and I so stated to Mr. TAULBEE some time since when he called upon me and demanded Mr. O'Connor's removal and the appointment of a man from his district in his place. Mr. O'Connor has been at his desk regularly since February last, and the office of assistant superintendent of the Life-Saving Service is considered by the Department as indispensable.

W. E. SMITH, Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, June 12, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In reference to Mr. TAULBEE'S remarks last night I desire to say: The present system of the Life-Saving Service was organized in 1871, and was attached to the revenue marine division of the Treasury Department, and governed by regulations until 1878, when it was established into a bureau by act of Congress. The assistant general superintendent is Mr. William D. O'Connor, one of the ablest men in any department of the Government. He was connected with the Life-Saving Service about two years before its formation into a bureau. Before that time he was for many years a clerk in the Light-House Board, and at one time chief clerk of the board. He has never failed to be at his post of duty until about the 1st of June last year (1885), when he was taken sick and obtained leave of absence for one month. Upon his return he was not much improved and was peremptorily forbidden by his physician to perform any work. He was suffering from nervous exhaustion, with threatened paralysis, produced, as stated by his physician, by overwork. He abstained from much labor until about the 1st of February, when he resumed almost entirely his usual duties, and has been performing them in a thoroughly satisfactory manner ever since.

Mr. O'Connor has more than earned every cent he ever received from the Government. For more than six months upon a stretch he has worked with me at night until half past 11, 12, and sometimes as late as 2 o'clock at night, for which he never received nor claimed a cent of extra pay.

The office is an indispensable one. It is incorrect, as was stated in the House last night, that the services of the officer filling it have been dispensed with for a number of years. They have never been dispensed with except for the time stated above, and during that time the administration of the office suffered in consequence, and my labors were unduly increased, taking up every holiday and imposing much labor by night, and even then the work fell behind.

The abolition of the office would seriously embarrass the service.

Very respectfully,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent Life-Saving Service.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to add.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, in response to what has been said, and to the letters which have just been read, with reference to my statements on the floor last evening, I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk the reporter's notes (which he has just furnished me) of the statement which I made this morning correcting the RECORD. I made that statement without suggestion from any one, and before I was informed of the receipt of these letters.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a correction in the RECORD. On page 5853 I am represented as repeating a statement made by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and I am made to say the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury informed me that the man who holds this office had for a number of years been unable to perform any service or to make any compensation to the Government for the $2,500 which he had been receiving.

What I intended to say was that this officer had for a number of years been unable to perform the duties of his position and to make adequate compensation to the Government for the $2,500 which he had been receiving.

Further, I am represented as saying in the same remarks that, as an excuse for this abuse, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury offered the fact that this incumbent had been a friend of former Secretaries.

What I intended to say was that, as an apology for the present management of this matter, the favor this officer had found with former Secretaries of the Treasury had been given as a reason for retaining him in the service.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that the correction which I made of the RECORD this morning is somewhat technical and that the main facts of my statement are unchanged, and it will be seen by reference to the letters which have been read here there still remains an issue of fact.

I do not remember, Mr. Chairman, whether any other person was present during this conversation. The facts as they occurred were about these: A man from my part of the country was an applicant for a position as chief of bureau in the Treasury Department. He had not designated any particular office which he desired to fill. He was like a great many other Democrats throughout the country, he wanted an office in the public service. I took the papers and testimonials with which he had furnished me. I wrote such an indorsement of his character and efficiency for the public business and duties as I thought my knowledge of the man justified, and I filed it with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He informed me that there were no vacancies in that particular branch of the service. I asked him then to investigate the facts with reference to this particular office, which he promised me to do; and he asked me to call again on the following day. When I went back to the office he reported to me the facts which I stated last night with reference to that conversation as corrected by me for the RECORD to-day.

I have no knowledge of the facts pertaining to this office. I referred in that conversation and in those remarks of last night to a letter which the superintendent of that service had written to the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, substantiating what I had said with reference to the statements of the Assistant Secretary to me. I fail to discover in these letters any contradiction of that statement; and I suppose it may reasonably be concluded that there was no fault to be found with that part of it. This, Mr. Chairman, is a part of the means of my information.

So far as the question of veracity is concerned I leave the House and the country to judge of that. Whether I am justified in moving this amendment to this bill I leave the House to judge upon the facts now before it.

I have not been perhaps as importunate with reference to procuring offices for my constituents as some others have been; but a phrase in the letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, read this morning from the Clerk's desk, attempts to make prominent that particular feature of this controversy. Not long since, and after the vote on the resolution which I introduced——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. It will be remembered that on the 1st day of May there was a controversy in this House with reference to a resolution I had introduced looking to the investigation of certain admitted abuses in the Treasury Department. I wish to disclaim having introduced that resolution in any spirit of vindictiveness, but I introduced it in good faith, believing that those abuses existed. Knowing that they did exist from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which was filed with that report, I was attempting in good faith to correct those abuses. Subsequently to that, when members of this House visited the office of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to appointments of their constituents to office, those of them who had voted in favor of the adoption of that resolution were jibed with that fact by this Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; and in the presence of the Representative from New York, who is now before me, this man Smith said to me that no man who had introduced such a resolution in the House of Representatives and had made such an argument as I then made—an argument that I believed to be fair and just—could expect a good state of feelings to exist toward him among the officials of the Treasury Department.

Mr. Chairman, the issue is made tacitly that members on this floor who, in the conscientious discharge of their duty, attempt to correct the abuses which now exist in the public service are to be "boycotted" and ostracised by these officials in the exercise of the ordinary civilities and courtesies which should prevail between that Department and the Representatives of the people. I am willing, so far as Mr. Smith and I are concerned, that that issue shall go before the country.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, in the conversation alluded to, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury used substantially these words: that this man was borne upon the rolls as a pensioner on the Government through the forbearance of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is due to the acting Secretary of the Treasury to say that he declined to take action upon this matter because, he said, the principal of that office, Secretary Manning, prior to his recent affliction, had been considering the matter, and inasmuch as he had taken it up for consideration the acting Secretary of the Treasury did not feel altogether authorized to act in the premises during the illness of the Secretary of the Treasury—a position which I conceded to be perfectly fair.

The prime object, I maintain, which has prompted me to this investigation was to cut off and stop these thefts which have been going on in the public service, and which, I am sorry to say, Democrats high in authority have been winking at and tolerating under their immediate supervision. The conduct of this man Smith, having in charge virtually——

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to know whether the gentleman is discussing the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has offered an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. I understood that amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been withdrawn. It is an amendment to strike out a certain office.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that the gentleman be confined in his remarks to a discussion of the subject-matter before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no; I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will have all the latitude he desires. It is due to him that he should.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN]?

Mr. SOWDEN. This seems to be merely a question of veracity between the gentleman from Kentucky and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; and I do not think the public business should be delayed by a discussion of that matter here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor, and will proceed.

Mr. BEACH. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEACH. If the gentleman from Kentucky desires to proceed with his argument I must insist that he proceed in order. When the gentleman is referring to an officer who occupies a very high and prominent position in our Government, I object most decidedly to his designating him as "this man Smith." I think it is entirely improper. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. That is neither here nor there.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will apologize to the gentleman from New York and other members if, in the course of my remarks, I have been discourteous, and I will withdraw that part of my remarks.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You withdraw that part in which you called him Smith. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I will call him "Mr. Smith." I do not desire to be discourteous to any gentleman on this floor or to any officer of this Government. I recognize the fact that these officers are indispensable, and that every man meets with his individual difficulties in the discharge of his official duties. But I maintain that it is not proper or right for an officer of this Government to attempt to coerce the conduct of a Representative on this floor either by threat, intimidation, or by undue inducement in the way of public patronage in order to influence the Representative in voting for or against a given proposition, or in introducing or refraining from introducing any resolution which he may think it his privilege and right under the rules and his duty as a Representative of the people to introduce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this state of the case presents itself to members of this House, that officers in the executive branch of the Government are by implication, if not in so many words, giving members on this floor to understand the disposition of the patronage of the Government shall be measured by the support of the administration whether that administration be right or wrong.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the floor, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless some understanding can be reached in reference to debate I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing it.

Mr. RANDALL. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask to be heard, and I wish simply to say this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not wish to reply to the gentleman from Kentucky beyond simply saying that this officer is needed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh! we all agree to that. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TAULBEE'S amendment was disagreed to.

The next paragraph passed over is the following, to be found on page 41:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue: For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division, at $2,500 each; five heads of division, at $2,250 each; one superintendent of stamp-vault, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-four clerks of class 4; twenty-five clerks of class 3; thirty-four clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1; fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each; forty clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; fourteen assistant messengers; and thirteen laborers; in all, $259,190.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, in line 985, to strike out "two heads of division, at $2,500; five heads of division, at $2,250 each," and insert in lieu thereof "seven heads of division, at $2,500 each."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that is a change of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must overrule the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the law provides that these seven heads of division shall have a salary of $2,500 each. In this bill it is proposed to appropriate for two heads of division at $2,500 each, and for five heads of division at $2,250 each. The purpose of my amendment simply is to make the bill conform to the statute, and I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law except as it is found in the provision of the appropriation bill, and the provision in this bill is as it has been for many years. Although I have not the law before me, I have no doubt when the gentleman produces it that will be found to be the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this bill the salary of five heads of division is less than the law provides they shall receive. In other words, it appropriates for them $2,250, when the law fixes their salary at $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is agreeable to the gentleman from Indiana I should like to have some explanation why two heads of division should receive $2,500 and five heads of division only $2,250 each, especially when the chief of the tobacco division, through whose hands $30,000,000 of revenue comes to this Government, is one of those who receives only $2,250, while some other charged with less important duties gets $2,500. I should like to have some explanation of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The explanation is that this arrangement has been made for many years at the suggestion of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been the law for several years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. And it is founded upon the estimates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and I take it for granted the Treasury Department is better informed on this subject than the gentleman possibly can be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Treasury Department recommended this?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; it is in the estimates we have received.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Treasury Department recommended to this House that two heads of division shall receive $2,500 each and five heads of division only $2,250 a year, when the law fixes their salary at $2,500 a year?

Mr. HOLMAN. We take the estimates as they come from the Treasury Department, and that has been the estimate for several years. I trust the gentleman will not press his amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do press it. By paying these salaries only in part we are imposing upon the Government a crop of lawsuits, the final result of which will hardly be in the line of economy, notwithstanding the views of the gentleman from Indiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall demand a division on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 47.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting internal revenue:

For salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors, $1,800,000: Provided, That the number of deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employés be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to collectors of internal revenue except the allowances provided for in section 12 of the act of February 8, 1875, as amended by section 2 of the act of March 1, 1879.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment on that paragraph the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1062, insert, after the word "increased," the words "in the aggregate;" so it will read:

"Be increased in the aggregate beyond the salary paid during the last fiscal year."

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope this amendment will be adopted. Let me call the attention of my colleague upon the other side for a moment to this point. My attention has been drawn to the fact that in some of the offices of collectors of internal revenue throughout different parts of the country the salaries are very unequally adjusted, and the Commissioner has stated that he could much better subserve the public interests if he were permitted to adjust the salaries, increasing in some instances and reducing in others, but not to increase them in the aggregate. Some of the salaries are now higher than ought to be paid, while some who perform more important duties are receiving less salary and ought to be increased. My amendment provides that they may be increased in certain instances, but not in the aggregate. It enables the collector to determine the value of the service performed by certain men and to allow pay for it in accordance with its value.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON The point of order is pending, I believe, against the proviso on page 44.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think a word of explanation will satisfy my friend from Illinois that this proviso is all right.

In addition to the salaries provided by law for internal-revenue collectors the Court of Claims has recently rendered a decision which would entitle them to one-half of 1 per cent. upon certain of the collections made by them, and this proviso here is for the purpose of restricting them, as we had supposed they were restricted by the section to which reference is made, to the salary therein fixed.

A MEMBER. What would be the difference?

Mr. HOLMAN. The difference would be an increase of about $90,000 a year in the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. MORRISON. I make the point of order upon that proviso. There is a bill pending on the subject which is legitimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be done.

Mr. MORRISON. I think it is a proviso that should be stricken from the bill. I am familiar with its purpose, although the gentleman from Indiana greatly overstates its effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order comes too late.

Mr. MORRISON. The point of order was stated last night. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] called attention to this as being a proviso changing the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be insisted upon. This is a very important provision, and should certainly be retained in the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. A bill has been already considered by and reported from the Committee on Ways and Means to make this change, and it has no place here.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill will not be passed, I venture to say; and this point of order, if sustained, will cost the Government next year $90,000.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, well, you venture to say many things which have no justification.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, we shall see, sir.

Mr. MORRISON. Of course we shall see, if we do see at all, and shall see that in this, as in everything involving the rules, you are off the track. I make the point of order, or rather I insist on the point already made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order is too late. The section had been discussed, and the point of order was not made before the discussion took place.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Independent Treasury:

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: For assistant treasurer, $4,000; cashier, $2,500; three clerks, at $1,800 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk, at $1,000; one messenger, $840; three vault watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $21,100.

Mr. COLLINS. I make the point of order on that provision of this section fixing the salary of the assistant treasurer at $4,000. This is a change of existing law. Section 3596 of the Revised Statutes provides that his salary shall be $4,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no point of order there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

Mr. COLLINS. I move to amend, then, by striking out "4,000" and inserting "4,500."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 19, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Is not the salary of this officer fixed by the statute at $4,500 a year?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then when he receives his $4,000 his salary will still be $500 in arrears?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; and I have conceded all along that unless this bill contains a provision that these salaries shall be received in full compensation trouble will arise.

Mr. MORRISON. Not if the law is complied with in providing for them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think such a provision will be inserted by unanimous consent before the bill gets through.

Mr. HEWITT. Not with my consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the gentleman would be willing to run the risks that will have to be run if the bill passes in the form they would have it to pass.

Mr. MORRISON. For one I will take all risks if the bill is passed in conformity with the rules.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would he not have the right of action against the Government for the $500 that is withheld?

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been discussed over and over again; but I admit that the Government will sustain very serious loss indeed unless the language used for the last ten years in reference to such appropriations be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is all I wanted to find out, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Indiana first ignores rules and then takes alarm.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of the assistant treasurer at Boston: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for chief clerk, $2,500; paying teller, $2,500; assistant paying teller, $2,200; vault clerk, $2,000; receiving teller, $2,000; first book-keeper, $1,800; second book-keeper, $1,400; specie clerk, $1,800; assistant specie clerk, $1,500; money clerk, $1,500; coupon clerk and redemption clerk, at $1,400 each; receipt clerk and general clerk, at $1,200 each; assistant redemption clerk, $1,100; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, $800; messenger and chief watchman, $1,060; two watchmen, at $850 each; in all, $35,560.

Mr. COLLINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1084, strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000;" so that it will read: "For assistant treasurer, "$5,000."

Mr. COLLINS. The present law under which this office was created and exists provides the salary of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston shall be $5,000; and I can not understand how, that officer having been paid that amount of salary up to the present time, any reason exists for reducing it by $500 now.

That officer has in the vaults of the treasury at Boston under his immediate responsibility from twenty to twenty-eight million dollars. There are eighteen clerks, for the default of every one of whom he is responsible. He is required to give a bond of a quarter million of dollars for the faithful discharge of his duty as assistant treasurer of the United States. And he receives to-day 2 per cent. of that amount as a salary.

I believe in economy, but I do not believe in meanness, and I do not believe the people of the United States are sitting up nights to do injustice to their public officers by cutting down their salaries. If the position of subtreasurer at Boston to-day were paid according to the salaries paid in other employments the salary would be $15,000 or $20,000. And I think it is beneath the dignity of the Committee on Appropriations and beneath the dignity of this House to undertake to pare off $500.

If the gentleman from Indiana will give me his attention for a moment I will say to him I do not believe he will find a Democrat in the city of Boston to-day willing to take that office for $4,500 or even $5,000 a year.

A MEMBER. Then they are different from Democrats elsewhere.

Mr. COLLINS. We have got different kinds of Democrats, with the same capacity but with a higher idea of the dignities and emoluments of office, from what there seem to be in the State of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will accept my amendment, so that we may have a good officer in that position in Boston.

Mr. HOLMAN. The elevation of views in Boston as to public duties and salaries may be somewhat different from what is approved by my section of the country. I am very sure a salary of $4,500 in any city of the country west of the mountains is considered a handsome compensation for any responsibility such as devolves upon a public officer of this grade.

Mr. COLLINS. There is not an office west of the mountains where they handle $176,000,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are other offices requiring equal responsibility and integrity where the compensation is not so high.

Mr. COLLINS. Can the gentleman tell me of any Indiana man competent to take this office who would take it for this salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. We find the amounts of business at the subtreasuries of Boston, Chicago, and Philadelphia to be about equal, the amounts handled being respectively $125,000,000, $104,000,000, $119,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Where is that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have just named Boston, Chicago, and Philadelphia.

Mr. COLLINS. As I have stated, $176,000,000 were handled at Boston last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the official statement before me, and I read from it these figures: $125,000,000, $104,000,000, $119,000,000. There is very little difference in the amount of the duties of those three positions and the salaries ought to be about the same. They are fixed at $4,500 and are deemed fully up to the average compensation for public employments.

I call for a vote.

Mr. LONG. I rise simply to say, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that I was not present at the meeting of the committee when this clause was under consideration. If I had been I would certainly have urged the retention of the salary at the point where the law fixes it. I see no reason why the salary should be reduced.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the gentleman maintain the superiority of the Boston Democrat over the Indiana variety?

Mr. LONG. I do not think you could get a competent Democrat to take the office and furnish the bond unless you leave the salary where the law fixes it. No reason appears for this legislation. The law fixes the amount. It has been appropriated year after year. Why cut it down unless there be some good reason for it? We pay our State treasurer, who has far less responsibility, $4,000 a year.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. COLLINS, there were—ayes 88, noes 24.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will have a vote on this in the House.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $1,800; book-keeper and receiving teller, at $1,500 each; two coin, coupon, and currency clerks, at $1,500 each; one assistant book-keeper and three clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $840; one janitor, at $600; and three watchmen, $720 each; in all, $23,200.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1103 strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000;" so that it will read: "For assistant treasurer, $5,000."

Mr. BURROWS. Is that the law now?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. It is the law. I call on all my friends on both sides of this House to stand by me now while I make an appeal in behalf of the Illinois variety of Democrat now holding the subtreasury at Chicago. [Laughter.] I feel bound to make this appeal for him, because I am for the time being his only representative on this floor. Everything that can be said about the office and salary of assistant treasurer at Boston can be said about the assistant treasurer at Chicago. I want to give him his salary as fixed by law. I want to save the Court of Claims from the duty of considering the claim which this assistant treasurer will have unless we appropriate the salary fixed by existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to mention two facts. The salary was fixed about thirteen years ago, when the cost of living was much cheaper than now—before the panic of 1877. In the next place, Chicago does a less business by twenty-one millions than Boston, and yet my friend wants the salary exactly the same. The present law appropriates $4,500. This is no decrease at all.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Allow me to remind the gentleman from Indiana that he can not accuse me of unjust discrimination, when this very bill that we are now considering makes an exact equality between those two assistant treasurers at Boston and Chicago. Let me remind him also that although this salary was fixed many years ago, the city of Chicago and the cities in its neighborhood which are tributary to it and dependent upon it for their financial convenience have been developing with greater rapidity than any Eastern city or neighborhood.

Mr. HOLMAN. And permit me to remind the gentleman from Illinois that the Treasurer of the United States informs us that this office might be abolished without any public injury.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And let me remind the gentleman from Indiana that notwithstanding that recommendation this House has determined, within a few weeks, to extend the system, by establishing a new subtreasury at the city of Louisville.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a vote.

The question was then taken; and there were—ayes 60, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall ask for a vote in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati: For assistant treasurer, $4,000; cashier, $2,000; book-keeper, $1,800; receiving teller, $1,500; check clerk and interest clerk, each $1,200; one clerk, at $1,200; fractional-silver and minor-coin clerk, $1,000; night-watchman, $720; messenger, $600; two watchmen, at $120 each; in all, $15,460.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to strike out "four," in line 1115, and insert "five." The statute fixes the salary of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati at $5,000, and in my judgment it ought not to be reduced. I have no personal interest in this, because the gentleman who occupies that office fights me with regularity (though not "commendable regularity") each year; but, to quote the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], if the gentleman who fills this office were in my private employ and had charge of matters as important as are now committed to his care and handled the sums of money that he handled there I should not think of paying him a less salary than $5,000 a year, and I trust that amount will be voted in this bill. In other words, I hope that the salary provided by law will be appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the attention of my friend to the fact that this salary also was fixed in 1872. Let me further call his attention to the fact that this is the smallest of the subtreasuries in the amount of its business by over $13,000,000. It has only a little over one-third the business of the Boston subtreasury; a little over one-fourth the business of the New York subtreasury; a little over one-third that of the Chicago subtreasury. Its whole transactions do not amount to $40,000,000 a year, yet the gentleman proposes that the salary of this assistant treasurer shall be the same as the salaries of officers where the business is two and a half or three times as large.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In reply I have to say to my honored friend that there is responsibility enough and labor enough in that office to justify the compensation I have proposed. My amendment makes the salary no more and no less than the amount now fixed by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can the gentleman tell us how many candidates there were for the office at the lower salary?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend proposes to fix salaries according to the willingness of men to serve. I submit to him that upon that principle this floor could be covered with Congressmen at $1.25 a day, and they would all do well at that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. No. I wanted to meet in some degree the argument made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] in regard to the treasurership of Boston. He said that no man could be found to take that office at a less salary than he proposed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Whether the salary of the assistant treasurer at Boston be raised or decreased is not a matter of any great interest to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this salary that you propose is for an office whose business is not more than one-fourth that of the office in New York, and not more than one-third that of the office in Boston. The increase certainly ought not to be made.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did not hear distinctly what my friend said, but I suppose it was "in the line of economy."

Mr. HOLMAN. You may depend on that.

The question was taken on the amendment, and there were—ayes 57, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall ask a vote on this in the House.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph in relation to the office of the assistant treasurer at New York.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, has the Clerk skipped the paragraph relating to the office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. That paragraph was passed last night without objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. This paragraph in relation to the office of the assistant treasurer at New York was read last night.

The CHAIRMAN. But it was objected to. The Chair understood the order for last evening's session to be that when a paragraph was reached and objected to it was to be passed over and not considered, and that was done in this instance.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if it was read it is not necessary to read it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it was passed over, and that it was to be taken up and considered in the usual way.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, was the paragraph in relation to the New Orleans office read and passed last night?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. BLANCHARD. So that it can not be read again now for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, it can not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the assistant treasurer at New York: For assistant treasurer, $8,000; cashier and chief clerk, $4,000; deputy assistant treasurer, $3,600; chief of coin division, $3,600; chief of note-paying division, $3,000; chief of note-receiving division, $2,800; chief of check-paying division, $2,800; chief of registered-interest division, $2,600; chief of coupon-interest division, $2,400; chief of minor-coin division, $2,400; chief of bond division, $2,250; chief of canceled-check division, $2,000; two clerks, at $2,250 each; six clerks, at $2,100 each; ten clerks, at $2,000 each; eleven clerks, at $1,800 each; four clerks at $1,700 each; seven clerks, at $1,600 each; four clerks, at $1,500 each; eleven clerks, at $1,400 each; five clerks, at $1,200 each; five messengers, at $1,300 each; one messenger, at $1,200; keeper of building, $1,800; chief detective, $1,800; one assistant detective, $1,400; three hallmen, at $1,000 each; six watchmen, at $720 each; one engineer, $1,000; one assistant engineer, $720; two porters, $900 each; in all, $165,290.

Mr. HEWITT. I move to strike out the entire paragraph just read and insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at New York: For assistant treasurer, $8,000; cashier and chief clerk, $5,000; deputy assistant treasurer, $3,600; assistant cashier and vault clerk, $3,300; two chiefs of division, at $3,200 each; one chief of division, at $3,000; one chief of division, at $2,700; one chief of division, at $2,400; two assistant chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; one assistant chief of division, at $2,250; chief paying teller, $3,000; assistant paying teller, $2,400; authorities clerk, $2,700; bond clerk, $2,500; correspondence clerk, $2,400; general bookkeeper, $2,200; five clerks, at $2,100 each; seven clerks, at $2,000 each; thirteen clerks, at $1,800 each; two clerks, at $1,700 each; eight clerks, at $1,600 each; seven clerks, at $1,500 each; nine clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,300 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; three messengers, at $1,300 each; three messengers, at $4,200 each; keeper of building, $1,800; chief detective, $1,800; assistant detective, $1,400; three hall men, at $1,000; eight watchmen, at $730 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $900; two porters, at $900 each; in all, $175,290.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment makes a large increase of salaries and creates some additional offices.

Mr. HEWITT. If my friend from Indiana, reserving his point of order, will kindly allow me to occupy a few moments with an explanation I doubt whether there will be any difference of opinion as to the propriety of this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the difference in the aggregate amount between this amendment and the paragraph in the bill?

Mr. HEWITT. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. This makes an increase of $10,000?

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have discussed this subject very fully——

Mr. HEWITT. Not in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I shall have to press the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT. I fully admit the gentleman's right to do so; but under the circumstances and in view of the importance of this office I scarcely think he wishes to deprive me of the opportunity of making a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that a point of order is made on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made and reserved.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, the subtreasury at New York is the greatest financial institution on this continent, and I think I can say, with a single exception, in the world. The money transactions of that office last year amounted to more than $1,200,000,000, being slightly in excess of $100,000,000 a month.

The responsibilities of the office of assistant treasurer at New York are probably greater than those of any other office held by any single individual in the world. I speak now of the money responsibility. When the term of the last incumbent expired the administration sought diligently to find some competent person to fill the place. The name of one gentleman was sent to the Senate and promptly confirmed, but he as promptly declined the office. The administration and its friends then made diligent efforts to find some citizen of New York suitable for the position who would accept the place. There was no controversy as to the salary. There is none as to the salary named in this amendment. The Committee on Appropriations has reported the legal salary of $8,000, and the amendment which I submit contemplates no advance in that respect.

During the interval between the expiration of the term of office of the previous incumbent and the nomination and confirmation of the present assistant treasurer at New York, the Treasurer of the United States was compelled to go to New York and take possession of the office. He found about $200,000,000 in cash, which had to be counted over to him, for which he gave his receipt, and for which he and his bondsmen were personally liable. He found a dangerous state of affairs prevailing in that office. There were not adequate checks and safeguards for the preservation of the enormous amount of money confided to the custody of the assistant treasurer.

The Treasurer of the United States is a very accomplished financial officer. He proceeded to reorganize the whole office. Not by virtue of any law in the statute-book, for I concede that the Committee on Appropriations have reported the amounts provided by statue in every case, but he proceeded to do it upon what might be termed the higher law of absolute necessity.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT. You will occupy my time and I will be cut off from the statement I desire to submit to the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection to extend the gentleman's time.

Mr. HEWITT. Very well, then; on that condition I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from New York said the Treasurer of the United States found a dangerous system in operation.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes; and I will specify the particulars.

Mr. BAYNE. I should like to know what dangerous system the Treasurer found in operation there.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this colloquy is protracted I must object.

Mr. BAYNE. No money had been lost to the Government?

Mr. HEWITT. No; no money had been lost by the late incumbent, but by two at least before him there had been money lost.

Mr. BEACH. And we were compelled to refund it?

Mr. HEWITT. Yes; and we were compelled to refund the money.

Mr. BAYNE. Who was it?

Mr. HEWITT. Under the administration of Mr. Hillhouse.

Mr. RANDALL. And there was also a case in New Orleans.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes; and one in San Francisco recently, when some $10,000 disappeared between night and morning. There is no question of politics about this; it is purely a question of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was understood the time of the gentleman from New York would be extended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must press the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish——

Mr. HEWITT. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana not to press the point of order at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. HEWITT. That I may go on and make my statement. I appeal to the gentleman's liberality. When a member of the House who does not trespass upon its attention except when there is real business to be done is making a statement for the information of the House he might at least be generous.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will go on without interruption.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from New York who makes this amendment that the real increase he asks in his amendment is only $6,000 over what it is now.

Mr. HEWITT. Over the law of last year $6,000, but over the amount proposed by the committee $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the gentleman's going on if he will make his statement without interruption.

Mr. RANDALL. Go on.

Mr. HEWITT. I think I am making a statement which the House ought to have made to it, and I wish to specify for the benefit of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that the Treasurer of the United States found there was no vault clerk, that the man in charge of the vault was also the man who received and paid out money on other accounts; in other words, was in charge of the coin division, and that there was no practical check upon this officer who had the custody of millions of dollars. He is an honest man, thank Heaven, and the money was safe in his possession. But it is not right that we should sit here and leave public officers responsible on their bond, as the assistant treasurer of New York is in the sum of $400,000, liable to such unreasonable risks. It is not just.

And now the Treasurer having made the reorganization, and having turned over the office to the present incumbent, whom I have known from boyhood, an accomplished bank officer, trained in a bank originally, who thoroughly mastered his business, that officer has proceeded to carry out so far as he can the views of the Treasurer, and has made such further changes as he thinks absolutely necessary for the safety of the public funds. And he submitted to the Treasurer, and the Treasurer submitted it to the committee, a scheme of redistribution of the duties which involved the expenditure of $6,000 more than was expended the year before and $10,000 more than the committee recommend in this bill.

The committee have not seen fit to recommend either the plan suggested by the Treasurer or the recommendation of the assistant treasurer at New York; but they have brought in a bill providing for the old organization, on which they expect to save $6,000 on the amount expended last year. But the idea that they can save a dollar is perfectly illusory; for the contingencies of this great office are such, and have been such, that in 1862 Congress passed a statute, which is now section 3604 of the Revised Statutes, which gave the assistant treasurer at New York the right to employ clerks and watchmen and assign them to service as the exigencies of the case might require; and although there is no appropriation made for it in this bill, the legal right remains, and the duty rests upon him to employ such assistance as he may need, although it does not give him the power of redistributing the duties of the employés. He could simply provide for whatever duties had to be performed.

Now, in the scheme of redistribution which has been presented some salaries are reduced and some are raised, but in the sum total there is but this difference of $6,000 more than the amount appropriated in the bill of last year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is not this proposition recommended by the present incumbent of the treasurer's office at New York?

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, sir; by the assistant treasurer, the present incumbent, who came before the committee here and made his statement to them, and made it also to me, that he did not feel that he was safe for an hour under the old organization.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Is this a redistribution of the salaries also?

Mr. HEWITT. It is a redistribution of the duties, as I have said; some salaries are reduced, some increased, but the aggregate amount is changed but little.

Now, I concede, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana chooses to insist upon the point of order upon the amendment it will be sustained, because to a certain extent it alters existing law. But it alters it only in a line to which the House and the country should consent that it should be altered; that is, in the interest of the public service.

It is a change of law by which the public service will be benefited. But if the gentleman from Indiana chooses to press the point of order in order to save the sum of $6,000 in the aggregate of the bill, then I will offer an amendment which will be in order under the rules, accomplishing to some extent the objects which have been explained to the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, a word only on the question presented outside of the point of order, and but a word. No person questions the capacity or high standing of Mr. Canda, the present subtreasurer of New York; no person questions his business capacity; but what is surprising is that exactly with the same force employed for several years, and with the same responsibilities incumbent upon him, with the same men precisely, a reorganization is effected that does not produce anything but one result, and that is the increase of salary. Otherwise there is no objection to the reorganization; but the result is always the same.

What I object to is that in every reorganization of an office the men appointed somehow or other get their salaries increased. Now, I admit as to one officer not hitherto known to the law, namely, the vault clerk, with a salary of $3,300, a new office entirely, and that place is now filled by a competent person with a lower salary, that possibly the change might be permissible; but the reorganization is not simply a change of positions and new names for duties, but a growing up of salaries. And except as to that one point——

Mr. HEWITT. There are some reductions and some increases, according to the nature of the office.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now as to the cashier and chief clerk: When Mr. Cisco was subtreasurer, involving the whole period of the war, that office was never higher than $4,200. Nobody ever suggested that it should be higher. It is now proposed to add $800, making it a five-thousand-dollar appointment. I am inclined to think, in view of the urgency with which Mr. Canda presents the statement, that lest by any possibility a mistake should occur in that great subtreasury, the one office, an assistant cashier and vault clerk, if it can be done by unanimous consent, even with this salary of $3,300—a very high salary for that position except as to the element of integrity required, with which I admit the salary has nothing to do—if that is deemed satisfactory on account of the particular duties devolving upon the officer so detailed, it perhaps ought to be done. I should feel a little safer if it was done from what Mr. Canda has said. As to the balance of the increase suggested, it is simply the result of the everlasting pressure, never ceasing, coming up here year after year, as far as increasing the numbers and increasing the salaries are concerned.

Mr. HEWITT. Will you be kind enough to explain why you reduced the appropriation below the amount allowed last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. It occurred in this way: that the committee accepted certain admitted excesses and did not increase the salaries. That is all.

Mr. HEWITT. In other words, when he recommended reductions you took him at his word; but if he recommended an increase you refused to take his word.

Mr. HOLMAN. When he recommended a reduction of force we took him at his word, because, mark you, that was a matter of force merely; when he recommended an increase of salary that was a different thing. I therefore submit to my friend this proposition: let this vault clerk be placed at a salary of $3,300 in addition to the other appropriations, leaving them to stand.

Mr. HEWITT. That would be of great advantage to the public interest and ought to be done, but the other matters are also important. I have no personal interest in this. I do not know a man in that office except Mr. Canda himself. It is a question of preserving the public property and doing the public business.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Indiana does not object to the increase of the force which may be necessary, but to the increase of the salaries involved. Can not the gentleman so modify his amendment that we may come to a harmonious relation in that particular?

Mr. HEWITT. If the gentleman from Indiana will agree that by unanimous consent we pass this clause till I take the amendment and compare the rates, I think an understanding may be arrived at.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me say one word further as a justification of the course adopted by the committee. We have gone beyond the estimates, which were $163,490.

Mr. HEWITT. There is a revised estimate. The gentleman should state all the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has been recognized.

Mr. HISCOCK. If this amendment had been proposed by any other gentleman than my distinguished colleague, if it had been proposed by me, I would have subjected myself, provided my party were in the majority and the other party in the minority, to the criticism that I offered it for purely partisan purposes. And I confess to great surprise that the gentleman from Tennessee should have been so prompt to interpose his point of order after the stout resistance he has made to the effort to paralyze the Civil Service Commission. When the gentleman has formulated an amendment and presented it here to the House which reduces one class of clerks and increases another, for the purpose of creating vacancies, I say I am surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee should have raised this point of order, when the effect of the amendment is simply to reorganize this office, giving new names to the officers, with practically the same duties to perform. That it all there is of it.

The gentleman from Indiana himself has correctly described it, and I congratulate him on the correct description he gave. It is simply for the purpose of turning out the Republicans that are in office there, reorganizing the service, renaming the men, and the names are so alike that you can scarcely distinguish them, with precisely the same duties to perform. And my colleague comes in here and says, after he has advertised the vast responsibilities of that office, that this is all necessary for the preservation of the funds of the Government.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is new legislation; and I am addressing myself to the point of order that it is new legislation. I should think that a Representative from the city of New York, so strongly Democratic as it is, might be willing that his party should take the responsibility there of turning these Republicans out, and not come here and introduce a bill in the nature of a relief bill for the office-seekers of his party in that city. That is just what this amendment is. You may take this bill up and read it through line by line, and the ear will scarcely distinguish between the titles of the offices in the gentleman's amendment and in this bill. One new office is created. I regret it. If this amendment had been offered for the purpose of preserving the funds of the Government in that treasury office in the city of New York, the amendment should have been to incorporate into this bill that one office, and that one office alone.

I say for myself that I have no great objection or no objection to the party in power removing these men from their places; but the Executive must take the responsibility of it; and the legislative branch of the Government, so long as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] stands firm, shall not. He shall have in that the support of this side of the House. The votes we have given him guarantee that.

Mr. HEWITT. Allow me just there to say there is no proposition to remove a human being from office. The effect of this amendment will not be to remove anybody.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have heard that song sung many and many a time, and I will say to my colleague from New York that there is no new thing in the politics of New York——

Mr. HEWITT. That you do not know.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes; I do know. It is a common practice to give new names to officers with the same duties to discharge. That is an old trick that is perpetrated time and time again in the State of New York and in the politics of New York. And this is an attempt to do the same thing, to repeat those tactics or to initiate that policy here in Congress.

Mr. HEWITT. I want to oblige my colleague, to meet him half way, and I will make this proposition: Let the titles of the offices stand as they are, with such additional offices as are provided. Let the officers remain that are in—and they are all Republicans.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be met half way. I can not be met half way on this question.

Mr. HEWITT. Where do you want to be met?

Mr. HISCOCK. What I say is this: If this House is satisfied that a new office should be created, create it; I have no objection. I have no compromise to make upon this question; none whatever. But just so long as there is an attempt upon the other side of the House to relieve the Executive and to grasp power by turning out the present incumbents of the offices, or, if you please, to usurp the powers of the Executive, I shall stand here to oppose it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have not much personal knowledge as to the merits of this New York treasury question, but I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is nearly correct when he says there is a very general disposition upon our part to get all the Republicans out of office if we can do it fairly. I sympathize with that purpose, and sometimes, it may be, a point has been strained to that end. [Laughter.] But I think that is not the fact in this case. I happen to know something of a gentleman named Muhlemann, once, if not now, a constituent of mine, and who has been long in the Treasury Department as one of the Republican officials.

He comes to my district as often as he thinks I ought to be beaten. He tells the people I ought to be away from here (there are a great many others who share in that opinion). [Laughter.] He makes speeches, very good ones, too, for my opponent. I supposed last November but one, after what happened then, he would go out—drop out.

Not long ago I took occasion to inquire what had become of this "offensive partisan," and was told they found him very useful in the Department, and had sent him to New York, to Mr. Canda, who had promoted him. [Laughter.] He is there now, and is one of the persons this amendment will take care of. In a few weeks he may be out in my district again making more speeches.

I make this statement to relieve the apprehensions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who sees in this proposition of his colleague [Mr. HEWITT] a scheme to oust some Republican now in the New York subtreasury. I had once some business associations through which I came to know something of Mr. Canda, the New York subtreasurer. He is all business and not enough politician. I am very sure his recommendations are those of a prudent and safe business man, and are in no sense prompted by any party purposes except in so far as he may serve his party by faithful and efficient public service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Reading this amendment side by side with the provision reported in the bill, I ask you if you did not know the non-partisan character of the chief of that division, if you were not possessed of his history, of which until now the committee has not had knowledge, would you have any doubt in your own mind, except for the high character of the father of the amendment, that the purpose of it was to reorganize that office so as to get Republicans out and put Democrats in?

Mr. MORRISON. Coming from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], I do not think it has any such purpose. If it came from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I would not know exactly what to think. [Great laughter.]

The point of order was sustained.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOLMAN. You had better ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HEWITT. There is a statute which I think warrants me in doing what I am doing, but I will ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashier and vault clerk, $3,300; and one subordinate counter, $1,400.

Mr. HEWITT. I take the lowest sum named. This does not increase the amount of the appropriation of last year, and it gives the two places that are absolutely indispensable to do the business.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York when this force became indispensable?

Mr. HEWITT. It has been always indispensable.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then, when did the gentleman discover that it was indispensable?

Mr. HEWITT. Twenty years ago, when Mr. Hillhouse lost a large sum of money in consequence of not having proper protection for it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then I am sorry that these twenty years have elapsed without the gentleman making this provision.

Mr. HEWITT. That was simply because the last subtreasurer did not make the recommendation. Or rather, if I recollect aright, he did make the recommendation when my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was not followed.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman's colleague was chairman of that committee in only one Congress. There have been several other Congresses during those twenty years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I claim the floor. I will not object to the insertion of a provision for an assistant cashier and vault clerk at $3,000. I speak for myself, not for the committee. I shall not object to this amendment. Other gentlemen may; but I hope there will be unanimous consent.

Mr. HEWITT. I appeal to my friend from Indiana to give us this counter. Another counter is absolutely necessary for counting the money that comes in. This is only $1,400 more; and I think my friend from Indiana, having consented to the $3,300, might also consent to the $1,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are a number of employés in that office now some one of whom might be employed in this way.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether it is not practicable that the money which the merchants of New York now pay in as customs duties should be paid directly into the subtreasurer's office, instead of being paid in the first instance to the collector?

Mr. HEWITT. Undoubtedly it could be done, but it would increase the work of the subtreasurer's office——

Mr. RANDALL. I know it would.

Mr. HEWITT. Because now that money goes from the custom-house to the subtreasury in a gross sum, whereas under the arrangement suggested by the gentleman it would be paid in various individual amounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has objected to the proposition of the gentleman from New York, and submitted an amendment which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1137, after the word "dollars," insert "assistant cashier and vault clerk, $3,000."

Mr. HEWITT. I move to amend that——

Mr. HOLMAN. This proposition is not regularly before the House as an amendment.

Mr. HEWITT. Very well; I must object, because the salary——

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. HEWITT. The gentleman must take the responsibility.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there is a little hot-headedness on both sides. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that, as the gentleman from Indiana is willing to admit the amendment for assistant cashier and vault clerk, he should let that come in.

Mr. HEWITT. But the gentleman from Indiana does not propose a sufficient salary for the place. I submit a further amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, although I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York is mistaken, and that increase of salary secures no higher official integrity——

Mr. HEWITT. This officer is Mr. Muhleman, whom we all know; he went from here.

Mr. HOLMAN. From our history it would seem that the reverse is generally true; yet I am willing to waive that point——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "each," in line 1165, insert the following:
"For other clerks, messengers, and watchmen, in addition to those herein provided for, as the exigencies of the public business may require, $10,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law, so far as I am aware, authorizing that further appropriation.

Mr. HEWITT. The gentleman for once in his life is misinformed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman point out the law?

Mr. HEWITT. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read section 3604 of the Revised Statutes:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3604. The assistant treasurer at New York may appoint, from time to time, by and with the consent and approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, such other clerks, messengers, and watchmen, in addition to those already employed by him, as the exigencies of the public business may require, at rates of compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but such rates shall in no case exceed those allowed by law for the several persons similarly employed in the office of the said assistant treasurer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the provision just read necessarily makes this amendment in order.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT. I have followed the language of the statute. I would like the gentleman from Indiana to point out why the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, one word upon this point of order. It seems to me impossible that when a bill of this kind is before us we have not the right to amend it by increasing a sum of money proposed to be given to a certain service and to increase the number of employés. If the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana against this amendment is good, a point of order would lie against every increase of clerks in the various Departments as proposed in this bill.

Mr. HEWITT. There is a statute distinctly authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that; but I go further, and say that if there were no such statute we would have power to vote upon an amendment of this kind under our general authority to provide money for the support of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I know there is a great deal of latitude about all these matters——

Mr. HISCOCK. I say to the gentleman from Indiana it has always been held that we can increase by way of amendment the amount proposed to be appropriated for a contingent fund or a fund for any particular purpose—for lights, for fuel, &c. All appropriations of this kind can be increased without liability to a point of order.

I will add, as bearing on this question, that it is evidently fair and proper the Democracy of the city of New York should have some little show in the assistant treasurer's office.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr.

HEWITT] is not acting with his usual fairness in now proposing an appropriation $4,000 larger than was asked for. If the point of order is overruled, I move to amend the amendment by reducing the appropriation to $6,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT. I submit to the gentleman from Indiana that I have acted with my "usual fairness" in proposing by this amendment to appropriate $10,000. That is the exact amount of the supplemental and revised estimate sent to the committee over and above the amount reported in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Canda told us over and over again that he could get along with $6,000.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, $6,000 more than you appropriated last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, $6,000 more than the appropriation for the present year.

Mr. HEWITT. Now the gentleman from Indiana is not acting with his "usual fairness."

The appropriation last year was $6,000 more than the appropriations proposed for this year. The revised estimates sent in by Mr. Canda are $10,000 more than the appropriation in this bill. I hold the estimate in my hand, and I have stated the fact exactly as it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HEWITT. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague on the other side of the House has chosen, for some reason or other unknown to me, to play a disingenuous part in this business. Nothing could have been further from my mind than to bring any question of patronage or politics into this matter. It concerns the Government of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why, I expressly stated if anybody in the world but my colleague had done this I would have suspected it.

Mr. HEWITT. I thank the gentleman for having so much confidence in my word. But, as a matter of fact, it is all wrong to give currency to the idea that the object of this or any other measure in connection with the subtreasury at the city of New York is to secure places for Republicans or Democrats. That office is run to-day by Republicans who are capable and honest men, and there has not been offered a proposition from any quarter, and I will say there will be no proposition offered from any quarter, to remove a single man in that office except on the ground of incompetency.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will have a vote. I ask for a vote on my amendment to reduce it to $6,000.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to ask the Chair whether it is competent to return to a paragraph which has been passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, if objection is made.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask the indulgence of the committee for the purpose of asking my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] a question. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; go on.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have had my attention called to the fact that it was understood that the chairman of the subcommittee would move to increase the compensation of the charwomen in the Treasury Department from $15 to $20. By a mistake that has not been permitted to be done, and I wish to call the attention of my friend from Indiana to that fact.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that can be agreed to we can go back to it hereafter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us do it now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It ought to be done, and might as well be done now as at any other time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects to going back, which is an objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was an agreement, according to my understanding, that that should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows nothing of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not informed of anything about it. I have not heard about it. I am only asking now to go on with the bill, and we can return to this hereafter if necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We are increasing everybody's salary, and it seems to me only fair that we should increase the salaries of these poor charwomen.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It has been provided in reference to all the other Departments, and it should be increased from $15 to $20 in the Treasury Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We have increased everybody's salary, and I think this should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana insists upon his objection to going back.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have done it, and I trust my friend will let me have something to do with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and the committee can not return to the paragraph indicated.

The Clerk will read the next paragraph, which was passed over last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis: For assistant treasurer, $4,000; chief clerk and teller, $2,500; assistant teller, $1,800; book-keeper, $1,500; assistant book-keeper and one clerk, at $1,200 each; messenger, $1,000; three watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $15,360.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$4,500." I will state, Mr. Chairman, that this officer is entitled by statute to $5,000, and has been receiving this compensation for a great many years. There has been no change made in the incumbent of the office at Saint Louis. He is a Republican. He is a competent man. I do not think his compensation should be reduced below $4,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Saint Louis office is one of the small subtreasuries of the country. It is less than $58,000,000 all told of current transactions against $104,000,000 in Chicago, $115,000,000 in Boston, and $1,227,000,000 in the city of New York. The salary has been considered ample for many years. Beside that, we are told the office at Saint Louis might be safely abolished so far as the public interest is concerned.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will also add, Mr. Chairman, that by the transfer of the pension agency there has been a vast increase in the duties of this office.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 33, noes 49.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted, and demand tellers. Every change has been made except in this one, and it is not fair to cut this officer down in this manner.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will consent that a vote may be taken in the House upon it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, let it be considered as adopted now and go to the House in that shape.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 54.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri (one of the tellers). No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

The count being continued, the tellers announced—ayes 60, noes 58.

Mr. RANDALL. No quorum. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have a quorum. I believe I will insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will continue the count. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As it is perfectly clear that no quorum is present, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of moving an adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. The count can not be interrupted for that purpose.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman who demanded the quorum would consent to a motion that the committee now rise could it not be done?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not; the count has been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but the tellers have reported that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no announcement since the count was ordered. The Chair is willing to announce it as soon as the tellers report.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum present.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the point of order to give an opportunity for the committee to rise.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The point of order is withdrawn, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will report.

The tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 67.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I renew the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. RANDALL. Will not the gentleman waive the point of order for the purpose of allowing the committee to rise to fix an evening session for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BRADY. That has been already ordered for pension business.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I withdraw the point of order for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must withdraw the point of order absolutely or not at all.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Then I do not withdraw it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Mississippi will withdraw it for the purpose of asking consent of the committee to hold a session to-night from 8 until 10 o'clock for the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That request is not in order. The Clerk will read clause 2 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope consent will be given to waive the calling of the roll, so that the committee may rise now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not avoid it under the rule just read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew the request that there be a meeting of the House to-night for the further consideration of this bill from 8 until 10 o'clock; and I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. BRADY. I object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there will be no objection if Monday night is assigned to the consideration of pensions.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
